Sure. There's nothing like mustard for hot dogs.

100% Tie-Up Is Scored by Union In Big Contest

Courts Recognize Right to Quit Work But Declare Unionists Must Stay Off Company Property and Mustn't "Intimidate."

(By Staff Correspondent)

Danville, Va., Oct. 9.—More than 4,000 striking members of union No. 1658, United Textile Workers, out since September 29, are holding their lines without a break, in the face of two injunctions.

The strike was but in its second day when the lawyers for the Riverside and Dan River Cotton Mills wrote out two injunction orders, one covering the city, the other the county, and got them signed in chambers by two very estimable judges, Turner Clement and Henry C. Leigh.

Grant Right to Strike.

These two injunctions, identical in wording, graciously admit that workers have a right to cease work and even to picket and to use peaceful persuasion to the end that others may be informed of the situation.

The injunctions, however, declare that strikers must not gather on company property and must not congregate in such numbers as to constitute "intimidation" or "coercion" of non-union workers who may care to go into the mills to take the places of men who have struck against intolerable working conditions and wages and who seek to establish decent contractural relations with the mill owners on a basis of fair wages and recognition of the right of the workers to act collectively through a union.

Injunction Uncalled For.

Union officials declare the injunctions will have no effect on the thoroughness of the tie-up. If all those who wanted to go to work were transported into the mills there would not be a corporal's guard, they say, pointing out the fact that the strike vote was carried by a 95 per cent majority.

Strike machinery is functioning smoothly. Pickets have been put on four-hour shifts and the union rationing organization is being enlarged and perfected.

Vice-President Francis J. Gorman, of the U. T. W., arrived in Danville the day after the strike began. At the same time, C. S. Garrison, publicity representative of the American Federation of Labor southern organizing committee, arrived.

ORGANIZED INDUSTRY SHOWS SHORTEST HOURS

Austin, Tex.—The highly organized printing and publishing industries in this state have the shortest hours for both men and women, according to the biennial report of the Texas labor department. These industries also pay the highest yearly wage.

The general average of weekly hours in other industries is 58 for men and 51 for women. Male workers in hotels and restaurants average 70 hours per week, while beauty parlors show the longest hours for women.

Women workers are increasing. A strong recommendation for a minimum wage law for women and minors is made.

YEAR PAST MOST SUCCESSFUL IN LABEL DEPARTMENT'S HISTORY

Interest Aroused by April Drive Proves Permanent, Secretary-Treasurer Manning Reports at Annual Convention—Publicity by International Labor News Service Praised.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 2.—Bearing in mind that the object of the union label trades department of the American Federation of Labor is to keep the union label before trade unionists and the general public, it can be safely said that the past year has been the most successful in the department's history, John J. Manning, secretary-treasurer, reported at the annual convention of the department here.

"During the nation-wide campaign in April," Mr. Manning said in his report, "the activity displayed was very encouraging, as it was practically country-wide, and many of the committees formed at that time for label advertising has been continued. This indicates that the interest aroused at that time was permanent rather than temporary, something that we have been striving for for many years.

Publiciay given the April campaign by International Labor News Service was praised by Mr. Manning, who said:

"Through the courtesy of International Labor News Service, the labor press was furnished information as to the progress and accomplishments of the campaign each week. This in itself resulted in considerable more publicity than we had ever enjoyed before."

"The greater number of meetings held and the large attendance reported auger well for the future," Mr. Manning continued. "Radio was one important factor for disseminating information regarding union labels, shop cards and working buttons during the past year. Station WCFL was used extensively by our Chicago league and the label council of Greater New York was on the air one-half hour each week over station WMCA. Salt Lake Citv, through the central body, broadcast several label addresses. Pittsburgh labor council is about ready to use the radio for the coming year and New York is now endeavoring to raise funds sufficient to be on the air one hour each week.

Successful Exhibits Held.

"Successful union label exhibits were held in many cities, and the indications now are that they will be repeated during the coming year.

"Prize contests have also been conducted which aroused deep interest among the members of trade unions.

"All these activities have a decidedly educational value and lend encouragement to trade unionists in localities where carried on.

"Educational work is naturally slow and we must not become impatient because progress is not as rapid as the efforts put forth seem to warrant. We must always keep in mind the human element involved. This, of course, is no justification for the careless or unthinking trade unionist, but if we hope to eventually secure a maximum demand for union labeled goods and union service, we must continue our work with patience and perseverence that knows no defeat and is confident of ultimate success."

Big Literature Distribution.

The report showed that during the year 44,175 directories of union manufacturers, 18,500 label stickers and more than half a million leaflets were issued. Nine union label leagues were organized. The average membership of affiliated organizations was 586,625.

Subjects discussed in the report included the union label in Canada, convict labor, child labor and union labeled goods and service.

In concluding his report, Mr. Manning said:

"At no time in the history of the department has the request for activity in our field of work been so general and so genorously responded to as during the year just closed. In view of the unsettled business conditions and the vast army of unemployed, this is indeed a gratifying result of our activities."

Gamblers Are Blamed For Low Wheat Prices

Washington.—Chicago wheat gamblers, and not Soviet Russia, are blamed for depressed wheat prices by Senator Capper.

Secretary of Agriculture Hyde discovered that the reds sold 7,500,000 bushels short and declared this was a major factor in the price drop.

"The selling of even 15,000,000 bushels of wheat by Russia is only a drop in the bucket compared to the short selling by bear interests on the Chicago market," said Senator Capper.

These gamblers, according to official records, he said, sold nearly 300,000,000 bushels short in three days, causing a sharp drop in prices.

"I hope Secretary Hyde will investigate short selling by other interests on the Chicago board of trade. He has the power to do this under the Capper-Tincher grain futures act," said the senator.

Wheat gamblers in this country have done a hundredfold as much to depress the market as has the Russian government, he said.

World Wide Idleness During Entire Year

Boston, Oct. 8.—The present depression is world wide, says the A. F. of L. executive council in its annual report. The unionists declare that the "closeness of interest between the nations of the world" was never more clearly demonstrated.

"We have suffered because of the depression abroad, and conditions in foreign countries have been intensified by the depression here.

"European countries were very seriously affected by the stock exchange crash last fall. They had large investments in this country and the Wall street crash was followed by similar disorders abroad. Business depression spread and very few countries were able to hold out against the general downward trend.

"With business depression has come world-wide unemployment. Suffering in the United States and Canada has been severe, but in foreign countries millions more have been out of work. Unemployment and business depression have cut down the market for our goods. Wage earners out of work could not buy our products and merchants cut down their orders. Exports this year have been 23 per cent below last year."

Injunction Evil Must Be Removed

Boston, Oct. 8.—The injunction is classed as "a major obstacle" to the workers' progress by the A. F. of L. executive council in its annual report.

"We do not dispute the jurisdiction of equity against irreparable losses when there is no remedy at law," declared the council. "We object to abuse of procedure and misapplications of injunctions because of the courts' misunderstanding of the rights of wage earners and their exercise under present economic organization and environment."

The anti-injunction proposal pending in the senate judiciary committee, and which is popularly known as the Norris bill, is favored by the council. Every candidate for congress has been asked to specifically state his position on this bill. The query was submitted through state federations of labor. It is the first time in A. F. of L. history that such action was taken. When the council's report was written it was too early to determine the result.

"Candidates for congress who decline to support the measure should be defeated," the council declares. "The issue is now before the wage earners."

Charity Is Harmful; To Labor Is Normal

Boston, Oct. 8.—More than $24,000,000 was expended in charity relief in 79 cities during the first six months of the present year, according to the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City. Unemployment was the cause of a very large portion of this relief. More than 160,000 families, on an average, applied for help each month. Even in the most prosperous three months of 1929 charity organizations expended more than $1,000,000 a month.

"These figures, impressive as they are, can not show the full extent of the human and economic waste resulting from unemployment," says the A. F. of L. executive council in its annual report.

"To give a man charity when he wants work is to teach him dependence and takes from him the satisfaction of earning his living by constructive activity. It is equally unsound, economically, to give men charity while they are idle, instead of letting them create wealth by their labor. Unemployment is an indictment of our economic control.

A. F. OF L. DEPARTMENTS RE-ELECT OFFICERS AT BOSTON CONVENTIONS

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 9.—All department conventions re-elected their officers and concluded spirited, constructive conventions, clearing their decks prior to the opening of the main event—the American Federation of Labor convention.

George W. Perkins is again president and John J. Manning again secretary of the Union Label Trades Department. This department, after having recorded a year of unusual achievements, laid plans to go after new laurels during the coming year.

The Building Trades Department re-elected M. J. McDonough president and William J. Spencer secretary-treasurer.

The Metal Trades re-elected James O'Connell president and John P. Frey secretary-treasurer.

The Building Trades Department ratified the plan for a national board of trade claims for the handling of jurisdictional awards, but a goodly sized fly remains in the ointment. President H. H. Broach, of the Electrical Workers, announced that he does not approve of the present draft of the plan and his organization is counted out, at least for the time being. Neither the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers nor the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners are in the department. Thus the three largest internationals are not in the new set-up.

The Building Trades convention rang with condemnation of the national administration in Washington because of its method of awarding contracts and with charges that there is lack of sincerity in the program to rush construction to relieve unemployment.

The proposal that industry adopt a five-hour day for men and a ten-hour day for plant and machinery, submitted to the Metal Trades Department convention by its officers was approved and ordered laid before the American Federation of Labor convention.

Pre-convention sessions also were held by the board of governors of the Allied Printing Trades and by the executive board of the Photo Engravers' union.

SILVER ANNIVERSARY

25 Years of Service

25 Years of Progress

TWENTY-FIVE years ago, October 10, 1905, the Hamilton National Bank, after being duly organized, opened its doors for business.

The building of such a large financial structure, as this institution today represents, was not the task of a day nor the labor of a few, but it is the result of the long hours of many days of many months of many years spent in an honest endeavor to aid progress.

At first it was a struggle to become known and recognized, and then down through the years the task of commanding the confidence of the public—the one absolute essential in the successful operation of any financial institution. A complete co-operation on the part of each stockholder, director, officer and employe, working in thorough accord with one ideal, and that ideal was and is to provide for Chattanooga and Chattanoogans an efficient and modern banking system, backed by resources sufficient to meet the most exacting needs of a growing city.

WITH a revelation of the facts concerning the policies of this bank it is easy to understand why there is such a spirit of cordiality and co-operation existing among the departments of this large institution and its patrons.

It is this spirit, together with sound and conservative banking principles, that has brought to this bank each year a steady growth that has caused to be recorded on its books in many instances the accounts of father, son and grandson; that has brought to it a nationwide patronage and recognition as one of the outstanding banks of the south.

On the occasion of this, the twenty-fifth, anniversary of the Hamilton National Bank, the directors, officers and employes wish to thank the thousands of patrons and friends whose loyalty as made this memorable occasion possible and to rededicate their efforts to a continuation of the same cordial relations throughout another twenty-five years.

Outstanding Facts Concerning the Policies Governing the Operation of This Particular Institution:

Its depositors' money has at all times been safe.
Every man serving in official capacity began as a clerk and worked himself up to his present position.
An aggregate of more than 500 years of banking experience is represented by its officials.
It was the first bank in this city to enter the field of branch-banking, and it now serves its patrons through five offices strategically located in the leading business districts, housed in buildings owned outright by this bank.
The officers and employes are permitted to share in the profits of the institution.
At no time in its history have salary reductions been put into effect.

We invite our patrons and friends, and especially those of 25 years' standing, to visit our head office at Market and Seventh Streets, and see our lobby display of Hamilton National records and banking facilities of that day.

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

Well, the representatives of the postoffice department are in town to select a site for our new postoffice.

Clay Gothard, of North Chattanooga station, and Earl Catlin, of Highland Park station, are on vacation, as well as John Whitman, of main office.

J. M. Langston, of East Chattanooga station, and J. H. Tittle are off sick.

"Who is Lefty Grove?" asks Clarence Oakes. After the world series had been going for a couple of days, Oakes asked Lichtenstetter, "Who is playing?"

Massey and his troupe of barnyard fowls caused quite a stir during the game. People at the Hotel Patten opened their eyes and thought they were in the country.

Brooks went out to Oehlson's house the other night and thought he would get a good supper, but Henry fed him on white beans.

When Mrs. Oehlson wants to go to visit Mrs. Brooks, Henry drives her over before he goes to work. The other morning Brooks says he was afraid he would not get his breakfast, so got there by 5 o'clock and woke Brooks up. He sure wanted his breakfast.

L. L. Miller is liking his route. A good-looking girl asked him to take a letter and put a special delivery stamp on it for her as she did not have any change and would pay him the next day. It being a pretty girl, he did.

It's "Professor" George Forbes now. I don't know if he has any D. D. Phd. or Do. Do. after his name or note.

WITH THE ELECTRICAL WORKERS

By E. E. CROSBY

The following resolutions were adopted by Local 175 at our last meeting:

It is with deep regret that members of local union No. 175 learns of the death of Brother L. L. Lowe's infant daughter.

It is our sincere desire to pay tribute to her memory and sympathize with the members of the family.

Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the home of the Brother, and a copy be spread on our minutes and sent to The Labor World for publication.

NOTES FROM THE NEWS CHAPEL

By CLAY TIMMONS

Milt says Joe Bush brought about two inches of 12-point type back to Milt's ad machine and said: "Milt, for some reason or other you set this piece of copy twice, and I've tried for an hour to get it in the ad, but she won't go."

Walter Gardner made Henry Arnold, of the pressroom staff, "back up" on the last world series game. Henry was a-raring to bet $25 to $20 on the A's. He jumped on all the married men who never have had and never will have that much dough for a bet. Walter heard his vociferous yelping and planked down a couple of tenners and told Henry to put up or shut up. And the last seen of Henry was a cloud of dust descending the stairs.

The auditing committee has put its O. K. on the books of the Credit Union bank, which has just about curled up its toes and passed out. Everybody wants to put in $5 and take out $100. And limited capital can't stand that, you know. President Poyer expects to call a meeting of the stockholders soon and see what they want done with it.

Another Timmons boy was added to the ranks of card holders in No. 89 at the lengthy meeting last Sunday.

He is Julian (Goober). That makes four of us now, equaling the record of the Times Gardners. However, we all have a long way to go to equal the long record of honorable service of I. J. Gardner, Sr. He's a square shooting foreman, or was to me, and I have always held a deep respect for his methods of getting results out of the men under him. Truly so.

To Andy Linn: Old-timer, everyone in the union is rooting for a comeback on your part. We know you are getting along in years, but stay in there and fight 'em, old boy, and we'll soon be seeing you back at the union meetings, if not at work. We all regret your passing as secretary-treasurer, in which capacity you served for seventeen years, with never a black mark on your escutcheon. So, battle down the illness that has you in its grip, and come back to our midst.

Two Five-Hour Shifts Would Take Up Slack

Boston, Oct. 8.—Two five-hour shifts—one in the morning and one in the afternoon—is submitted as an unemployment solution by James O'Connell and John P. Frey, president and secretary-treasurer Metal Trades Department A. F. of L., in their annual report.

The two-shift system would reduce overhead. This plan is as certain as when the three eight-hour shifts displaced the two 12-hour shifts in continuous production, the unionists say.

"If our manufacturing establishments, with their present power and machinery, were to operate at full capacity four hours per day, it is estimated that production would be greater than at present. Industry is equipped, in fact it is over-equipped, to produce, but because of new inventions the machinery of today will be largely obsolete."

The report suggests that trade unionists keep in mind the difference between wages and hours. "There is an economic relationship between the two, but they are distinct problems. Wages determine the people's capacity to buy. Shorter hours might be accompanied by even greater unemployment than now if wages were so out of proportion with the wealth created that the people could not consume."

Awake Half the Night Weak and in Pain

Nights after night I could not sleep," writes Mrs. Mary J. Roberts, 117 West Franklin St., Raleigh, N. C. "I would lie awake half the night. I was dizzy and weak, suffered frequently with pains in my side and small part of my back.

"When I was a girl, my mother gave me Cardui, and it did me so much good, I thought I would try it again. I took five bottles, and I feel like a new person.

"I think it is fine. I would advise every woman who is weak to try Cardui, for it has certainly put me on my feet."

CONFERENCE PAVES WAY FOR ADJUSTING UNFORTUNATE BREAK

Only Minor Details Remain to Be Worked Out—Negotiations Conducted in Friendliest Spirit, and All Parties to Short Controversy Are Pleased With "Peace."

At a conference Thursday afternoon between representatives of Barbers' Local 415, Beauticians' 415-A, and Chattanooga Trades and Labor council on one side and Mr. Bernard E. Loveman, president of the D. B. Loveman company, on the other, agreement was reached on all points involved in the dispute which culminated some two weeks ago in employes of the Loveman beauty shop leaving their jobs. There remains only a few minor details to be worked out, when the unionists who left the shop will return and it will become "100 per cent. union."

Negotiations for adjustment of the unfortunate disagreement were carried on in the most friendly spirit, and each party to the settlement was pleased with the outcome.

The short break in relations was marked by an unusual absence of bitterness or unfriendly feeling on either side, representatives of the union side of the argument having felt free at any time to discuss the situation with Mr. Loveman, and having been extended at all times the utmost courtesy.

AMERICAN FEDERATION VOTES FOR CONTINUANCE OF GREAT SOUTHERN ORGANIZATION DRIVE

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 16.—In a session running a full half day, turning heavy guns on unfair employers of the South, the American Federation of Labor, by unanimous vote, determined to continue its great organizing campaign, endorsing at the same time the textile strike at Danville and auth[orizing] an appeal in behalf of the 5,000 workers who are battling for the right to organize in that struggle.

Pilot E. J. Ross, president of the Mississippi State Federation of Labor and an A. F. of L. organizer, led the parade of speakers who ripped into the southern industrial autocracy.

Ross, who puts into his truly southern oratory a wallop that holds audiences and carries conviction, laid down a terrific indictment of southern employers and business organizations that seek to put southern workers in pawn to northern capital under low wages and long hours of toil.

Lauds Educational Work.

He paid tribute to the many fair southern employers and he held forth with a promise of success because of the educational work being done in the southern campaign. "The greatest achievement thus far," he said, "is not the record of 112 new unions, but the great educational work that has been done. President Green's two years of the south gave our people a new vision; they brought enlightenment. We have held labor chautauquas where thousands have been reached away. These have spread information about our movement.

"Southern employers have been doing what reactionary employers have always done—they have spread lies. And they have paid lower wages in the south than are being paid in New England. But our campaign is uncovering the lies."

Ross came armed with exhibits which he showed to the convention, one after the other. One was a leaflet issued by employers advising workers that if they joined a union they were, like the old woman of fairy tale fame, killing the goose that laid the golden egg. He said the attitude of the employers is summed up in a quotation from one of them who said, "We will speak for our employes."

Describing a visit to Philadelphia and the Liberty Bell, Ross said: "It's a pity we can't take that old bell down to Danville and there let it ring out a plea for those who have no more rights than did those for whom it first rang out."

Danville "Turning Point."

Ross declared that Danville is a "turning point" in southern organizing.

Resolution No. 62, introduced by Ross, calling for militant continuance of the southern campaign, was adopted at the conclusion of his remarks, the vote being unanimous.

President Thomas F. McMahon and Vice-President Francis J. Gorman of the United Textile Workers of America and Matilda Lindsay, fresh from Danville, joined their pleas in a vivid and dramatic appeal for help, not only for the strikers of Danville, but for the complete realization of labor's aims in the whole southern campaign.

McMahon made it clear that the workers of Danville struck only when no other recourse was open. He declared the workers were being discharged because they refused to sign yellow dog contracts and that they were forced to strike to protect any semblance of their rights. "Never will the day come," he said, "when our union will send forth the order to sign a yellow dog contract and go back to work so we can maintain a semblance of organization. The late Samuel Gompers said it was better to have fought and lost than never to have fought and that is our motto. President Green's appeal rang through the south like the shot that was fired at Lexington."

Urges Speedy Help.

Pleading for help for the strikers at Danville, McMahon said, "Do what you can as quick as you can for those in the trenches in Danville."

Vice-President Gorman followed, going over the history of the Danville situation, step by step. He made it clear that the constant advice had been not to strike, until no other possibility was open. "Hundreds of times we've said in the fields of Danville, 'now isn't the time to strike'," Gorman said. But, he pointed out, there came an end to peace because of the tactics of the Dan River and Riverside mills. He paid glowing tribute to the discipline, self-possession and orderliness of the unionists of Danville.

"We're making the fight of the labor movement in Danville," Gorman concluded, "for the right to organize, the fight against the injunction and the yellow dog contract, and the workers of Danville are going to continue that fight for the right to belong to a union until they have won."

LIVING CONDITIONS AS LONGEVITY FACTOR

Springfield, Ill.—Living conditions are more important than heredity in determining the length of life of an individual, according to the state department of public health.

The person with long-lived parentage has a distince advantage over the person of short-lived ancestry, if all other factors are equal. Living conditions, however, dominate, it was stated.

Textile Workers, "Stretched Out" to Limit, Finally Forced to Rebel in Big Virginia Mills

Pushed to Limit by New System of Making Them Produce More for Less Money, Toilers Had No Other Recourse Except to Quit Work and Make a Stand for Justice, Story Told by Veteran Weaver Shows.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Oct. 16.—He was just a weaver of cotton cloth and didn't know much outside of his job of weaving, but he did know that, and he knew it from the ground up and back again. This skilled workman had given many of his best years to his employers at the Riverside cotton mills here, that are now on strike because the bosses hold the opinion that "industrial democracy," as practiced in the mills is superior to trade unionism, wherein collective bargaining is the basis of all negotiations.

"I can tell you about the stretch-out system," he began.

I told him to proceed; that I thought it would be interesting in view of a recent incident in which I had been asked how the stretch-out worked, and if it tore the cloth.

"Stretch-out" Tears Workers.

He laughed. "The stretch-out don't tear the cloth, but it sure tears the worker, or I reckon tires him would be better. Do you want to hear about it?"

I told him yes, and I let him tell it in his own way.

"The stretch-out in No. 3 began in 1928," he said reflectively, "after the old two-box looms on section A had been removed and replaced with 36-inch drapers. The draper weavers at that time operated from 16 to 22 looms, with an average pay of $28 to $30 a week.

"After putting in the new drapers the bosses decided to try them out by giving 30 looms to each weaver instead of the usual 16 to 22. The first 'stretch!' The weavers were given such a reduction in base pay (10 per cent) as to push them—or stretch them—to come up to the average wage received before the stretch was put in operation. This stretch-out has been continued up to the present.

Limit Is Reached.

"The efficiency men, after checking up on the weavers, decided, after several weeks with the stop-watch, that the weavers were 'stretched' about as far as they could go and left off further checking or making any changes.

"The fixers on these looms were placed on 180 looms sections, the largest fixing job in the country in any mill. At that time no draper fixer had over 96 looms, and he averaged $28 a week while men on the big job—with 84 looms added to their work—averaged only $30.10 a week, or $2.10 for looking after the other 84 looms. Some stretch, I'll say, although a small bonus was added. This bonus, however, was a joke, as it was reduced by the 10 per cent cut which entirely did away with the percentage bonus.

More Work Put On Fixers.

"These fixers were solemnly told by the bosses that they would not be expected to do any warping at any time, that they only would be expected to repair the looms. The bosses kept their promise for some time. Finally it was decided, if the fixer had any spare time, he must not soldier on the job, but keep busy 'helping' the weavers. The bosses have the stretch-out down pat. It was at this point that they began stretching the fixers. In order to save more expense the feeler man was put off the job entirely and his $22.50 a week pay was turned into profit, for the fixers inherited the feeler man's job—at no increase in pay. It was only a short time after this that the company abolished the job of warp hauler and delegated it to the fixers, who got no extra pay for this extra work. The fixers now had two extra jobs besides that of loom fixing and the old stretch-out was batting around a thousand. Following this efficiency move the company broke its first promise, in which it said the fixers would not be required to do the warping. Of course the fixers put up an awful holler, not getting any pay for all this extra work, but they were told flatly that if they did not want to do what was put on them they could quit. You sure can't beat the stretch-out for making a machine out of a man.

Weavers' Pay Docked.

"Referring again to the weavers in the department where I work, they were docked unmercifully in the recent months before the strike, for damaged cloth or 'seconds' which could not be humanly avoided by any one running the same number of automatic draper looms. The weavers have been so 'stretched' that they can't do first-class work. They can't stand the pace.

"I know of one smash hand who was taken off her job and it turned over to two other girls to do—and this without extra pay. The man who takes up the cloth for the weavers in one section was removed from his job and the weavers compelled to carry up their cloth themselves, in addition to their many other duties. I know also of several colored workers who were put off their jobs and the work turned over to others, but in each case without any additional pay. Stretching is a great game if it's all on your side.

"The four box magazine weavers in this department have been jumped from 12 to 14 looms each to 16 and 18 looms each, thus reducing their price per cut and causing them scarcely to average the same pay, but with a lot more extra work.

Magazine Fixers "Stretched," Too.

"Stretching the magazine fixers has been a part of the game, too. These jobs have been consolidated, some of the fixers removed, and those left compelled to take over the extra work, but in every case without extra pay.

"No, you don't stretch the cloth, but holy smoke how the bosses do stretch the workers. No wonder we're all broke. We've all been stretched to the limit, and that is the big grievance against the company. It ought to be settled, but it seems that the company won't arbitrate or mediate because, they say, there is nothing to mediate. It seems four or five thousand of us are out of step and only one man, President Fitzgerald, is in step. Well, all I got to say is that it depends on who's watching the parade as to who's out of step—and we'll hear about that later. Now if you'll excuse me I'll go to the commissary and get my grub for next week."

. . . And a skilled workman—an American citizen and Virginia voter—idle because he refused to be longer exploited, joined a queue two blocks long to get enough food to last him another idle week.

INCOME TAX FAVORED BY WELL-KNOWN BANKER

Cleveland.—A state income tax to meet the growing expenses of government was favored by Thornton Cooke, Kansas City banker, at the American Bankers' association convention.

He denied that such a tax will "frighten industry" from these states. "Four and one-half per cent is a typical state income tax," he said. "Several states have it. If labor and raw material conditions in a given state are attractive, are corporations deterred from coming in by the fact that they can retain for themselves only 95½ per cent of their profits?"

ADWELL OFFERS SUGGESTIONS ON PLASTER WORK

Third Article of Series Points Out Value of Proper Construction.

By L. T. ADWELL.
(Number Three)

Wood Lath As a Base for Interior

Wood lath is the most common of plaster bases for small building owing to the fact the best grade of wood brings a higher price when manufactured into other products. Most of the wood lath used of recent years are of inferior wood. The builder should inspect each bundle of lath before lather starts to work.

Wood lath should be of No. 1 grade, sound green stock, free from bark and knots, well manufactured, and should be of uniform thickness, averaging 2-inch to 5-inch lath, with a minimum thickness for a lath not less than five-sixteenths of an inch, and should not be over 1½ inches wide. They should be nailed to each stud, joist or bearing with not less than three-penny fine lath nails, laid horizontally and on ceilings in one direction, spaced not less than one-fourth of an inch. Joints should be broken every six to nine courses, with the proper quarter inch between ends of lath. Use of three-penny extra fine nails is prohibited.

Metal lath should be applied to all external and internal angles lapping not less than three inches on each side. Metal lath should cover joints where wood lath joins on to masonry work, lapping not less than three inches on each side of joint. In addition to use of metal lath as stated above, use metal lath as specified in Article 2 for fire prevention.

Plastering Specifications

All wood lath should be covered with at least two coats of plastering. The mortar for plastering may be composed of quick lime or hydrated lime and sand, or of a manufactured hard plaster. Patented plaster to be applied according to manufacturer's specifications.

The scratch and brown coats should have a combined thickness of at least one-half an inch from top of lath to the face of plastering on both ceilings and walls. Scratch and brown coats should be brought down flush with floors.

It is well to state here that the finish coat has no constructive value. The scratch and brown coats are constructive coats and a base for decorative and ornamental coats. Too often are defects covered in brown coats with the finish that should be watched carefully. It is done every day by a "fly-by-night" contractor. He does your work, gets your money, and off before "shoddy" workmanship appears. Let us furnish you a list of plaster contractors, known by our local architects, bankers, and insurance companies. And you will get what you pay for.

Additional information along the lines listed above will be cheerfully supplied. Address "Better Plastering Committee," care the Labor World.

FURNITURE STORES DISCONTINUE SALE MASCOT PRODUCTS

Will Feature High-Class Union-Label Stove. "Peace Declaration" Ends Disagreement of Over Four Years' Standing—Fowler Stores Not Included.

An echo of the lockout of workers at the Mascot Stove company more than four years ago is heard in announcement this week that the Sterchi Stores, Inc., have been formally removed from organized labor's "unfair list" and restored to the good will and recommendation of the workers of Chattanooga and other communities and their friends.

The Mascot lockout was one of the most vicious and uncalled-for attacks on working people which has ever occurred in Chattanooga, and was followed by several instances of violence which were charged to the importation of strikebreakers from various places. The iron molders and mounters, who had upon many occasions sacrificed for and with J. F. James, president of the Mascot concern, to build the product to a point of perfection, and who had, with their friends, done much to increase the sales of Mascot stoves, were cold-bloodedly driven from their jobs, and probably the bitterest feeling ever engendered in a local labor controversy was the result.

From the date of failure to prevail upon a then new manager to alter his arbitrary attitude, this bitterness has continued, and possibly increased, and Mascot products—if any—are still made by non-union labor.

The Sterchi stores—then operating locally under the name of Sterchi Bros. & Fowler—became involved in the controversy through information and belief of local trades unionists that Mr. J. O. Fowler, then in charge, owned a controlling interest in the Mascot plant, and was, to some extent, at least, responsible for the change in Mascot's labor policies. This was given credence by the further fact that local Sterchi-Fowler stores handled Mascot products almost exclusively. Following extended negotiations and efforts to right what Chattanooga workers considered a major wrong, the Sterchi-Fowler stores, together with the Mascot Stove company, were formally declared "unfair to organized labor," and every possible publicity was given to the affair.

At the succeeding annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor approval was given to the local action, and facts of the situation were broadcast.

A few months ago, however, Mr. Fowler retired from the Sterchi firm, and Mr. Robert Sterchi was named local manager. Shortly thereafter negotiations for a clearing up of the situation so far as it related to the Sterchi firm were begun, the following letter forming a basis for conferences which resulted in the final action taken Monday night by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council:

Mr Matt Gerlach, Secy.-Treas.,
Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Mr. Gerlach:

Confirming our conversation of March 26th regarding Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, I will state that the Sterchi Bros. Stores, Inc., have no connections whatsoever with the Mascot Stove Manufacturing company, of this city. I am sure you know that Mr. J. O. Fowler is no longer with this concern, and for your information we have dropped the Mascot line entirely and do not intend to handle them any longer at any of the Sterchi stores.

Mr. Gerlach, we are very anxious to get the good will of the Trades and Labor council, and would like very much for you to take the above matter up with them and put us on your good will list.

For your information I will state that Mr. Bob Sterchi is now general manager of this store, and, as you know, he has always been a friend to the labor council in every respect. Thanking you for your assistance in this matter, I am,

Yours very truly,
STERCHI BROS. STORES, Inc.,
By O. L. Hayes, Adv. Mgr.

The letter was turned over to officers of Local 53, Molders, who conducted the subsequent negotiations with Mr. Sterchi.

The local Sterchi stores will feature a union-labeled stove of national reputation, and representatives of the Molders urge upon their friends to give every consideration to the firm when in the market for their merchandise.

Secretary Gerlach this week addressed the following letter to the Sterchi stores:

Sterchi Bros. Stores, Inc.,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Sirs:

At the meeting of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, held Monday night, Oct. 13th, the delegates from the Molders Local Union No. 53, reported that their organization had taken the Sterchi Bros. Stores, Inc., off of the unfair list and requested that the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council do likewise, and thereupon the motion was put and passed unanimously and the Sterchi Bros. Stores, Inc., were declared fair to organized labor, and we wish you success.

Respectfully yours,
CHATTANOOGA TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL,
By Matt Gerlach, Secy.

Molders' officials pointed out that the settlement of the controversy with the Stercni stores in no way affects the position of the Fowler stores.

Local trades unionists appeared to be of one mind in expressing their pleasure that the long and unfortunate controversy with the furniture concern has been ended to the evident satisfaction of all interests concerned.

STATE AIDS GROWERS IN FORMING "UNION"

Raleigh, N. C.—Governor Gardner and other state officials, together with bankers, business men and federal government representatives, are aiding tobacco growers to form a "union." The object is higher prices and a limitation of output.

Textile workers and other wage earners in this state, however, continue their single-handed battle to secure a living wage and reduce intolerable long hours. In Gastonia county, especially, wages are being driven lower and lower.

These workers use the same argument that the tobacco growers do.

ANTI-UNIONISTS MUST ACT

Minneapolis.—The city council approved a resolution calling on business men, organized labor and the anti-union Citizens' Alliance to get together on unemployment.

One alderman suggested that if employers who talk about relieving unemployment would reduce hours and maintain rates, their views will be considered. The council's action was long urged by organized labor.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1930.

The Labor World extends heartfelt condolences to two brothers who have during the week lost their fathers. Brother Harry E. Kelly, secretary of Lodge 56, Machinists, mourns the passing of his parent, William J. Kelley, pioneer citizen and merchant of East Chattanooga, who surrendered to the Grim Reaper last Sunday morning, and was laid to rest on Monday.

W. E. Brown, father of W. H. Brown, of the Stage Employes, died early Friday morning at his home in St. Elmo, and it was announced that funeral services will probably be held Saturday afternoon.

PELLAGRA MARCHES ON.

Groups of North Carolinians are working heroically to overcome the blight of pellagra at their state. In some counties home demonstration clubs are organizing to supply proper food. Their work is limited to tenant farmers. It is sadly needed there, but the industrial workers need it also.

Cotton and wages tend to some counties. They are going their best, but they cannot reach the economic cause of the dread disease. Their educational experiment is backed by business interests to keep the state in order, but it overlooks the opposition of those who want to face the facts. It would raise public morals if they would state the facts. The accompanying cartoon, contributed especially to the current issue of The Labor World through International Labor News Service, shows how local pasha boards of chosen politicians and political appointees and mill owners are powerful in politics.

The whole tragic pellagra situation comes down to an economic foundation. It is caused by inefficient food. While the economic structure remains unchanged pellagra marches on. With what pride the open shoppers and the wage-cutters must view the terrible processions of 20,000 persons sick with the plague!

CHEAPEST LABOR REPLACED.

A [illegible] that will replace [illegible] was predicted at a conference of agricultural experts in Washington.

Cotton picking is the cheapest labor in the country. The smallest child is capable of that seasonal work, just as children are forced to labor in the tobacco sugar cane fields. An automatic cotton picker eliminates the scrap of the sharecropper. No labor is too cheap for it to replace and no child can ever be its master. The machine has its limit, but this is ignored by men who blandly declare that those displaced workers may enter other occupations. It would be interesting to know what trade or calling is immune from the inroads of scientific industrial processes.

When men ignore their problems and their remedies they will discuss organized labor's attitude as the problem that affects every person.

The practical man proposes that demands the union label or button.

THAT "GREATER NEED"

"Give More—For a Greater Need!"

This slogan, for the ninth annual campaign of the Community Chest, should strike a responsive chord in the hearts of every man and woman in Chattanooga fortunate enough at this time to be in position to share with the many who, for one reason or another, are forced to depend upon the bounty of others for sustenance.

That a greater need exists cannot be denied; that fewer are in position to give anything at all is just as certain. It follows, then, that unless the plea to "give more" is heeded the campaign will fail—and failure, under present conditions, is unthinkable.

Operation of the Community Chest as has been and perhaps always will be a matter for divided opinion, and criticisms are many and varied. Some of these objections are doubtless meritorious; no organization is perfect, as no individual is without his or her faults. But every progressive movement in history has been carried on under a heavy fire of criticism. No individual or group is in better position to weigh in the balance objections to a movement for the common good than are we of the trade unions. Perhaps no humanitarian cause has ever suffered such unjust charges as has this movement for which so many have sacrificed. Yet while we admit the imperfections in our methods of working out our program, we know that it is fundamentally sound, and we continue to "carry on."

May we not say the same thing of the Community Chest?

This system of raising funds annually for the care of unfortunates and the maintenance of character-building and eleemosynary institutions has been approved by municipalities throughout the country and has been recognized as the most satisfactory and economical way of caring for a major problem.

But whether or not we agree as to the methods of operation, the system is used, and, with present unprecedented conditions, divisions of opinion, we believe, should be at least temporarily forgotten and the whole citizenship united for success of the present drive.

The purely charitable agencies, it is announced, will receive the major portion of the funds raised, and it is believed that the enormous demands certain to be made upon these agencies during the coming winter will be met to a reasonably satisfactory extent.

The campaign will open Monday, and scores of local citizens will give the entire week to the cause. Let's meet the solicitor with a smile, and at least for the once place confidence in the chest directors to distribute this centralized fund to the best interest of all concerned.

Let's "Give More—For a Greater Need!"

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Wage cuts are helping to prolong the business depression and retard recovery. Every wage cut means reduction of purchasing power and is a blow at the national welfare. These facts are stressed by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, in a message that ought to be brought to the attention of every employer in the nation. He says:

"One paramount need now is consumer buying. All eyes are on the retail market. Storekeepers, wholesalers, jobbers are waiting for signs of better buying before they will take the risk of ordering ahead. But workers without income cannot buy. Increasing employment and sustained wage levels are essential.

"A dangerous tendency now threatens the prospect for betterment. Wage cuts have increased in the past two months. In July, according to reports to the department of labor, 20,000 workers were forced to take wage reductions—double the number in any previous month since depression began. In August the number rose again to 24,700 and cuts averaged 10.5 per cent—the highest yet. This destruction of buying power must be checked if we are to go forward. Wage earner buying power is the key to prosperity.

"Business men can hasten revival and improve their own trade without undue risk by such policies as these: 1. Order ahead; start to work up a normal spring supply. 2. Cut overhead costs (without reducing wages) by improving equipment and eliminating waste. 3. Improve quality of product and reduce prices. 4. Stimulate trade by advertising and special efforts. These measures will increase employment and put products within reach of this year's low incomes. Wage earners can help produce better articles at lower cost by improving the quality of their work and increasing efficiency.

"We [illegible] strength this fall? It is [illegible] hands of the [illegible] employers."

Some employers will never learn. There's H. R. Fitzgerald, head of the big Danville, Va., textile mills, who has flatly rejected the offer of the [illegible] of Virginia to mediate in the [illegible] between workers, declaring, "[illegible] absolutely nothing [illegible]."

Mr. Fitzgerald seems to be laboring under the impression that he is living [illegible] when "There is [illegible]" was the slogan [illegible] employers whose employees went on strike.

The days of absolutism are past and the man who denies the right of his employes to a voice in industry is fighting progress and seeking to turn back the hands of time. Mr. Fitzgerald has made a bad move, a fact which will be borne in upon his consciousness as time goes by.

A Chicago grand jury has made a "discovery." It charges that there is a "well established alliance between the Chicago police department, the corrupt politician and the criminal elements."

Well, well, who'd 'a thought it? Grand juries do make startling discoveries, sometimes. Just as if any intelligent person did not know there must be an alliance between criminals and at least part of the Chicago police force. If there was no such alliance, crime would not flourish so largely unpunished as it does in Chicago. And when there is such a "working agreement," it is a foregone conclusion there are corrupt politicians taking their "cut" of the graft.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Has a sculptor for the memorial to be erected in Washington, D. C., to Samuel Gompers been selected?

A.—Robert Aitken, of New York, is now working on a design for the memorial. If his design is acceptable to the memorial committee of the American Federation of Labor and the commission of fine arts of Washington, he will be authorized to proceed with the work of the memorial.

Q.—When is the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the American Federation of Labor?

A.—November 15, 1931.

Q.—What was the Smith-Hughes act?

A.—A bill passed by congress in 1917 inaugurated vocational education on a nation-wide scale by providing for federal co-operation with state boards of vocational education in promoting the establishment of vocational schools in trade and industry, commerce, agriculture and home economics. The provisions of the act are administered by the federal board for vocational education, of which Perry W. Reeves is the labor member.

What Next!

A discovery by which X-ray photographs can be taken through solid steel ten inches thick was revealed recently at the twelfth annual national metal exposition in Chicago. The new method will be used to locate cracks or defects inside steel, finding of which has been one of the greatest problems of the steel industry. Heretofore it has been possible to penetrate only four inches of steel with the X-rays.

GOD'S WORD

A Weekly Comment on a Text From the Bible

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

The House of Life.

Text—"All the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord."—Eph. 2:21.

Read also Matt. 21:17-19.

The Apostle Paul often used concrete illustrations drawn from the world about him to drive home his arguments in the minds of the readers of his epistles. One of his best is his well-known "Put on the whole armour of God," in which the Apostle to the Gentiles likens the Christian to a Roman soldier accoutered for battle. Christian readers have become strangely affectionate toward this passage in Eph. 6:13-18, wherein the believer is admonished to don "the breastplate of righteousness" and "the helmet of salvation" and take up "the shield of faith," etc. Our text this week is an illustration of the same order, Paul likening one's life to a building with thoughts, deeds, words, desires and principles, of course, the materials from which this House of Life is built. I am thankful Paul used that one little word "fitly." It means our lives must be put together in the right way, and no other way, else they are not the kind of structures God would have them be.

WM. L. MOSS

The Lesson for Us.

There are two Latin words for man. One is "homo," meaning merely man as an animal distinguished from a horse or dog. The other word is "vir," and means man in the truest, noblest sense of the word—a man made in the image of God and possessing sovereign worth! Now from this word "vir" comes our word "virtue," so that manliness and virtue are one. Hence, to be a true man is to be not an animal but a—hero! Man, the one form in the animal kingdom with the quality of being virtuous, is thrown into the vortex of life without so much as a "by-your-leave." Nevertheless here he is—and he must either make good or go down in defeat! Fra Lippo Lippi was right—

"This world's no blot for us,
Nor blank; it means intense ill and gracious good;
To find its meaning is my meat and drink."

It doesn't take a man long to learn there is a recognized level below which his life must not fall, for below this level he can never be his true self. Above this level a man's life has character. Character is not inherited; It may be influenced by environment, but each of us is given the task of building character for himself before it can ever be achieved. We build our characters day by day, and the materials are supplied by life itself, the things we do and say being the essential factors in building our House of Life. It is the will of God that every man be his own architect, and whether we will it or not, we are building for all time and eternity. The materials that go into the making of our character must be chosen carefully—in fair weather we may fool the world and flatter ourselves that we are as good as others, but when storm and stress of life come our way will our characters stand the test? Jesus gave us a story about two builders, one wise, the other foolish. He said those who heard and obeyed His words was like the wise man, because they built their characters on the firm foundation of obedience. We do need a strength greater than ours. Our actions color our thoughts, our thoughts control our lives, our lives produce our actions, and so the "vicious circle" goes on! Paul knew this and he knew we needed help in building our characters for in the verse following our text he says: "Ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." God is love, God is beauty, God is all that is best, and the man of character has made it possible for God's Spirit to dwell in him.

A continuous demand for the union label, shop card and working button will bring joy and sunshine into the lives of thousands of trade unionists.

Unselfish Service to Others Is a Telephone Tradition

Once every year there is an award of Vail medals for Bell telephone workers. These are given in recognition of acts that are considered as outstanding in noteworthy public service, and four have been awarded to Southern Bell workers this year.

Every day more than 20,000 people in the Southern Bell telephone organization are giving their utmost endeavors to the service of the public. To most of them there does not come the opportunity for heroic or noteworthy conduct. And yet it is their conscientious daily fulfilment of their duty to the company and to the public that makes possible the smooth and satisfactory service that you have come to accept as a matter of course.

Usually it is only in emergencies that heroic acts are called for, but every hour of every day the telephone fraternity is giving you the best they can to serve your needs, and, if necessary they will rise to a crisis and demonstrate that they, too, place service above self.

PART TIME WORK IN PLANTS CAN BE PUT ON YEAR BASIS

(By A. F. of L. Direct News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 16.—Employment can be put on a regular basis and seasonal unemployment would, to a large extent end, says the A. F. of L. executive committee in its report to the annual convention.

"Nearly all industries find their operations seasonal to some extent," it is stated. "But much seasonal employment is preventable. It is common knowledge that many plants have found it not only possible but advantageous to regularize their production schedules so that uniform operation is maintained throughout the year and their work forces are given continuous employment.

"In automobiles, the industry needed 475,000 workers for six months of the year—these men and women had to depend on the automobile industry for their living. How can these workers maintain their standard of living while their incomes are cut off?

"In clothing factories 155,000 are needed for six months, but 4,000 of them are unemployed for five months—nearly all the other half year, and 11,000 are laid off for three months. In cotton textiles 431,000 are employed for six months and 13,000 are laid off for four months and 21,000 for two months. Here are 182,000 workers, in these three industries alone who lost from two to five months last year. This immense loss of incomes means a very serious lowering of income standards."

The executive council favors a yearly wage basis instead of a weekly base that will assure a steady income and encourage employers to stabilize operations.

"Some plants," the council states, lay off workers for two or three weeks in the dull season and call it a "vacation." A lay-off without pay is not a vacation, declare the unionists.

3,700,000 Idle Factory Workers; Farms and Offices Not Included

(By A. F. of L. Direct News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 16.—"We estimate that unemployment averaged 3,700,000 wage earners during the first six months of 1930, not including farm laborers and office workers," says the A. F. of L. executive council in its report to the annual convention.

"In both the United States and Canada unemployment this year has been very much above last year. For the first five months the averages show that 55 per cent more were out of work in the United States and 83 per cent more in Canada. Unemployment of union members averaged 21 per cent in the United States for the first seven months of 1930 and 10.5 per cent in Canada for the first five months of 1930.

"When unemployment reaches such a high figure it means that men and women are often out of work for several months before they can find employment. Even in normal times, a recent study shows that over half of those laid off were out of work for three months or more before they could find new employment. With conditions as they were this winter, it has not been unusual for men to be out of work for five or six months. No wonder savings have been exhausted and hundreds of thousands have been forced to apply for charity. Many who have been able all their lives to support their families and to tide over other periods of unemployment were forced to charity this winter."

Harris to Press Bill For Quota from Mexico

Senator Charges Little Effort Was Made to Enforce Immigration Law Until Senate Passed His Measure.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Oct. 16.—Charging that little effort was made to enforce the immigration laws on the Mexican border until his bill to put Mexican immigration on a quota basis passed the senate, Senator Harris of Georgia has announced that he will renew efforts to obtain final action on the measure at the coming session of congress.

The senator said the state department recently announced a sharp decrease in immigration from Mexico, indicating a more active interest in enforcing the law. He added, however, he feared that if his measure failed of passage in the house the administration would "become law in enforcement."

There was no doubt, he said, that administration leaders in the house prevented placing the bill before the house for a vote at the last session.

"We need to exclude the cheap Mexican labor," Harris said. He declared Mexican labor in Texas was responsible for a 2,000,000 bale cotton surplus this year, which had made it impossible for the cotton farmers of the south to receive a profitable price for their product.

Capital-Labor Relations in South Hinge on Danville Strike Outcome

Result to Draw Pattern of Industrial Future of the Southland. Workers Seek More Voice in Great Business of Which One Man Is Absolute Master—Injunction Mild, But May Cause Great Harm.

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Danville, Va., Oct. 16.—The Danville textile workers are on strike!

For over 40 years these people and their children have given of their brains, their blood, their skill and facility, in labor and in sacrifice, for the building up of a business of making cotton cloth which is famous for its quality. In it they have come to take a pride—the peculiar pride of the skilled craftsman and craftswoman.

Of this business, H. R. Fitzgerald, who worked up from the spinning-room to paymaster and then to master of it all, now says: "This is my business, and I am not going to allow any one to run it for me."

H. R. Fitzgerald is a deaf mute. He can neither hear nor speak, in the manner of ordinary men. He reads the lips of those who speak to him. And he speaks to others with the peculiar mechanical speech which he has learned from those skilled in teaching the dumb to speak. He is, to that extent, shut off from the ordinary life of human beings. He does not hear the accent, nor sense the nuances of meanings in the human voices of those about him.

Is Absolute Master.

He is known as a very clever, a very smooth, a very able, but a very hard man, who is the absolute master of the mills, and, now at the age of over 70 years, carries about in his shell of disabilities the other limitations of an industrial era which has faded out of the picture of American economics and humanities.

The sympathies of the people of the city of Danville are with the strikers, for these strikers have been good citizens of this city for many years, and their qualities are known. The people of the state of Virginia, looking over the hills toward Danville, at the southwestern edge of the state, where it joins onto North Carolina only a few miles away, are wondering if the unwholesome halo of a Marion and a Gastonia are to be hung upon the good name and fair history of this beautiful commonwealth.

Danger in Injunction.

A middle-aged Virginia judge of the circuit court refused to allow the mill company to arm its overseers. But when it came time to granting the time-honored injunction, the judge answered the request of the company's attorney with the issuance of an injunction which, though apparently mild, as injunctions have gone, can be interpreted and applied by a judge issuing such a document to the great harm and detriment of the cause of the progress of the industrial life of this state.

That the company has practiced the coercion, intimidation and brutality of force which it now asks to have the workers enjoined from employing, is a matter which could be made a matter of record by testimony piled like Ossa upon Pelion. That there is any likelihood of the people who for eight months have been patiently building up the fabric and weaving the discipline of their union, as carefully and as skillfully as they weave the 90-inch webs of the beautiful sheetings which they can make—that these people should be expected to use violence and force against this company and its property is almost inconceivable to one who knows their record and their history, and their attachment to the industry which they have woven out of the raw materials of their own lives.

What Will Be Result?

The strike is on! What will now be woven into the web is for the coming days to say. That in it will be drawn the pattern of the industrial future of the great Southland is agreed on all sides. The workers look—and hope—and clench their hands and prepare for the agony of the battle. And here and there abroad in Virginia as well as in other commonwealths, men of vision, and hope, and even men of wealth, are wishing hard for an outcome that may not have in the finished web the splash of blood and the twisting and tearing up of the threads of human happiness and human rights.

ABOR OFFERS DEFINITE PLAN TO AID JOBLESS

nvention Maps Program for Permanent Relief.

RESIDENT ASKED TO NAME COMMITTEE

andates to Executive Coun- l Call for Labors of Tre- mendous Import.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Washington, Oct. 23.—With Presi- t William Green going into an- er term of office by unanimous re- ction, he carries into that term ndates to the executive council ling for labors of tremendous con- ences as the result of the de- rations of this fiftieth annual erican Federation of Labor con- tion.

Perhaps the weightiest and most ssing problem of all is that of un- ployment. The executive council ed unemployment "the outstand- economic fact of the past year." committee on resolutions, headed Matthew Woll, with Victor A. nder as secretary, declared it "an ergency that calls for action."

The action has been supplied. The utive council recommended a plank program for meeting unem- yment on a permanent basis. The olutions committee reported a six- nk platform designed to assuage distress of the winter just ahead. convention approved both.

National Committee Asked.

The six-plank relief program came the convention out of a clear sky. provisions, if carried out, will call action the authorities and the r movements of every community the nation, as well as the national state governments. And prefac- its proffered program with words nalysis and of admonition, it sent n a ringing call for organization ions, unions, unions everywhere. reover, it urged vigorous efforts to the Wagner unemployment bills ugh to passage. The six-plank form for relief follows:

1. That the executive council be structed to request the presi- nt of the United States to im- diately appoint a national com- ttee to recommend measures r immediate relief, having in nd proposals that can be car- ed out by private and quasi blic agencies and enterprises well as by the departments of e federal government, the de- rtments of the state govern- nts and by municipalities, unties, school districts and her divisions of government.

2. That the executive council instructed to call upon all ate federations of labor to re- uest the governors of their re- ective states to appoint state mmittees to co-operate with the tional committee proposed in aragraph one, and to initiate mmendations within their re- ective states.

3. That the executive council instructed to call upon all filiated central bodies in the ited States to urge the mayors similar officials of their re- ective cities to immediately ap- nt city committees to co-oper- e with the state and national mmittees provided for in para- aphs one and two and to itiate relief programs within ir respective cities.

4. That the executive council instructed to proceed in such anner as the council may find acticable to bring about the es- blishment of similar commit- es in localities where there are affiliated central labor organ- ations through which to act.

5. That the executive council termine the best procedure to llow in obtaining appointment similar committees in the ter- ories of Alaska, Hawaii and erto Rico.

6. That the affiliated central dies in the Dominion of Canada urged to co-operate with the nadian trades and labor con- ess in the promotion of unem- yment relief measures in anada.

It is the opinion of your committee the report said, "that the na- l committee recommended herein, l state and local committees re- ted to, should urge such relief jects as can be immediately put effect to relieve the situation dur- the coming winter, by securing yment for as many workers as sible, and by relieving destitution want in whatever way may be necessary and practicable. It s intended that these committees await action by either congress ate legislatures."

Living Standards Must Rise.

The report urged greater efforts to- ard securing the five-day week and ged that "The very increase in productivity of the workers, which es often results in unemployment hem, can and must be made the son for a greater return to them. re there must be a continued in- se in the standards of living, with or all constantly rising to a higher plane, or science will become a snare and invention a mockery."

On unemployment insurance the committee discussed the question at length, declared itself clearly "not in accord with the resolutions sub- mitted," and referred the entire sub- ject to the executive council for study so that the council, in its study of unemployment and remedial action, should have an open field before it with no avenue closed.

Labor Convention Charts Course For Another Year of Steady Gain

Movement to Follow Tried and Proved Principles in Dealing With Unemployment, the Machine and Other Problems That Now Press Imperatively for Solution.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Boston, Oct. 23.—The fiftieth convention of the American Federation of Labor has passed into history after having written what President Green described as "another brilliant page" into that history.

Nothing unexpected happened. Nothing was done that will cause people to gasp in wonderment. Nothing radical was written into the record. President Green explained that, too, when he said, "We will not be carried away by vaporous proposals." The American Federation of Labor rests upon certain sound, clear principles. Those who know the principles know, if not what will happen, at least what will not happen, in these conventions.

The Boston convention has put new rivets in the structure called the American Federation of Labor. It has held to the course. The principles are as they were yesterday and the day before and a decade ago. Fifty years have passed and the principles are as they were. Principles do not change. Tactics do.

Unemployment to Fore.

So this convention talked about unemployment and the wonderful thing called "the machine." He who could most surely point down the road to a cure for the devastating efficiency of the machine and for the evils that grow out of its lop-sided control was the one most carefully listened to in this convention.

And so, riding at the head of the list of achievements is the action on unemployment. Nobody says it is final, or that it is perfect; it is the best that could be devised here and now. These columns have recorded the ten-plank platform for long range effectiveness, and the six-plank program for immediate relief during the coming winter. Nothing even began to eclipse those two actions.

The next biggest thing was continuance of the organization campaign. Labor can have no voice except where organized. Labor is going out to get for itself a bigger voice.

Labor Facing Biggest Issues.

It all comes down to the fact that the American trade union movement in this year 1930 is facing bigger issues, more monumental issues, than ever have been faced by any body of men in all the world's history. The flower out of which came the first fruit of invention has at last grown to be a sighing, bending tree full, which is being picked with such inequity as to have shocked the conscience of all who have a conscience and intelligence enough to perceive facts.

The machine was the issue here in a sense perhaps larger than anyone realized. There was the usual routine of resolutions—most of them good, aimed at getting somewhere. There was little debate. In the freest forum the nation knows, men said little, in the face of the biggest issue our time has known. After all, debate is useful only when it clarifies and leads to sound conclusions. The conclusions upon which the convention acted and determined its course seemed grown out of the situation.

Moral Force Marshaled.

One thing is sure, in addition to the definite course laid out. The management of industry and those who do the owning are labelled in a new and more striking way with the word "Responsibility!" Injustice in ownership is in the way of being made a high social crime. This convention pushed much further into the foreground the idea that he who abuses the trust of ownership or direction shall go down the road a pariah—and for politicians the same terrible brand. Those who reflect will know that moral force is the greatest force the world has ever known. Moral force is being marshaled to bring the machine to a justice in service and to bring its abusers to account.

Chapter and verse should be given to support this report. Resolutions should be cited and declarations quoted. Well, earliest reports have done enough of that. Nor do they tell the story adequately. There is often more of revelation in the expression of the faces of people than in what comes out of their mouths. There can be more in the way a hand is waved than in an oration. Men do not always say what they think, but only a few wear the mask of immobile features. There were enough declarations here, enough resolutions and plans. But under these was something much bigger and more important. I am trying to report that more important thing.

Anti-Injunction Fight Goes On.

As to other matters, there were 99 resolutions and a formidable report of the executive council. Ranking next to unemployment came the injunction and the yellow dog contract, handmaidens of oppression. One delegate described and read what he called a "double decker yellow dog contract," binding the father to pay damages should the son violate his yellow dog contract.

The convention voted to continue the fight in the senate for the bill now before that body, sponsored by labor. The fight to procure legislation against the yellow dog contract will go on, with the federation officially back of the bill for which such valiant fights have been made in Ohio, Illinois and California.

To make national defense as free as possible from profiteering influences, the convention voted to favor the construction of naval vessels and munitions in arsenals and navy yards and for the development and upkeep of all such institutions now in operation; and for the adequate compensation of all civilian employes and enlisted personnel.

Political Policy Unchanged.

The non-partisan political policy remains unchanged. An effort to change the basis of making up the records of congressmen failed, after a rather sharp exchange of comment, but the officers are left free to improve the existing system if that can be done.

Further immigration restriction was demanded, border commuting was denounced and a quota for Mexico was urged.

Moreover, the convention expressed itself as unable to understand why the department of labor does not apply the contract labor law to alien musicians, actors and singers, particularly in view of the mechanization of music, with its menace to musicians. Also, the convention denounced the employment of aliens in construction of ships under the Jones-White act.

Aid for Machado Opposed.

One of the last acts of the convention was adoption of a resolution declaring that the United States government should not, either through its diplomacy, through government-approved loans, or otherwise, intervene in Cuba in support of the dictatorship of Machado.

Reaves Manager Of Loveman Shop

W. H. Reaves, proprietor of the Reaves Shoppe, in the First National Bank building, this week assumed the management of Loveman's Beauty parlor, thus becoming operator of two of the leading institutions of this type in the city.

Mr. Reaves is a veteran member of Local 415, Barbers. Seligman & Latz, chain concern with headquarters in New York, who formerly managed the Loveman shop, it is understood, have withdrawn from the local field.

The personnel, for the present, will be Mr. Reaves, Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Bluhm, Mrs. Landers and Miss Stevens. The shop, of course, is and will be "100 per cent. union."

Miss Roselyn Korb, formerly of the Loveman shop, is permanently located at Jolly's Beauty shop, 711½ Market street.

UNION MUSICIANS WIN

Washington.—Union musicians in the nation's capital won their fight against "canned" music. Theater managers in the large picture houses said the musicians "were unneeded and unwanted." The musicians started an educational campaign for living music and the managers accepted a compromise agreement.

Extend Sympathy To A Bereaved Brother

Sincere sympathy is extended to P. S. Wilhoite, member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, by his fellow trades unionists in resolutions adopted following the passing of Mrs. Josie Wilhoite, beloved mother of Brother Wilhoite, which occurred recently at LaFayette, Ga.

The Labor World joins in the spirit of the resolutions adopted by Local 43, as follows, and adds heartfelt condolences to the bereaved brother:

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to her last reward and rest from earthly cares and troubles, the beloved mother of our brother, P. S. Wilhoite, Mrs. Josie Wilhoite, of LaFayette, Ga.; and,

Whereas, this local feels the warmest regard and deepest sympathy for our brother in his great sorrow; be it

Resolved, That the local does hereby extend to Brother Wilhoite our most sincere sympathy and sorrow for his bereavement; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Brother Wilhoite, a copy spread upon our minutes, and a copy sent to The Labor World for publication.

CRY FOR TROOPS AT DANVILLE IS COMPLETE FLOP

Observers for Governor Find Unusual Order.

BOMBING EPISODE BELIEVED A "PLANT"

4,000 Victims of Autocracy Continue to Battle Like True Americans.

(By Staff Correspondent)

Danville, Va., Oct. 23.—Indefensible action on the part of so-called "disinterested" persons in Danville and vicinity to influence state authorities to bring the National Guard into the textile strike controversy here is sharply condemned by union officials and observant citizens of this city.

There is not the slightest shred of reason for troops in the strike area, one citizen expressed himself. Such action would bring disaster in its wake, he said.

It is known that Gov. Pollard, of Virginia, the adjutant-general and other state officials are not in sympathy with the proposal to bring in troops, in view of the almost abnormal peace situation here. The commonwealth attorney of Pittsylvania county, in which Danville is situated, publicly said there had been fewer law violations since the strike pickets had been on the line than before the strike started weeks ago. In a resolution adopted by the executive board of the textile union Sunday last, the position of the union in this respect was reiterated. The resolution further pledged the full influence of the union in preserving order and co-operating with the authorities of the law in keeping the peace.

The only disturbance thus far recorded is the alleged bombing of the home of Jerry Wentz, a company mill overseer. Slight damage was done by the explosion, there being two or three window panes broken. Local police denied a rumor that Wentz was to be arrested charged with doing the "bombing" himself. Union officials who made an independent investigation of the incident said it was evident that the bombing had been done by persons not connected with the organization. The previous arrest of two confessed communists and the presence of a group of others in Danville on various occasions subsequent to the sentencing of the two held in custody, was pointed out as significant. Thus far police have no clues to the perpetrators of the Wentz bombing.

Union officials pointed out that the bombing incident was being used as an excuse for the "necessity" of bringing soldiers to Danville. Another was the "necessity for protection of a $44,000,000 investment" of the company in the mills and equipment here.

Independent investigators of the strike situation here frankly said that the presence of the pickets around both mills, twenty-four hours a day, was the best safeguard for the protection of property that could be devised. The mill pickets were directly responsible for the arrest of the two communist agitators now in the county jail.

The 4,500 workers now on strike are citizens of Danville and the great majority of them have lived here all their lives, and are known as law-abiding citizens. Perhaps 90 per cent of them are church members or churchgoers, and are so recognized. This statement is particularly significant to anyone who knows Danville traditions.

Perhaps there has never been such another industrial strike as the one now on here. Those on strike are citizens known virtually to every other citizen. Women of the churches, regardless of denomination, carry coffee and sandwiches to the picket lines and frequently hold prayer services at the posts because many of those on the line cannot find time to attend church services. Some others contribute a pile of wood that the pickets may keep warm. One member of the board of directors of the mills told the pickets at one gate they could use a shed on his property to shelter them in bad weather or at night. These incidents are examples pointing to the attitude of the public in the strike.

The message delivered by Holt E. J. Ross, representing the American Federation of Labor, to a mass meeting of the workers, in which the moral and financial backing of the trade union movement of America was pledged to the furtherance of the textile organizing campaign, as well as to the general campaign in the south, was the occasion for jubilation among the membership. The loyalty of the strikers is said by old-time federation organizers to be remarkable. There have been fewer than twenty-five defections from the union ranks out of a membership of more than 4,000.

"Our organization is air-tight and stand pat," E. J. Nash, president of the local, said. "We are going to stick until this fight is won."

Detroit Tackles Job of Creating Work for Hundred Thousand Idle

Movement to Aid Unemployed Taking Definite Form Under New Mayor, with Committee of 101 in Charge—Census of Jobless Followed by Various Moves to Provide More Work.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Detroit, Oct. 23.—The movement in this city for the relief of the unemployed during the coming winter is taking definite form under the leadership of Frank Murphy, the new mayor of Detroit. The appointment of a committee of 101 members from every industrial and welfare agency in the city, was followed by the making of a registration of the city's unemployed. Four hundred volunteer workers carried out the task without expense; and approximately 100,000 jobless men and women registered for employment, of whom 20,000 indicated that they were in immediate and urgent need. To prevent the city being made a center for the unemployed elsewhere, it has been announced that only those who have been residents of Detroit for one year or more will be allowed to seek relief through this committee.

Employers are staggering shifts of their employes, to make room for more workers in that direction, while the "odd-jobs" of the city are being organized and classified in such a way as to furnish a steadier employment for those who work at that kind of employment.

Timber Owners Asked to Aid.

Owners of near-by tracts of timbered land are being asked to turn over the wood on their tracts in return for the clearing; and it is proposed to cut the timber into cordwood to be sold in the city, paying the men for the work of cutting and clearing. It is estimated that this will give employment to from 500 to 1,000 men, paying them from $3.50 to $5.00 per day.

There is four million dollars available for a school building program, and it is proposed to extend the limits of the city's bonded indebtedness at the November elections so as to permit the undertaking of extensive city public works and buildings, to add to the available employment. This will add about eighteen million dollars to the possible building plans, and by speeding up should be brought into action early in the winter.

The sub-committee on regularization has begun a line of work which promises to become a permanent contribution to the solution of the problems connected with unemployment, in the stabilization of employment.

Quick Response Given.

Response to the work of the relief committee has been almost instant. Many groups who are having steady employment are making regular and volunteer contributions to the less fortunate. The police department has organized its own branch of the work, and is gathering contributions ranging from $35 monthly from the commissioner to $1 from the patrolmen, totaling over $5,000 monthly. And it is said that other organizations are formulating similar plans.

Among those who are co-operating with the plans of the main committee are such well-known figures in industry and finance as Edsel Ford, Charles T. Fisher, Lawrence P. Fisher, Fred Wardell, Walter P. Chrysler, Alvan Macauley, Standish Backus, DuBois Young, S. Wells Utley, John A. Fry and John L. Lovett.

WORLD COURT MEETS FAVOR

Tennessee Senators Asked to Favor Ratification of United States' Entry.

Entry of the United States into the World Court, which needs only the O. K. of the United States senate, has been approved by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and Circle club, both organizations having passed an identical resolution urging Senators McKellar and Brock to support the protocols when the matter is raised at the coming session of the senate.

Senator McKellar supported a resolution in 1926 favoring U. S. entry, but has not recently made any public statement with respect to his attitude now.

The resolution adopted by the local bodies follows:

"Whereas, the council of the American Federation of Labor has put itself on record 'as favoring the United States' becoming a member of the World Court in accordance with the proposition advanced in the senate;' and,

"Whereas, the form in which the World Court question will next be raised in the senate is the three World Court protocols which have been signed by the United States and which, when ratified by the senate, will complete the adherence of the United States to the World Court; and,

"Whereas, these protocols, according to Secretary Stimson, completely adjust the difficulties anticipated by the senate in the reservations which it attached to its 1926 resolution providing for the entrance of this country into the World Court; and,

"Whereas, the whole question has now remained unsettled for four years; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Chattanooga Trades and Labor council hereby calls upon the senate of the United States to ratify the three World Court protocols at the coming session of the senate, opening in December; and be it further

"Resolved, That the senators from Tennessee, Mr. McKellar, who voted for the 1926 resolution providing for our adherence to the World Court, and Mr. Brock, be urged to do everything in their power to further the ratification of these protocols at the coming session of the senate."

Harry R. Fitzgerald, president of the company, still maintains a ghastly silence. Union officers directly charge that the presence of communists and other outside agitators in Danville is due to Fitzgerald's refusal to treat with his old employes, many of whom had been in his service for twenty-five to forty years, thus leaving an opening for an element to preach its destructive doctrines to the weak. One well-known communist, Dewey Martin by name, had been an employe of the Dan River mill until his communistic activities were shown up by mill workers who were trade unionists.

The workers are virtually 100 per cent organized, and thus far no strikebreakers have been permitted to enter the mills, although the injunction decree against the union workers was not dissolved and is still in force.

MARK PASSING OF 20 YEARS

Moving Picture Projectionists Celebrate Twentieth Anniversary of Local.

Twentieth anniversary of the formation of Local 259, Moving Picture Projectionists, was fittingly observed last Friday night, beginning at 11:30 o'clock, at Hotel Patten.

The grill room at the local hostelry had been lavishly decorated by a special committee, and when Toastmaster A. C. Kamin rapped for order the stage was set for an evening (and morning) of hilarity for which these local unionists have become noted throughout the south. Out-of-town guests included officers and members from sister unions in Atlanta, Mobile, Jacksonville and other cities.

W. P. Raoul, southern representative of the International Alliance, was the guest of honor, pinch-hitting for President Canavan, who was attending the American Federation of Labor convention at Boston. Mr. Raoul explained President Canavan's unavoidable absence, and stated the annual banquet of No. 259 was the only occasion of that character where the presence of an international representative was always considered mandatory. He congratulated the local union upon its progress, and declared that its business had been conducted always upon a high plane. Mr. Raoul's remarks constituted the only serious business of the occasion. Entertainment features, led by Jimmie Cox and his Collegians, were many and varied, and there was not a dull moment from the time the festivities were opened until the finish of the program.

The banquet committee consisted of W. C. Belcher, J. Burson Lowry, John Blanton, C. E. Curle and Felix Hamil.

W. H. Brown Wins Suit Against City

W. H. "Bill" Brown, old-timer in the work of Local 140, Stage Employes, last Saturday received word that the supreme court had affirmed an opinion given by Judge Neal Thompson, Chattanooga member of the court of appeals, granting damages against the city of Chattanooga as the result of an accident at the Memorial auditorium on Dec. 27, 1927, when Mr. Brown fell through an elevator shaft and was severely injured. At the time of the mishap Mr. Brown was employed by the Broadway Players, a stock company then appearing in the Little Theater at the Memorial. Judge Joe V. Williams was attorney for the plaintiff.

LAWYERS' "UNION" MAY OUST CROOKS

Boston.—A plea that the local Bar Association purge itself of crooked lawyers was made by Herbert Parker, president of that organization. He stressed the responsibility of organized lawyers in protecting the public from faithless members of the legal profession "who deceive and defraud those who most need the protection of honest lawyers."

BOSSES' UNION PESSIMISTIC AS WORKERS GAIN

"Open Shop" Committee Sheds Bitter Tears.

LABOR GETS JUSTICE; EMPLOYERS PEEVED

President Green Declares N. A. M. Report Is Confession of Defeat.

By WILLIAM GREEN
President, American Federation of Labor.

The officers and members of the American Federation of Labor have read the report of the so-called "open shop" committee of the National Association of Manufacturers which was released for publication a short time ago. The dominant note of this report is one of pessimism. This is particularly true from the standpoint of anti-union employers.

The committee refers to as very discouraging the growing tendency of large and national chain systems stores, hotels, etc., to require all building work to be done on a union basis or, as the committee insists on calling it, the "closed shop" basis. Evidently the manufacturers' association is disappointed because many fair contractors and individual owners are declining to aid the manufacturers' association anti-union movement. They criticize employers outside the building industry who are no longer willing to assist in developing an anti-union sentiment.

The so-called "open shop" committee of the manufacturers' association is composed of large anti-union employers who indicate their deep concern over the United States supreme court's decision in the case of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks versus the Texas & New Orleans Railroad. In that important decision, the court denied the railroad company's right to set up a company union that was being used as a subterfuge and as an excuse for withholding recognition to the representatives of the members of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks as provided for by law. The supreme court declared in this case that collective bargaining through company unions can only be regarded as a mockery.

The so-called "open shop" committee of the National Association of Manufacturers is manifestly worried over this decision. It fully realizes the seriousness of the blow which was dealt company unions and the "yellow dog" contract procedure through the decision of the supreme court. It is most interesting to observe that the committee refers to this decision as a "disturbing portent" and makes this significant statement:

"It may be well that the railway executives who in 1926 supported the Watson-Parker act will, as a result of the 1930 decision of the United States supreme court, have subsequent cause to regret advocacy of provisions which may impair, if not destroy, the development of harmonious management-employe co-operation in the shop crafts and other non-operating branches of the railway industry."

In pessimistic tones they announce that railway managements will regret advocating a law which may impair and even destroy their company union. The Watson-Parker act provides in effect that railroad management shall recognize representatives of employes. The law makes no exception. It applies to all workers and because of this open shop employers object. The court decision serves as a barrier against their policy of setting up under their supervision and control company unions as a substitute for legitimate labor organizations. While the open-shop committee of the manufacturers' association states that the supreme court decision "may impair, if not destroy" their company union, the representatives of labor declare there is no "may" regarding the ultimate destruction of the company union. Such an organization cannot exist among free men. Neither the workers nor their friends will permit employers to dictate who shall sit on both sides of the conference table. Working men and women will continue to insist on the exercise of their right to select their own representatives. They will demand full approval of this position by the congress of the United States. The decision of the supreme court points the way. The attention of working men and women and their friends throughout the nation is directed to this report, because it was signed and prepared by those who are leaders of the anti-union movement of our country. The jubilation which they manifested during by-gone days is entirely missing. They seem to be quite apprehensive over present-day trends and tendencies. Reading between the lines we can readily understand that these anti-union representatives are advising their associates that old methods are failing and that the public is beginning to understand the value and the purpose of organized labor.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1930.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

We live and learn.

Now comes John W. Barton, who is vice-president and a bank in Minneapolis, stating to a business convention in Cleveland that our standards of living are too high.

All along we had thought they were not high enough.

But Mr. Barton is a vice-president of a bank and he ought to know.

Yes, he ought to know better!

To be sure, nobody has ever yet settled the question of how much a bank vice-president ought to know. Some bank vice-presidents are very important personages; others are little more than glorified clerks and messengers.

When a bank has a vice-president loose in the country it ought to send him a certificate of intelligence and capacity.

Vice-President Barton says our standards of living are too high.

That is something, until we find out what he means by "our" and "us" and "we."

If he means the standard of living of bank vice-presidents we can make it to the other vice-presidents to tell him where he gets off.

Lots of them could stand a raise and still not get very fat.

Some get altogether too much by any standards.

John W. Barton doesn't say whose standards are too high. Surely he can't mean the standard of living "enjoyed" by the more than 20,000 men, women and children in North Carolina who have pellagra because they can't get enough to eat.

Surely John W. Barton can't mean that the 5,000,000—or whatever number there are—of unemployed are living too high.

Surely this bank vice-president can't mean that the members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union were hard striking in New York against intolerable conditions are living too high.

Surely he can't mean that the employes of the Reynolds Tobacco company, many of whom get less than $10 a week, are living too high.

Surely he can't mean that the boot and shoe workers of Massachusetts are living too high—when they have no job at all.

And he can't mean that the women who run the sweatshops that make Owl pants in Newark, N. J., are living too high. Why, a long ago they had to close because they couldn't stand the pressure any longer.

Surely John W. Barton can't mean the great army of men and women who make more than $20 a week are living too high.

Well, what can he possibly mean?

Mr. Barton says we are trying to hold our standards up in the face of pressure from Europe, where standards are lower. Quite true; we are. He thinks that is wrong.

Well, all right.

Where would Mr. Barton start reducing of living standards?

If he starts at the bottom with the people who are now on the ragged edge of poverty, he will have a large body of unemployed on his hands.

If he starts at the top with the bankers, industrialists and financiers, he will have a job on his hands that he is taking a holiday.

Can he mean that?

Can he possibly mean that he can go about telling the public

WILL PRESS WAGE PLAN

The A. F. of L. convention in Boston indicated labor's determination to press its high-wage principle. A quarter of a century ago the A. F. of L. convention at Norfolk declared that low wages do not shorten business depressions; they have a contrary effect. This declaration was made when low wages were supposed to reduce costs and high wages were considered an additional tax on the people. The Norfolk declaration was elaborated at the Atlantic City convention and is now emphasized at Boston.

Labor's rejection of the low-wage economist's theory and popular acceptance of a new outlook is one of the most significant reversals of our economic history. The new viewpoint—that living standards must continually go upward—was favored by President Hoover in his address to the Boston convention.

Workers must understand the two theories that are opposite as the poles. It is impossible to accept labor's position and at the same time be satisfied with what today is known as "a living wage." If wages are based on sheer necessities the doctrine of "contented" workers is logical. If wages are based on labor's new wage doctrine the "contented" laborer is replaced by workers who insist on more equitable divisions of created wealth.

This question reaches into every activity of life. If a worker is contented in the factory he is contented in every activity of life. He protests against no injustice.

The effect of labor's wage philosophy is not confined within factory walls. It reaches into every avenue of life because of the effect that intelligent dissatisfaction has on man's spiritual powers. Labor's wage philosophy leads to greater diffusion of wealth, fewer depressions, and the development of independent, intelligent, aggressive workers.

The low-wage policy centralizes wealth and fosters a dependent spirit among workers. There is inspiration and certainty in labor's position. Every element of autocracy and stand-patism is found in the old theory.

TOWARD SHORTER WORK-DAY.

The American Federation of Labor has been talking about the shorter work-day and work-week. It has come out flatly for the five-day week. It did not set up the five-hour day as an immediate and definite goal.

But the federation convention did boldly mark out a policy that must lead to drastic action toward reducing the number of hours in the work-day.

The executive council is given the task of making a profound study of the question, reporting to the next convention. This is progress.

Every shortening of the hours of work thus far achieved has been through organized labor. It will continue so. But, whereas in earlier years human health and welfare was the main driving cause, today the machine has come into the situation to add a new and powerful argument for reduction of hours.

The executive council has before it a big job. Unemployment tells us something must be done. To do the adequate thing is labor's job. To act with wisdom is as necessary as to act effectively.

The United States bureau of mines says [illegible] safety is good business and [illegible] prevent it in any industry [illegible] many times. The [illegible] shows that loss of life and [illegible] destruction of property are not the only costs. Many extra [illegible] go through the disorganization of reasonably running departments.

"Wise business men who are not [illegible] safety should keep the [illegible] in mind. They [illegible] costs because of their regard for [illegible] life and limb.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—How can the non-partisan political policy of the American labor movement be stated in brief form?

A.—"Stand faithfully by our friends and elect them. Oppose our enemies and defeat them; whether they be candidates for president, for congress, or other offices; whether executive, legislative or judicial."

Q.—What was the gain in membership reported at the Boston convention of the American Federation of Labor?

A.—27,551 paid members.

Q.—What state employs the most men in the quarrying industry?

A.—Pennsylvania, which employed 14,487 men, according to the last report.

Women-Child Labor Harms Cotton Trade

Boston.—Miss Matilda Lindsay, in her address to the A. F. of L. convention, quoted a large cotton manufacturer to sustain her story of women and child exploitation in southern textile mills. Miss Lindsey spoke as fraternal delegate from the national women's trade union league.

The manufacturer is E. E. Whitman, who stated in an address to the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers: "Every destructive force that is bearing down on us, if traced to its source, leads directly to the exploitation of women and children in our mills. The growth of this unfair and selfish utilization of women and children through night employment in southern cotton mills, is directly the cause of the downfall of this essential industry."

Text—"By the grace of God, I am what I am."—I Cor. 15:10.

Real Psalm 51.

In the very beginning of His ministry in the spring of 27 A. D., Jesus gathered about Him a small group of men to whom He entrusted the task of carrying on His work when His earthly life might come to an end. He knew intimately every one of this group. He knew also they would have to work in a world fraught with unending dangers and trials. Yet, for the most part, the twelve men Jesus chose to be His disciples were everyday sort of folk. To these lowly fishermen was given the greatest task ever given to a group of men, the Master asking only one thing of them, that they be true to their mission. Through His association with them for three years He had tried to teach them by precept and personal example to simplify their lives by laying aside all artificiality, hypocrisy and deceit and meeting the world as the men they were and as God had made them. In our text for this week Paul says, "By the grace of God, I am what I am." In other words, "God made me what in His infinite wisdom He wanted me to be and I have no quarrel with myself because of it." God made him Paul, and he was happy because He did, therefore this same Paul was going to treasure his ability and use it gladly to make better his day and those about him. God had called him to preach, therefore preach he would, and preach he did, as probably no mortal since has ever done! How? By pretending to be some great Mr. Somebody Else? No! Simply as Paul—and nobody else but Paul!—and God has quickened his words with the very Spirit of Life until, like the ever-widening ripple in the water where a stone has been tossed, his Epistles have become known and read to the uttermost bounds of civilization.

The Lesson for Us.

We have only ourselves and the varying situations into which we are thrown to make life out of. We certainly cannot control every situation in life, but we do have it within our power to adjust ourselves and meet life as it comes. The problem of life management is largely self-management. What we are so quick to term "unhappy circumstances" in life and grow peevish and abusive about is simply the projection into our circumstances of an unhappy frame of mind. The first task of every man in attempting to come to terms with the world is to come to terms with himself—to look inward and see himself as he really is and leave off all sham and make-believe when he looks at himself. Every man sees within himself what no other man can see—an unpublished self he alone understands and knows best. He is better than any man knows. This knowledge gives him courage, self-respect and satisfaction. No matter what the world is about him this much he knows: God made only one of his kind when He made him . . . no other can be like him. When a man reaches this point in his thinking he has taken the first step toward self-acceptance—he is beginning to get along with himself, and when a man can get along with this inner self he can get along with most everybody else and make the best of nearly every variety of circumstances. Accepting ourselves for what we really are does not mean sad resignation to our circumstances in life. It means a belief in ourselves—a confession before the world that we want to make something of ourselves that is eminently worth while. This willingness to place a true self-valuation upon ourselves is the essential step toward success in life. The really successful man believes there is a work for him to do, some place for him to fill—and then he proceeds to do that work and fill that place! But before he can do either, he must come to terms with himself—he must accept himself as he really is—and basic self-acceptance is a quiet, calm, unshaken confidence in one's own integrity and endeavors.

Now take these fellows Jones and Gulley, of the Elevator Constructors. Always liked those birds. But no more. Gonna have 'em both arrested for official oppression. It was this way: Went over to the James building the other day, on a perfectly lawful mission. Started to board an elevator, when the good union brothers named—showing as much authority as is given to a captain on a ship at sea—stepped in front of me and majestically waved me over to another car. Which would have been all right if the car they forced me to board hadn't been the freight elevator. As the door closed I thought—I'm not quite sure—I heard a nasty laugh outside. Anyhow, it was a dirty trick. Don't care for those birds any more.

Went over to the WDOD studio the other night to hold George Forbes' hand while he delivered the masterful address on the Community Chest which made him famous overnight. After the main business of the evening was completed, Messrs. Frank S. Lane, station director, and Arch McDonald, of the advertising department, took us under their wings and courteously explained all about the operation of a radio station. Incidentally, Mr. Lane said the Chattanooga station has been heard in all portions of the United States and Canada. On one occasion, he said, the local program was enjoyed by the passengers on a ship 400 miles at sea off the coast of Washington state. The studio operation was a revelation to us, and now George and me know more about radio than Handsome Hal Brown. And if I ever find some dealer who will trust me for the payments on a set, I'll anyhow know what makes the wheels go 'round, before they get the aerial up.

Sons and Daughters at School may not have Time to Write

But they do have time to telephone... and it's such a pleasure to hear their voices.

There are so many things to do... so little time to write. Even to Mother and Dad.

But telephoning--that's different. It's quick. It's inexpensive. And personal. There are a lot of things that are easy to talk about, but hard to write...

Why not have a regular chat with your boy and girl, just as you do when they are home? Say, twice a week... Wednesdays and Sundays. If you wish, you can have them telephone you and "reverse" the charges, which will be placed on your monthly bill.

Your telephone is your pathway to the world--to friends in distant cities, to the "folks back home," to sons and daughters in other towns.

Telephoning out of town costs little. To most places 25 miles away, the day station-to-station rate is about 25 cents; 75 miles, 30 cents; 150 miles away, 80 cents. Where the station-to-station day rate is more than 35 cents the rates are lower during the evening and night periods.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

Women's Bureau Head Denounces Efficiency at Worker's Expense

What Profits It a Nation to Evolve Mechanized System That Destroys Spirit and Good Will of Wage Earners, Miss Anderson Asks, in Assailing Industrial Methods That Inflict Wage Losses and Deprive Toilers of Jobs.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Oct. 23.—"Machines don't wear shoes nor buy cars," said Miss Mary Anderson, director of the United States women's oureau, in an address to the national convention of the industrial engineers in session at Washington, referring to the progress made in machine efficiency. "What profits it a nation to evolve a mechanized industrial civilization if such a creation becomes a force tending to destroy the spirit and good will of the workers?" was Miss Anderson's challenging question, "since such order results both in loss of satisfactory laborers to turn the wheels of industry and in a shrinkage of markets to consume the products?"

"It is more difficult to control and adjust men than machines, to analyze and anticipate human behavior than mechanical performance," Miss Anderson said.

Where Are We Going?

"No one knows where we are going in these days of efficiency changes. There are more shoes, more clothes, more automobiles, more radios, and fewer buyers. Machines don't wear shoes nor buy cars, and workers are becoming fewer in factories and workshops through the growing efficiency of machines.

"What becomes of discarded workers? Do new industries employ them or do they join the army of the unemployed? It is the province of the women's bureau to study and collect facts on this human side of industry, to indicate, if possible, the way we are going and what are the best industrial methods that combine efficient methods of work with wise and humane standards."

The recent movement on the part of industrial leaders to develop improved procedures for the understanding and advancing of human relations has still a long way to go to overtake the efficient methods found in the purely mechanical field, in Miss Anderson's opinion.

Hits Exploitation of Workers.

She cautioned against systems that goad workers beyond a certain limit, pointing out that then so-called efficiency causes deficiency and must be placed in the liability column in the balancing of accounts.

The method of permitting workers to bear the brunt of sudden installation of new type of machinery by requiring them to suffer wage losses which inevitably result during the adjustment period, she denounced as an injustice not infrequently met with in industry.

Another system to be disparaged, she said, is that of trying out piece and time rates on the basis of the fastest rather than the average worker, since such performance tends to drive employes to the utmost and brings about undue fatigue and ill health.

Higher Postal Rates Rest on Shaky Ground

Baltimore. — Postmaster-General Brown's plea for higher first-class postal rates to defray the cost of this service rests on "shaky ground," says the Baltimore Sun.

Mr. Brown recently stated that "there is no more logic and justification in asking the government to transport your private mail for less than cost than there would be in asking an electric light company to light your house for less than cost."

"In both of these contentions," says the Baltimore Sun, "Postmaster-General Brown is on shaky ground. The analogy between the postal service and a private enterprise is basically faulty, and even if it were conceded that the postoffice department should be managed on the principles applicable to private business it is by no means established that the government is losing money on the first-class postal service.

"By any method of allocating costs of postal service that is feasible from an accounting point of view, and does not involve a wide degree of speculation, the first-class postal service is shown to be operating not at a loss but at a very handsome profit.

"Until Postmaster-General Brown demonstrates that the government is actually losing money on the first-class postal service by recourse to something other than a profession of faith in a tenuous economic theory, his recommendation of higher rates for this service hasn't a leg to stand on."

People Should Aid Labor's Long Fight

Boston. — The American people should awaken to the work of organized labor and should wholeheartedly aid that outstanding humanitarian movement, declared Mayor Curley in his welcome to the A. F. of L. convention.

The mayor said he recently called a meeting of the presidents of 35 universities in this state to discuss unemployment. Every invitation was accepted.

"I reminded these educators," said the city executive, "that organized labor is the one institution that stands for social advance and that in the present economic situation it is the one institution that has, as it always has, a constructive program. I said the trade union movement has secured social gains for all the people, despite opposition of powerful interests and even despite the opposition of workers themselves, and that it was time that organized labor was relieved of the burden of carrying on this struggle unaided, and that the things they urged benefited the nation and should, therefore, be actively supported by every thoughtful citizen."

Great Britain's Trade Is in Serious Stage

Washington.—A gloomy picture of British economic conditions is painted by the department of commerce in its survey of world business.

Trade conditions in Britain have reached "a nearly critical stage" and the outlook is characterized by a considerable want of confidence, is the department cautious comment.

It is anticipated that funds provided for insurance against unemployment will be exhausted six or seven months sooner than intended, with probability of extra burdens on the national treasury. The government has voted large sums to supplement the regular contributions of employers and employes. These funds are being rapidly reduced because of growing unemployment.

The French outlook is also pessimistic and Canada expects little improvement before late fall.

The Ghandi revolt in India has paralyzed economic activities in that country and many business failures are imminent.

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

Unemployed Worker Must Smile When Urged to "Spend Money"

—United States Senator Wagner.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 23.—"The unemployed worker must ironically smile when he reads the well meaning advice extended to him that prosperity will return if he only resumes his normal purchases," said United States Senator Wagner, of New York, in an address to the A. F. of L. convention.

The speaker also scored the labor injunction which renders inoperative trade union functions.

"Where," he asked, discussing unemployment, "is the worker who has not run the gauntlet of loss of work because of seasonal slack, of periodic depression, of foreign competition, of change in fashion, of machine substitution?

"I wonder what his emotion is when he reads the official assurance that our fundamental national assets are undiminished. He knows only too well that he lives in a land of plenty which he had in the past shared in the making and these facts only aggravate the rancor in his heart that he must, nevertheless, go without work and without wages."

Senator Wagner asserted the American people will not "submissively accept these recurrent and lengthening periods of joblessness. They have learned that they cannot live by optimism alone."

He criticized "our public men who have with much satisfaction repeated their own praises for having fended off the dole from the American people."

"Have we, in fact, kept the dole from America?" he asked. "Is not the dole today in use in every industrial community in the country? What else can you call the disbursements for unemployment relief by every charitable organizaation and by many municipalities?"

Turning to the labor injunction, Senator Wagner said: "After 30 years' agitation against the equity process in labor disputes the distance we have traveled is too short to be measured.

"Throughout the United States there are today numerous mandated territories where, to all intents and purposes, the constitution has been amended, local law superseded and the only government code is the injunctive edict of a federal or state court."

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union-made goods and service.

Filipino Barrier Urged by Workers

Boston.—Immediate and favorable action by congress on a bill that would bar Filipinos was called for by the A. F. of L. convention.

A bill to this effect, introduced by Congressman Welch, of California, is pending in congress, and has been approved by the two last conventions. The resolution was signed by a score of Pacific Coast delegates.

"The Filipino," the resolution stated, "is racially unassimilable and will, therefore, add to the race problem that is vexing this country. There has already developed a condition of social concern culminating in tragical race riots due to desires of Filipinos to transgress upon the sanctity of our women in their forced efforts to assimilate."

Ship owners, in their desire to sell transportation, are using every kind of propaganda to lure Filipinos to this country. the resolution states.

Unscrupulous employers are destroying living standards with this cheap labor, that is also affecting the health of west coast citizens.

"YELLOW DOG" CONTRACT HELD INVALID AND INJUNCTION DENIED OREGON FIRM

(By International Labor News Service.)

Portland, Ore., Oct. 23.—Circuit Judge Walter H. Evans has rendered an opinion holding the yellow dog contract invalid. In the case of the Ice Delivery Company vs. Frank Irons an injunction is denied to the company.

The Ice Delivery company is a merger of several ice companies. Irons had been employed as a deliveryman for several years in a certain district of the city. After the merger he was forced to sign a contract forfeiting his rights as to accepting employment from any competing firm and, without naming the union, making possible his discharge if he did join a union.

Last May Irons became a member of the Drivers' union and two days later was discharged by the company. He obtained employment with another firm to work in his old territory and the Ice Delivery company sought an injunction. A temporary restraining order was asked, but when Irons' attorney, B. A. Green, advised his client to disregard any such order, the plaintiff company declined to press for enforcement of the temporary order.

In rendering his decision, Judge Evans held that the evidence clearly showed that Irons was discharged for joining the union. The court also held that there was no adequate consideration in the contract for Irons' surrender of rights. This ruling is important because the company had sought to protect itself by inserting in the contract a provision that in case the employe was discharged he should be paid ten dollars as a consideration for his signing the yellow dog contract. Irons had been paid and had accepted ten dollars, but the court held that the small sum was only a subterfuge attempting to legalize an otherwise illegal contract. The court held "that to grant an injunction in this suit would be under the circumstances inequitable and would be granting relief under a contract, when considered with all the surrounding circumstances, which was and is unconscionable."

This is the first case in an Oregon contract in which the yellow dog contract has been squarely an issue. The decision is expected to stimulate the organization campaign which the Brotherhood of Teamsters is conducting throughout the state under the direction of Organizer C. M. Dahlager.

MORE ABOUT

BOSSES' UNION

Organization of labor is inevitable. As employes in unorganized plants realize the hollowness and ineffectiveness of the company union and as they associate themselves with organized labor, these open shop employers, faced by the logic of events, must accept the inevitable.

The report of the open shop committee of the National Association of Manufacturers is a confession of defeat. The historical opposition to organized labor by both men and institutions has failed. Many of them have found it necessary to abandon such opposition. I venture the prophecy that the pessimistic note of our ineffective opponents will be sounded over and over again, just in proportion as labor continues its policy of time tried trade unionism.

PENSIONS SUGGESTED FOR FEVER CARRIERS

Trenton, N. J.—Pensions or maintenance in a proper institution should be provided for persons who are typhoid fever carriers and for that reason are unable to obtain employment, the state department of health suggests.

The state has thirty-six known typhoid carriers. The occupation and residence of each is checked at least once a year by local health authorities. These persons are denied, by health laws and regulations, the opportunity of earning a living by handling food for sale or distribution.

PREFERENCE URGED FOR U. S. WORKERS

Washington.—Preference to American citizens and ex-service men on federal construction work was urged by Congressman Bacon of New York.

The lawmaker, in a memorandum to President Hoover, said that the employment of cheap labor is undesirable.

FEWER BUILDING PERMITS.

Washington.—There was a decrease of 16.2 per cent in the estimated cost of buildings for which permits were issued in August, as compared with July.

These figures, issued by the United States bureau of labor statistics, are based on reports from 291 comparable cities.

Car Building Program To Aid B. & O. Shopmen

Work for Many Men to Be Provided by Decision of Directors to Build 2,000 Cars for Freight Service.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 23.—By the authority of the board of directors at its recent meeting, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company is undertaking a car building program in anticipation of future requirements and with the desire to provide employment for men, whose service would not otherwise be required during the fall and winter.

The program calls for construction of 1,000 steel box cars and 1,000 heavy service gondola cars at a total cost estimated at $4,000,000. It is understood that the work will be done in the Baltimore & Ohio shops or by manufacturers who will engage Baltimore & Ohio employes. One-half of the work will be done at Baltimore and the other half at shops along the line of the railroad.

It is estimated that in the erection shops alone this work will give some 60,000 or 70,000 man-days employment. This will not only provide work for Baltimore & Ohio employes, but a large amount of steel and other material used in the construction of these 2,000 cars will contribute to employment in other industries.

In view of the general decline of freight traffic at the present time and the fact that the Baltimore & Ohio, as well as other carriers, has a large surplus of equipment this action on the part of the directors of the Baltimore & Ohio in now undertaking the construction of 2,000 additional cars evidences their confidence in the future.

CHILD HEALTH SUFFERS IN RAINLESS DISTRICTS

Washington.—Infant mortality may show an increase in drouth-stricken areas, says the United States children's bureau.

The drouth, accompanied by heat, has caused quantities of milk to sour more readily, has dried up streams and caused a pollution of water in many places, thus resulting in sickness and the spread of disease. Cows have been forced to eat poison herbs which in instances have poisoned the milk.

BIRTH RATE DROPS.

Washington.—"The birth rate in this country has steadily decreased since 1915, when comparable statistics first became available," says the United States public health service.

"The average annual birth rate for five years from 1915 to 1919 was 24.3 per 1,000 population, but dropped to 20.2 per 1,000 during the period from 1925 to 1929. The birth rate for the calendar year 1929 was 18.8 per 1,000."

Pequot Mills Hope To See Higher Wages

Representative Tells A. F. of L. Convention Manufacturers Desire to Have Pay Scale Raised in Low Wage Sections.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, Oct. 23.—"The cotton industry in this section of the country pays higher wages than are paid in the industry in other sections," declared Agent J. Foster Smith, of Pequot Mills, Salem, at the convention of the American Federation of Labor.

"We want to see those higher wages maintained. We do not want to see lower wages. What we hope is to see higher wages in those sections of the country where they are now competing with us with much lower production costs, due in no small measure to much lower wages than ours," he continued.

"Pequot mills has the unique distinction of being the first cotton mills in the country, if not in the world, to put into effect, with the co-operation of organized labor, a plan to reduce production costs and with the reduction of production costs, to increase wages," Smith said. "Pequot sheets, as you know, are the only 100 per cent union made sheets in the country.

"The existing agreement between the United Textile Workers' union and the management at the Pequot mills puts into effect a labor extension plan increasing wages, reducing production costs and relieving skilled employes of unskilled work.

"This adoption of improved manufacturing methods came after more more than a year of study and research carried on by representatives of the workers in co-operation with a technician and the management."

LAWS LIMITING OIL PRODUCTION UPHELD

Oklahoma City.—Restriction of oil output, enforced by the state corporation commission, is legal, according to ruling by three federal district judges.

The complaining oil company asked for an injunction against the commission, but every claim was swept aside. Texas and other oil producing states are also limiting oil output.

STRIKE EVICTIONS BEGIN

CENTRAL BODY DELEGATES HEAR ANEW DRAMATIC STORY OF HOW HORTON SOLDIERS BROKE STRIKE

State Labor Official Delivers Eloquent Address.

Declares He Was Born and Reared a Democrat, But Holds Citizenship Above Party Affiliation—Chrisman, DeLong Also Speak.

"I was born and reared a democrat; am the son of one who gave his life to the cause of the confederacy; I believe in democratic principles, but I believe my duty as a citizen takes precedence over that to any political party, and if I live until Nov. 4 I most certainly will cast my vote against Gov. Henry H. Horton."

Thus did Hollis V. Reid, Memphis railroad fireman, legislative representative of his brotherhood in the senate, and chairman for many years of the nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Rail Brotherhoods, climax one of the best addresses of his career before Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night.

Mr. Reid, known personally to hundreds of local trades unionists, and known to thousands more throughout the state for his intense interest in the labor movement as a whole and his keen insight into the relation of political affairs thereto, had no set speech to deliver. Speaking barely above a conversational tone, he expressed deep conviction in his every sentence, and it appeared to be an unanimous opinion that his message was one of the most effective which local workers have heard in many moons.

"I remember the time," he said, "when politics was not discussed on the floors of union organizations. Years ago, however, the American Federation of Labor and the Rail Brotherhoods censed the political alignments against the masses of the people, and our members have on many occasions been forced to leave the parties of their choice to protect their economic interests.

"Hide-bound partyism has become very rare. Even in the United States senate divisions have come which have obliterated all trace of party lines. There has not been a partisan vote in the United States senate in the last six years."

Mr. Reid pointed out the outstanding leaders in the senate and congress of the United States, instancing many battles of the past several years, in which progressive republicans have repeatedly stood shoulder to shoulder with forward-looking democrats in defense of the rights of the masses against the forces of reaction and greed.

The speaker referred to several places in Tennessee where one or the other of the major parties had attempted to force objectionable candidates down the throats of the workers. He recalled the case of Gov. Roberts, one of Labor's bitterest enemies, whose administration was lauded by his party and protests of democratic trades unionists were ignored. Mr. Reid "pointed with pride" to the avalanche of votes which consigned Roberts to political oblivion and elected "Uncle Alf" Taylor, a loyal friend of the masses.

"In 1924," he continued, "the national conventions of the two major parties gave the voice of the workers no heed, and our labor organizations were forced out of both. We then turned to Bob La Follette, and many of us gave our votes to one of the greatest commoners who ever graced the legislative halls of this country. I had the honor of being chairman for that campaign, and have often thought that if called upon to write my own epitaph, I would have inscribed upon my gravestone:

"'He managed La Follette's campaign in Tennessee!'"

"And now about Gov. Horton. I feel that it is futile to recall to the company of trades unionists the specific details of the administration of this man. He has never been a friend of the workers. Some of you may be able to forget Elizabethton, but none of the many who were on the scene of that greatest tragedy in the history of our fair state can fail to have its nauseating picture burned deeply into their hearts and minds.

"Sons and daughters of Carter county, which had a 100 per cent. record for enlistments during the war to make the world safe for democracy, striking in peaceful protest against an autocracy equaling that for which many had paid the supreme sacrifice to destroy from the face of the earth, found the military of their own beloved state, under orders of Horton, doing the bidding, it appeared, of German capitalists who owned the great rayon mills.

"Delegates to the Tennessee Federation of Labor, which held a one-day session in the stricken town, marched through the streets in parade, with the line of march lined by state troops with fixed bayonets. On top and surrounding the great silent mill buildings were placed at intervals machine-guns, for 'protection' against these peaceful protesting mountaineers, 100 per cent. Americans.

"On another day an army truck, loaded with strikebreakers herded by Tennessee soldiers for the mill-owners, was ordered to run down a frail young girl who barred the road. Most any of the stalwart militiamen could have lifted this child in his arms and carried her away, but the order was given to run over her—and she lay in a hospital for many weeks as a result.

"For 'gallantry under fire,' or something, we are informed that the commander of the Elizabethton expeditionary forces was later presented by the governor with a 'President Eight,' a gift of the taxpayers of the state.

"Shall we forget those things so soon, and be led away from the main issue by a hollow appeal to partyism? I don't think so."

Speaking of Arthur Bruce, Mr. Reid said: "Now what manner of man is Arthur Bruce? Personally, I have known him but a short time, but his record for business achievement stands for itself. And he has freely and frankly said to your committee that he whole-heartedly favors many of the major issues for which we have battled for years. It is my opinion, based upon many years of experience, that Mr. Bruce will prove to be fair-minded on our program, and that none of us will have cause to regret our support of him."

W. A. Chrisman, Memphis, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, followed Mr. Reid and expressed identical sentiment with reference to Horton's administration. Mr. Chrisman is also a member of the state nonpartisan committee.

M. T. DeLong, local fireman and honorary life member of Central Body, was also present and made a happy speech in which he added his word concerning Elizabethton and the present administration in general.

Each of the three speakers is a lifelong democrat, having left their party only when its leaders forced them out.

Aside from the address delivered by the three staunch trades unionists, Monday night's regular meeting was featureless.

UNEMPLOYMENT COUNCIL FORMED DIRECTION CHAMBER COMMERCE

First meeting of an Unemployment Council named by President Sanford Bennett, of the Chamber of Commerce, was held Thursday afternoon, at which members of the council, representative of a wide range of activities, heard proposals and recommendations for concerted action toward the relief of local jobless.

The movement, in principle, is in line with recommendations of the American Federation of Labor at the Boston convention this month. Details of the plans adopted are to be worked out by an executive committee, together with various sub-committees.

The program provides for an appeal to property owners to arrange all possible repairs immediately, including manufacturing plants, business houses and private homes. The federal government will be appealed to to begin work immediately on the new postoffice. City and county governments are called upon to speed up public works; industrial leaders and public utilities are urged to provide work for every man possible. Publicity for the campaign will be given through newspapers, the radio and other mediums. Civic clubs and other organizations will be visited by speakers. Ministers throughout the city will be requested to announce the campaign from their pulpits. A special committee is named to "call meetings of the architects' association, building contractors' association, sub-contractors, building supply and material dealers, finance companies and other interests directly or indirectly concerned with this campaign, urging them to make known to the public any special terms or deferred payments that they may offer as a special inducement during the next sixty days to stimulate building and repair work and to assist the home owner who is not able to pay cash."

The plans adopted also provide that:

"The council will establish a clearing house at the Chamber of Commerce to which all requests for work to be done will be referred, and by which they will be classified and co-ordinated."

Cigarette Wage Averages $15.87, U.S. Survey Shows

Industry on 50-Hour Week, Bureau of Labor Statistics Reveals—North Carolina Wages Lowest.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Oct. 30. — Average wages in the cigarette industry of the United States, mostly unorganized, are a little less than $16 a week, the United States bureau of labor statistics discloses, making public the results of a survey for the fiscal year ended June 30.

Figures were secured on the earnings of 6,187 men and 8,079 women. The survey covered workers in all branches of the industry. The average work week was found to be 49.9 hours. Men earned an average of 18.86 per week, while women earned an average of $13.37, the average for all having been $15.87.

Millions in Revenue

Simultaneously Eugene R. Black, governor of the federal reserve bank of Atlanta, expanding upon the wealth of the south in an article in the United States Daily, said that the internal revenue paid by North Carolina exceeds that paid by any other state except New York, having paid $250,000,000 in internal revenue last year. Two North Carolina cigarette companies haul off a trainload of cigarettes a day. Similarly, a North Carolina cotton factory ships away a train load of towels every afternoon. Great quantities of commodities go out of the state into the markets. Not so much remains at home for workers in wages. The state has fully 20,000 cases of pellagra in its industrial communities and pellagra is a poverty disease, caused by lack of proper food.

Wages Vary Widely

To secure its wage figures in cigarette factories the government surveyed 13 factories in Virginia, Kentucky and North Carolina, taking the information from pay rolls for representative months. Only wage earners were considered. A summary of the government's findings continues:

Average earnings per hour for males in all occupations were 37.6 cents, for females, 26.8 cents, and for both sexes, 31.8 cents. These earnings ranged for males from 22.1 cents for hand stemmers to 69 cents for mechanics, and for females from 19 cents for laborers to 41.8 cents for glassine wrapping machine operators. These hourly wages brought male hand stemmers an average of $11.05 per week, while mechanics drew $34.36. Female laborers made $9.48 per week, on the average, and operators of glassine wrapping machines earned $20.90.

MILL STRIKERS PREPARE FOR A LONG FIGHT

Chester Wright Finds Danville Situation "Amazing."

RIGHT TO JOIN UNION SOLE ISSUE IN BATTLE

Fifth Week Finds Ranks Intact—"All Quiet on Western Front," Picket's Sign Declares.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Danville, Va., Oct. 30.—No more amazing strike situation has ever been recorded than this United Textile Workers' strike which has tied up the Riverside and Dan River Cotton mills.

More than 4,000 men and women have been out for more than a month, injunctions have been issued and hunger has snapped at the heels and bitten into the belt lines of many of those who are out.

Not only has the strikers' line held tight, but the number of strikebreakers going into the mills to work has steadily decreased. Actual count is made each day by pickets, so that each night the union knows how stands the fight. On the day this is written only a mere 210 workers went into the mills. The day previous the number was 212. Two weeks ago it was about 400. Overseers say that "if this keeps up the mills will have to be shut down." Running with this handful of incompetents is too expensive.

Only One Issue.

There is just one issue in the strike. There never has been any other issue. It is: Shall the workers have a right to belong to a trade union and to speak through spokesmen elected by the union?

Day and night, along a picket line that extends a dozen miles, men, women and girls stand guard for the right to belong to a union. In the union headquarters on Loyal street a commissary operates to sustain the line. That commissary has got to hold if the line outside is to hold. If the trade unionists of the nation can come to know the situation as it is in Danville the food supply will be kept coming—food and clothing and money for those things that can be bought only by local committee that knows the needs. These include medicines and fuel.

Community Backs Strike.

The community itself is back of the strike. The small merchants are friends of the strikers and of the strike. The officials have thus far been as fair as officials could be. Metropolitan newspapers are sensing the importance of the situation and, dissatisfied with reports coming to them over Associated Press wires, are sending in their own staff men. Today a Baltimore Sun man arrived. The Washington Post has published four stories by a staff representative—all of them fair and good.

No strike not based on obvious, visible justice could have had the support this strike has had.

The story of the so-called industrial democracy plan upon which the mill was operated has been often told. It broke down because it never lived. It was a shell and a sham—a company union of the worst type because it pretended to a fairness it did not possess. There was the usual house of representatives, composed of workers and the usual senate composed of petty bosses, while up above, in the president's office, was an absolute power of veto. As long as this shoddy "government" concerned itself with trifles it continued to exist. It cracked under the strain of real issues, as they all do, because it was an autocracy and not a democracy. When the question of a wage reduction came up last December the so-called industrial democracy wasn't allowed to discuss the issue. That was complete exposure of the sham.

Workers Flock to Union.

The workers turned to the union in a flash. They flocked in. They sent for organizers. This was no case where organizers came in and painfully fought for members. It was the other way around. This union grew up here, creation of its members. Committees were sent to the American Federation of Labor and to the United Textile Workers. This town's people went into the union because it was the only place they knew of when the mill turned on them. And then came the long period of discharges. By the dozen and the score the active union members were discharged. The mill demanded yellow dog contracts. Sign or quit was the choice offered. While national officials pleaded for patience and for negotiation and hoped the strike, if there must be one, could be postponed, the union took its strike vote. For two days men and women filed past the ballot box, 95 per cent voting for the strike. Half the membership had been discharged. The remainder were faced with the yellow dog contract. It was "fight or die" and they knew it. So came the strike.

The United Textile Workers sanctioned the strike and then the American Federation of Labor, in its Boston convention, voted its indorsement and voted to call for relief funds.

May Be Long Fight.

It may be a long fight. Loads of commodities back up to the commissary door. Long lines of men and women take them away in small packages.

Pickets stand guard all day and all night. The mills are silent.

Next week I shall write about the picket line—out where some striker who perhaps did better than he knew has erected a sign which reads: "All quiet on the Western Front."

COLONEL WOODS BEGINS GREAT TASK OF ORGANIZING MACHINERY FOR RELIEF OF NATION'S JOBLESS

CUT RED TAPE, GET WORK STARTED, IS PLAN OF CONSTRUCTION COUNCIL

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Oct. 30.—It will require a greater expenditure of energy than goes with the making of speeches and the passing of resolutions to successfully cope with the present tragic unemployment problem, declared E. M. Craig, president of the American Construction council, in an especially appointed interview with International Labor News Service.

"If we are to give any real relief to the hundreds of thousands of idle men, we must at once get down to hard work and do those things that will bring results," he said. "Mere discussion will not solve the problem, and charity is not the solution. We must provide means to afford temporary relief where that is an absolute necessity, but it must not smack of charity, for the American working man does not want charity; what he wants and what he must have is work."

Hopes Nation Will Follow Example

The Building Construction Employers' association of Chicago, of which Mr. Craig has been the general manager for many years, is hard at work carrying out definite, concrete plans to ameliorate the unemployment situation in a practical manner in this city. Speakin~ as the head of the national organization, of which Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York is the founder and honorary president, Mr. Craig expressed the hope that the action of the Chicago building trades employers will be duplicated in other cities.

Mr. Craig believes that the building industry is the key industry in the present crisis and that the nation will be on the high road to recovery if every possible construction project can be at once put under way. Public works projects will be of tremendous help, if red tape can be cut all along the line, but he places his greatest reliance upon private enterprise.

Want Hoover to Cut Red Tape Snarl

"What are your plans, briefly stated, Mr. Craig?" he was asked.

"Well, in the first place we are asking President Hoover to cut through the red tape and get work started on the building of the new federal building, which will require the exepnditure of $20,000,000 and give employment to 5,000 men. That will be a great help, but will not solve the problem. We believe that President Hoover should adopt the same measures that President Wilson used in war time to get public works projects under way. President Hoover is a practical engineer and knows what is necessary. With a few strokes of the pen he can cut through the red tape that usually goes with federal projects.

Private Enterprise Biggest Factor

"The federal, state, county and city governments can all be helpful, but private enterprise is the biggest factor," Mr. Craig continued. "I venture to say that every block in Chicago has 25 or 30 buildings that need some sort of repair work. It may be carpenter work, painting, electrical work, glazing, brick or stone work or sheet metal work. No matter what it is or how little it is, it is important in the aggregate. It may be only a day's work for a carpenter, but that will be welcome to some one of the 14,000 or 15,000 idle carpenters in this city. We are asking every property owner who needs any of that sort of work to be done to get busy at once and not wait until spring or some indefinite future time. There are many neighborhoods containing buildings which are eyesores and a detriment to adjoining property. We shall bring pressure to bear on the owners to get them to repair or remove the unsightly structures.

"We are asking the Chicago daily newspaper publishers to donate space to publicize our campaign. We want not only space in their news columns, but plenty of space in their advertising columns to tell our story. The publishers can well afford to make that as their contribution, because it will be bread cast upon the waters which will come back to them many-fold through stimulated business enterprise.

Long Line Back of Building Trades

"We have 70,000 idle building tradesmen out of a total of 115,000 in Chicago at this time," said Mr. Craig. "In writing your story you ought to point out what that means to the total number of unemployed in all lines. There are said to be 400,000 idle men in Illinois at this time. If that be so, I venture to say that 300,000 of them are in Chicago alone. For every building tradesman that is out of work you can count at least two more men that are unemployed as a result of his idleness. You have got to figure in the material men, who are compelled to cut down the overhead by laying off men. There are the lumber and woodwork supply men, the men who supply the sand, gravel, cement, brick, sheet metal, iron and steel work, the plaster, lath and nails and the many other things that go into construction work. They all have to have teamsters and truck drivers, too, and office personnel. So that when you figure it all up you can safely estimate that the building industry directly accounts for at least two-thirds of the unemployed. Tracing it further back you can see where it hits the grocer, the baker, the butcher, the clothier, the dry goods merchant and the landlord. We are all in the same boat and we all have to get busy at the oars or start failing.

Relief Work Plans Also Formulated

"The public utilities companies have been all right during the past year and they have assured me that they will carry on during the coming year. They have done a lot of construction work here during the last year and say they will do as much next year. The Illinois Central railroad will do considerable construction work and other railroads have worth while projects in view."

"What are your plans for relief work, Mr. Craig?" I asked.

"We expect to raise substantial sums of money to be turned over to the United Charities and which must be kept in a separate fund distinct from the funds usually dispensed for charity purposes. The money that we raise will be disbursed for the relief of the distressed unemployed. It must be understood, however, that this is only a temporary expedient. Our main object is to get work started so that every man will have a job."

"Have you discussed the shorter work day or shorter work week in any of your conferences?" Mr. Craig was asked.

Discuss Plans to Spread Employment

"No, we have not," he answered. "We have discussed the feasibility of dividing up the work so that a greater number of men would get some of it, and I believe that is now being done, particularly by the glaziers and the electrical workers. It has been suggested that the work be divided up into half weeks, but the objection was raised that that would be impractical in some lines because of the difficulty of new men taking up unfinished work and continuing where it had been left off. This was particularly emphasized in reference to electrical work, where it would be hard for a new man to find where to pick up the wires. I understand that this objection has been met by an arrangement whereby the men would work in two week shifts, one-half laying off at the end of each week, so that there always would be fifty per cent of the men on the job who are familiar with the work."

Hot Air Won't End Business Let-Down

Washington.—The White House refuses to be a party to plans that are intended to hot air our business depression out of existence.

The president was asked by the editor of a New York trade paper to call a conference of publishers, editors and advertising executives to enlist the press in a movement to "stop unjustifiable hoarding and to encourage the public to face the holiday season in the usual holiday spirit, and with an open heart and an open pocketbook."

The chief executive refused to enthuse. The editor was informed that in discussion of similar proposals from other quarters he (the president) "has found that attempts at artificial stimulation often result in the creation of a feeling of artificiality in the movement which does more damage than good."

CHICAGO RELIEF FUND TO TOTAL $12,000,000

Chicago.—Plans to raise a $12,000,000 relief fund are being discussed by local business men. It is estimated that there are at least 70,000 idle men in the building trades alone.

These employers demand that the government build the $21,000,000 postoffice.

Huge Funds Available, But Not Released.

President Hoover's New Relief Chief Has Record of Co-operation With Labor. Directed Demobilization Return to Work.

Directs Organization Unemployment Relief

COL. ARTHUR WOODS

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Oct. 30.—Col. Arthur Woods, former New York city police commissioner, named by President Hoover to have charge of organizing unemployment relief machinery throughout the country, will be able to draw on government funds sufficiently large to deliver at least a crippling blow to unemployment—if those funds can be got into action. In addition it is expected he will attempt to organize purely charitable efforts to care for those for whom no work can be found and who may be suffering.

Government funds appropriated for work are:

Approximately $500,000,000 for public buildings;

Approximately $172,000,000 to states for road work, when the states contribute their share to the joint fund.

Approximately $1,000,000,000 to be spent in the next ten years to bring the navy into accord with the London treaty, much of which can be spent quickly, if there is the will to spend it.

President Hoover, in announcing Wood's appointment, estimated the unemployed as numbering 3,500,000. Perhaps the most important thing about the making of the appointment is that at last the lid is off the unemployment question and administration leaders can admit that unemployment is a fact.

EXPERIENCED IN AIDING IDLE

Col. Woods is not new to unemployment relief work. Following the armistice he was assistant secretary of war in charge of placement of demobilized soldiers in industry. In 1921 he served under Hoover, who then was secretary of commerce, putting into effect the plans drafted by the Harding unemployment conference presided over by Hoover. It is apparent that the machinery now being created will be patterned after the machinery then brought into being. It is recalled that in both capacities Col. Woods maintained close relations with organized labor. It is the expectation in Washington that he will repeat this line of conduct. Moreover, it is known that already labor men have been asked to serve on some of the regional committees being brought into existence as a part of the national unemployment machinery.

Back of Col. Woods is a cabinet committee of six named by President Hoover, to which committee the president has added Eugene Meyer, governor of the federal reserve board. The machinery now created is regarded as the most formidable ever set up to deal with unemployment.

ASK RED TAPE BE CUT

One of the principal immediate demands to be made by representatives of at least some labor organizations is that red tape be cut at once so as to start the flow of money into con-

FAT CHANCE

Editor The Labor World:

On account of the hardships of the working class poor during the present crisis of non-employment, and winter coming on and the high cost of living making it a severe proposition for a very great number of the helpless poor, and as a partial relief for their class, The Labor World, the Chattanooga Times, the Hamilton County Herald and the Evening News, together with Mayor Bass and the city commission, are requested and petitioned to use their influence with the power company to reduce their carfare from 7 cents to 5 cents during the hours from 5:30 a.m. to 7:30 a.m. and from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. on a similar principle as used on the elevated railroad cars in New York City.

This will be a great help and a partial relief to the working class poor going to and from work; also all transfer tickets should be good until used on all connecting lines.

All the papers should send a blank petition to the foreman of each one of the different factories and plants of the city and suburbs, to be signed up by all of the employes of the different factories to be inserted and come out in the next issue of their paper.

What Next!

A German inventor has devised an easy chair that can be plugged in to a wall socket and have its upholstery permeated thereafter with a gently increasing warm glow and a mildly luxurious warmth that supports and enfolds the sitter. There is, furthermore, a reading lamp attachment to this chair which begins to function when the chair has attained the right heat.

FIVE-DAY WORK WEEK IN MIDDLE EUROPE

Washington.—The largest shoe manufacturer in Czechoslovakia has placed its factories on the five-day week basis, according to a statement issued by the department of commerce.

The manufacturer claims that the five-day week is the result of improvement in equipment and organization of his plants. No change will be made in wages or the price of shoes.

These factories use American machinery and supply middle Europe. Certain grades of the shoes are shipped to the United States.

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

BOSTON LABOR MEET MADE NEW RECORD

The Boston A. F. of L. convention was the most important peace-time gathering of trade unionists ever held. Highly important actions were taken, but these were less significant than the intelligent, aggressive, confident spirit behind the declarations.

This spirit can be interpreted by one word: "Forward." Unemployment was the leading issue and around this discussion revolved the questions of low wages, long hours, Automatic machinery and scientific processes. Delegates repeatedly expressed impatience with talkative public officials and inert industrialists who were charged with responsibility for present conditions and who advocate a hush hush policy.

The chief executive of the nation and executives of other political units were called upon to appoint committees to encourage public, quasi-public and private employment and to focus the country's attention on general distress and unemployment. The significance of this resolution can not be appreciated without knowing the spirit that spurred these workers to angry protest against widespread enforced idleness and hunger in a land of plenty.

A five-hour day resolution, approved by the Metal Trades Department convention, was referred to the A. F. of L. executive council for "their immediate and thorough consideration." The significance of this action lies in the committee's exhaustive review of industrial mechanization and increased output that has revolutionized old orders. During the five-year period ending 1927, said the committee, mechanization has eliminated more than 2,000,000 wage earners from industry, transportation and agriculture, although output has broken all records.

"Shorter hours can not be expected to cure unemployment. It is the unsound and uneconomic wage which has caused the piling up of manufactured goods that has brought about periods of depression."

The delegates were alert to changing conditions. Their remedies fit into our present-day development. There was no attempt to minimize the havoc wrought by the automatic machine, and there was a marked absence of sentimental speeches or expressions of hope that "things will savored of helplessness or despair. savored of helplessness or despair. The convention was sure of their ground, and delegates were animated by a knowledge of the power of united, intelligent, disciplined workers. This thought was echoed by sympathizers in all walks of life who addressed the convention and who advised workers to awaken to their power.

A long range view of that convention will prove it was an epochal gathering of labor.

COL. WOODS AND OLD MAN ATLAS

Mythology has it that old man Atlas holds the world on his shoulders. Atlas has quite a job, and probably in olden days used to hope his foot wouldn't slip.

There are many who look to Col. Arthur Woods, just named to have charge of unemployment relief, as a sort of Atlas, saving everybody. With the power Col. Woods will have he will be able to do much and he doubtless will do his best. But let it be remembered that when conditions got bad in 1921 President Harding called in Col. Woods. He served with Hoover then and did much good. Plans were worked out to prevent recurring unemployment. Either the plans were no good, or else they were forgotten, for again we have unemployment and again Col. Woods must get busy. This time the crisis is more severe, the job larger.

Will Col. Woods have to be called in again five years hence for a crisis worse than this—or will the nation at last awaken to the fact that merely tinkering with unemployment in time of crisis is not enough? We now know that the world stays put without Mr. Atlas and we know, too, that employment can be maintained without Col. Woods, if a sufficient degree of intelligence is brought to bear continuously to prevent its disarrangement by those who have more power than judgment and wisdom.

Federal Drought Aid Won't Rescue Farmers

Washington.—Federal aid to farmers who suffer from the drought is inadequate, said Governor Byrd, of Virginia, in a letter to the department of agriculture.

The federal government permits the early use of the 1931 federal road money. The governor says this "must be given to contract requiring a large part of it to be done by machinery rather than by human labor." Freight rates on western hay is also declared inadequate because few farmers have the price of this hay. The freight reductions, said the governor, should not be considered a railroad loss as no hay could be moved if prohibitive rates were not removed. These reductions will expire October 31. Federal loans for seed are surrounded by such restrictions that only $43,000 of the allotted $200,000 to Virginia has been actually loaned.

BUILDING HELD UP

Boston.—The Central Labor union reminds the public that the New England Telephone company has not started its $5,000,000 proposed plant and building, for which it received much favorable publicity when the project was announced.

Service or Slavery?

Text—"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."—John 5:17.

Read Ecclesiastes 5:9-20

WM. L. MOSS

To even the most casual reader of the Gospels the idealism of Jesus is, no doubt, the most beautiful and inspiring thing of its kind in the world. No matter what phase of life He dwelt upon in His teaching, under His transforming touch it became changed and worthy of possession. Every situation brought to Him for a decision as a Teacher, in fact, every knotty problem of life He had anything to say about evolved under His keen analytical powers into a solution based on human rights. He wanted to see every being receive his dues—Jesus even granted this to Caesar, although all the time He was preaching that God was on the side of the toiler. When it came to the question of the spirit with which He did His work—a work He was commissioned and sent to do—He settled it upon the prior rights of His heavenly Father, who had sent Him to fulfil a mission among men. Should it, then, be slavery or service for Him in doing the Father's will? It would be slavery if He failed to put Himself into His work—merely informing people what God expected of them and failing to live what He preached; if he ministered unto men and yet hated the work he was doing; if He went about doing miracles in a half-hearted sort of way; if He mechanically did the Father's will and despised Himself for doing anything at all. It would be service if He put Himself, as we know He actually did, into His work and believed, as we also know He did, that He was doing it for other's sakes. Jesus knew He had a work to do, and the opportunities before Him to use His great powers for worldly purposes rather than to the glory of God are set forth for us in the episode of the three temptations of Jesus in the Arabian desert. In the face of His temptations His decision was "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work!" What is there noteworthy about this saying of Jesus? Why, the glad recognition of the opportunity that was His to do His Father's will.

The Lesson for Us

Labor is the common heritage of every living man. It can be made either a joy or a curse, according to the spirit with which we enter into it. Each man must work, and what is left for us to decide is what we shall put into our work. There's a satisfaction and joy in putting our best into it—for after all we're only going to take out of life of the same kind as we put into it. The man who doesn't want to achieve much may hide behind his more conscientious brother, saying, "My opportunities are slight. I don't feel that life is at all worth so much bother." But . . .

"'Tis not what man does which exalts him,
But what man would do."

So Browning has his David say, and Tennyson's Rabbi Ben Ezra says . . .

"What I aspired to be
And was not, comforts me."

The world justly admires the man whose opportunities have been least but who grimly has made the most of them. You're helping me and I'm helping you, no matter how under the sun you figure things out and yet be honest; you're giving to me and I'm giving to you—it's the inexorable law of the universe, so the fellow who isn't contributing his fair share toward doing the world's work is out of harmony with the rest of mankind. He's playing only on the black keys. Slavery or Service? Choose we must—and choose we will if we live one single day! There is no third choice. We can't always pick our jobs—but we certainly can choose the spirit every time with which we do our work.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

The movement to reduce wages is digging in here and there, but principally it is digging in where there is no union strength to stop it.

Iron Age, hater of unions and spokesman for a section of industry that has fought trade unionism from its inception, declares that "we are in for wage reductions."

That is the remark of an assurance that is not well founded. It is a definite prediction on a subject about which even the Iron Age cannot be definite.

Wages cannot be reduced unless two parties agree. Employers by themselves cannot reduce wages.

Until workers accept lower wages there will be no lower wages.

Organized workers can and do refuse to accept lower wages. Let non-union workers, as well as employers, think that over.

Some industrial magnates act like nothing so much as a herd of wild horses, filled with energy and power, rushing in stampede toward a cliff. Understanding is absent, judgment never existed.

Because of this madness on the part of powerful men, great masses of people will go through a winter of suffering—and perhaps more than one.

Unbridled ignorance cannot be allowed forever to bring disaster to millions.

The masses will find the way to bring judgment to bear and to safeguard their own interests.

But that will not come overnight. Labor has one instrument for action—the union. And unions do not spring up in full power out of nothing. They come by hard work, long struggle.

Those who are not in unions had best be about the business of organizing. It is imperative.

One of the tests of skill of the old-time mechanic used to be the results which he could get in the use of a file. It was said of one head toolmaker that, using his belt for a bench, he could file two pieces of steel to such an exactness of straight surface that when laid together they could not be pulled apart by hand, and had to be slid off each other, so closely did they fit together.

The training of the eye, and the precision of touch, which used to make the "master mechanic," are now giving way to the micrometer and the machine tool. In witness of which the census figures give testimony that shouts aloud the disappearance of the old-time skill.

The total value of the product of the file factories of this country in 1927 was $12,973,734; in 1929 it was $13,058,208. That was an increase of seven-tenths of one per cent.

But the figures for the total value of machine tools in 1927 was $144,496,326; and in 1929 it was $240,092,964. That was an increase of 66.2 per cent, within two years.

That is one of the meanings of "mass production," as against "hand tooling." And, since the machine tool can work with more uniform precision than the hand tool, and can do it over and over, working to narrower limits of precision, mass production can produce more than the old "machine shop," and at a much lower cost.

HIGHER BUYING POWER

Washington. — Higher purchasing power is the remedy for so-called over-production, declared the Washington Post, in a leading editorial.

"The world," says the editor, "is not producing too much, but the economic adjustment is such that people are not able to pay for all that is being produced. What is needed is greater purchasing power."

Head and Back Quit Hurting

"A few years ago, I found that I was very weak and nothing I ate seemed to give me any strength," writes Mrs. R. B. Douglas, 704 South Congress St., Jackson, Miss.

"I suffered intense pain in my head and back. At times I would have to hold to something to steady myself, so as to do my little work. I was worried about my condition.

"My mother told me that I should take Cardui. After taking two bottles, I felt stronger, but I kept on taking it until my head and back quit hurting. I took about six bottles in all, and have never quit praising Cardui."

DAVIS ASKS THOROUGH INQUIRY OF MACHINE'S EFFECT ON JOBS

Secretary of Labor, Addressing Advisory Committee on Employment Statistics, Stresses Need for Study of Displacement of Workers by Mechanization of Industry.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Oct. 30.—Holding its first meeting, the advisory committee on employment statistics, named by President Hoover, heard Secretary of Labor Davis emphasize the urgent need for a thorough study of the effects of machinery on employment. Organized labor is represented on the committee by John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor, and Arthur O. Wharton, president of the International Association of Machinists.

In addressing the committee, Secretary Davis explained that the committee's work would be to suggest effective methods of getting employment information in the fields of building and other construction work, government employes, including state, county, municipal and federal and agricultural labor. The labor department was directed by the terms of one of the Wagner unemployment bills to gather information in these fields, which the employment data of the department does not at present cover.

The secretary told the committee that he was particularly interested in prospective surveys which would show the extent to which machines were displacing manual labor.

"Just how far are these changes responsible for our present unemployment?" he asked. "Can this question be answered and, if so, how are we to answer it?"

In addition to Frey and Wharton, the following are members of the committee:

Dr. Leo Walman, National Bureau for Economic Research; Harold F. Browne, U. S. Chamber of Commerce; W. M. Steuart, census director; Ethelbert Stewart, labor statistics commissioner; Joseph H. Willits, advisory committee on census of unemployment; Noel Sargent, National Association of Manufacturers, and Secretary of Commerce Lamont.

Railroad Labor Calls Conference To Begin Six-Hour Day Movement

(By International Labor News Service.)

Cleveland, O., Oct. 30.—Representatives of seven railroad labor organizations, made up of train service and operating workers, will meet in Chicago November 12 to plan unemployment relief and to begin a movement for a six-hour working day on American railroads, it is announced here. Seven hundred railroad men will be in attendance.

Calling of the Chicago conference was announced by David R. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. He said that it would include the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Order of Railroad Conductors, the Switchmen's Union of North America, American Train Dispatchers' union, and Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, said that no set program of unemployment relief has been formulated, except that the proposition of substituting a six-hour day for the present eight-hour day will be discussed.

"The meeting has been called by the executives of the seven organizations to formulate plans, if possible," he explained. "The matter has not yet been taken up with the railroad executives, because the organizations have not as yet agreed among themselves on what should be done. That will be taken up at the meeting in Chicago."

Monopolized Radio Opposed by Workers

Boston.—The Reed bill that would compel the federal radio commission to assign three cleared-channel wave lengths to the government was indorsed by the A. F. of L. convention.

The resolution referred to the "tendency" of the federal radio commission to assign these priceless wave lengths, which are less than two score in number, to powerful interests that will, if the present policy is not checked, build up an entrenched air monopoly. Every attempt of labor's radio station, Chicago, to secure one of these wave lengths has failed.

The Reed bill would destroy the favoritism policy of the radio commission by compelling it to assign cleared channels to the departments of agriculture, labor and interior. These wave lengths shall then be licensed to the most representative groups of labor, agriculture and education.

Yellow Dog Ruling Is Scored by Frey

Boston.—"A yellow dog decision by the Massachusetts supreme court last April is reminiscent of the dark ages," said John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer A. F. of L. metal trades department, in an address to the A. F. of L. convention.

"Judicially, in Masachusetts," said Frey, "wage earners have no rights to trade union organization except in so far as the employer gives his consent."

The speaker summarized yellow dog decisions that legalize alleged contracts enforced upon workers, and he insisted that the yellow dog is indefensible from the standpoint of sound morality and fundamental law.

PUBLIC IS GOUGED BY RACKET SCHEMES

New York.—Public officials can end "racketeering," which collects hundreds of millions of dollars from legitimate business in this city, declared Howard W. Ameli, United States district attorney.

Mr. Ameli said he "is not willing to admit that the great power of the federal government and the authorities of New York city are not able to cope with this evil."

The "judicial racket" was referred to as the most vicious form of hold-up. Investigations in this city show that lawyers paid large amounts of money to secure these positions.

struction work, releasing such projects as federal buildings in Boston, Chicago and Toledo, involving millions of dollars. Strenuous efforts also will be made to prevent reduction of wage standards in the letting of contracts for governing work.

Maneuvers that have every indication of being either political or the result of rivalry between trade interests have held back much government work and Woods will be looked to for an untangling of these situations.

The number of men and women who unemployed in the United States reached such proportions that question needs the attention and sideration of the best minds, not y of the laboring masses, but also the business and professional oups as well, who should do every- ing in their power to help alleviate ent conditions, and it is indeed easing to note that there are al- dy a large number of public-spir- men and women who are doing erything in their power to bring ut temporary relief to these desti- e people. "American Plan" Master Printers Would Use Present Economic Stress To Destroy Standards of Workers

The "Employing Printers' Association of America," an organization of labor-haters which will be remembered by some for its protestations of "Americanism" and its support of the thoroughly discredited "American Plan" of employment, shows its true colors in a recent bulletin, handed The Labor World by an American master printer who operates and believes in the kind of business which insures a maximum of effort on the part of the employe and a desire by the employer to deal fairly with those who are helping to make his business succeed.

It may be recalled that among the proponents of the "American Plan" the following officers are listed: Vollmer, Crabill, Glossbrenner, Hebb, Krehbiel, Loth, Pfaff, Wedekemper and other good old Anglo-Saxons.

The point now is, however, that these patriots would use the present deplorable condition of unemployment to destroy wages and standards of printers and incidentally destroy the International Typographical union. Better men than these, possibly, have failed to do that, but the attitude of this handful of reactionaries is interesting at this time as indicating the type of opposition which is many times met by genuine Americans in their efforts to improve conditions for themselves and families.

The master stroke of the great industrial captains follows:

A Propitious Season for the Conversion of Closed Shops.

Any closed-shop printing concern having union contracts that will expire in the near future, if ambitious to become more prosperous, should not fail to grasp the opportunity offered by present business depression to put its operations on an independent, non-union basis.

While printing demand and production are sub-normal, the shift from labor-union domination to individual employment, efficient operation, and unhampered management can be accomplished, in most cases, with minimum expense and disturbance.

If a unionized establishment is strong enough to weather a probably short period of personnel reorganizattion in its mechanical departments, it may never find a time more favorable than the present to the attainment of its freedom.

The anticipated early autumn revival of general business having failed to materialize, several more months are likely to elapse before printing business is appreciably improved. The prospect of a longer interval of diminished activity therefore invites the far-sighted executive to turn his attention to getting rid of the hindrance of labor-union relations.

There is growing recognition of the probability that we are now passing through another era of transition to a new, lower, general price level in the long downward trend of post-war deflation. If this supposition is correct, well may the management of any printing organization take stock of its fitness to survive and to thrive in the coming competition.

Important purchasers of printing in the future will require products of much improved quality at quotations in keeping with lower commodity prices. When the normal volume of printing is regained, it will be produced at prices somewhat lower than those which prevailed in the eras of greatest inflation. The problem of management then will be to supply the demand in a way to make satisfactory profits.

Since labor cost will continue to be the largest factor in printing, a purpose of management to continue to pay high wages presupposes utmost production economies and greatly increased efficiency. But these, in turn, imply the elimination of the production-retarding shop practices and all the other losses and drawbacks of labor unionism.

Every passing month of experience and every indication of future condition seems to stress the protective necessity and the positive advantages of free and untrammeled business management.

Careful planning and preparation are needed to accomplish the conversion of a closed shop in the easiest, most economical manner, and it may be advisable for the management to obtain the advice of those who know the best methods of procedure.

The printing proprietor who wishes to stabilize his business and to get in position to make more money may find it worth while to correspond with us and is welcome to do so. In so doing he will not incur any obligation or any selling siege, but he may receive some valuable hints and develop an acquaintance that will be of benefit to him.

Owing to the wide differences of conditions and circumstances among printing plants, it is impossible to advance any promises or predictions applying to all whose managements may have this subject in mind. What can be done in any case depends a good deal on the relative substantiality of a concern and the determination of its owners.

However, we shall be pleased to give circumspect and confidential consideration to any bona fide inquiry received from the responsible executives of any printing establishment.

HOLDS CHICAGO BUILDING SLUMP ACCOUNTS FOR 300,000 IDLE MEN

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Nov. 6.—The estimate of 70,000 building tradesmen out of work in Chicago at this time, made by Edward M. Craig, president of the American Construction council, in an interview with International Labor News Service last week, is too low, said Patrick F. Sullivan, president of the Chicago Building Trades council.

President Sullivan said that he agrees with Mr. Craig's general views as to the present unemployment situation and the remedies offered, but that he thought Mr. Craig was too conservative as to the number of men affected, both directly and indirectly.

"Figures available to us through our membership rolls show that there are between 75,000 and 80,000 building tradesmen out of work in Chicago at this time," said President Sullivan. "It is safe to say that at least three other men are out of work as the result of the idleness of each building tradesman. The men who produce and transport the materials used by the building trades mechanic account for the other three men. These are normally employed in forest, mine, quarry, mill and factory and in transportation.

300,000 Made Idle.

"It is safe to say, then, that the stagnation in the building industry of Chicago directly accounts for about 300,000 idle men. Going further into the situation, lessened consumptive power on the part of these 300,000 idle men accounts for other thousands of unemployed in the clothing and foodstuffs industries, not to mention the industries producing those articles of commerce commonly known as luxuries, but which in flush times are practically regarded as necessities. You can run the whole gamut of life's necessities — luxuries, amusements, recreation, education and culture—and each and every one of them is affected and curtailed, with more and more idleness following in each and every line of human endeavor as the result of a letdown in this great industry.

"The building construction industry is the second largest in the United States," said President Sullivan. "It is second only to agriculture. A revival in this industry will give a tremendous impetus to a revival in all other lines.

Big Building Program Needed.

"The United States should have a seven billion dollar building program for next year, and of this Chicago should contribute a half billion of dollars. The present outlook indicates that Chicago will provide not more than two-fifths of its necessary share."

President Sullivan laid a large part of the blame for the present stagnant condition in the building construction industry at the door of reckless speculation in first mortgages and real estate bond issues. He said that the public has been overloaded with these issues at fictitious values and that as a result many investors have lost confidence, contributing to a tight money market.

President Sullivan said that he heartily concurs in the efforts of the Building Construction Employers' association of Chicago to induce property owners to have all necessary repair and alteration work done at this time rather than to wait until next spring or until some indefinite future time.

Start in Right Direction.

"It will be a start in the right direction," said Mr. Sullivan, "and may lead to a general revival. It certainly will mean many days of work to many men who are sorely in need of work. Charity does not appeal to these highly skilled men, who are accustomed to paying for the necessities and luxuries of life."

Ministers Move To Form Union

(I L N S)..... R.....

New York City, Nov. 6.—Among the interesting features of the various discussions which were a part of the twentieth anniversary celebration of the founding of the Labor Temple here was the expressed determination on the part of prominent clergymen represented to form a labor union and be governed in their religious activities by the established rules of the union, initiatory steps already having been taken.

During the anniversary exercises, presided over by G. F. Beck, Spencer Miller, Jr., spoke on the growth of the workers' education movement and on the following day "Social and Industrial Relations" were discussed by Dr. William P. Shriver, Poel B. Hayden and F. Ernest Johnson.

LABOR CHIEFS APPROVE ACTS OF COL. WOODS

Unemployment Activities Are Called Helpful.

PLIGHT OF JOBLESS GIVEN ATTENTION

Eyes of Public Focused on Unfortunate—Public Aid Projects Announced.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 6.—Moves made by Col. Arthur Woods, head of President Hoover's emergency committee for employment to provide unemployment relief, are viewed with favor at American Federation of Labo headquarters, though it was pointed out that it is too early to say whether the activities directed by Woods will be fully effective.

William Green, president of the A. F. of L., was out of town and could not be reached for an expression of opinion.

Frank Morrison, secretary, told International Labor News Service:

"Anything in the way of relief work that can be started by Col. Woods should prove helpful. All who are in a position to help in any way should bend every effort to relieve the situation."

Nation Needs Arousing

M. J. McDonough, president of the building trades department, said:

"The activities of Col. Woods are centering public attention on unemployment and this is good. The nation needs to be aroused to the seriousness of the problem that confronts it."

John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the metal trades department, said:

"It is all-important to have public attention focused on the unemployment problem. The relief projects undertaken by Col. Woods and the president's committee will materially aid in showing the nation the need of relief work."

No Union Employment Gain.

While the labor executives were being interviewed, the regular monthly unemployment report of the federation was made public, showing that unemployment among trade unionists was virtually the same in October as in September. No improvement was recorded, except slight decreases in idleness in the metal and printing trades.

The percentage of unemployment among all trades for October was reported at 21, the same as in September. The percentage for the building trades was 38 for both months. In the metal trades, the percentage dropped from 23 in September to 21 in October. A drop of one per cent, from 8 in September to 7 in October, was shown for the printing trades. The figures for all other trades was 14 for both months.

A new feature of the report for October is the percentage of union workers on part time. The figures were given as follows. All trades, 15; building trades, 14; metal trades, 23; printing trades, 14; all other trades, 15. As the part time figures were given for the first time, no comparisons can be made with other months.

Col. Woods Encouraged

Returning to Washington after a visit to New York, Col. Woods said that he was encouraged by the response to his appeals for aid while in New York.

Col. Woods also found encouragement in the announcement that three government agencies are pushing projects that are expected to relieve unemployment. These projects are the Hoover dam at Boulder canyon, construction work by the veterans' bureau, and the hiring of extra men by the postoffice department for Christmas work.

Offers of voluntary aid by national organizations continued to pour into Col. Woods' office in the department of commerce, together with reports of further organization by state committees.

Work for 4,500 Men

The veterans' bureau soon will let contracts for $3,000,000 worth of construction on new hospitals or additions to old ones which will provide work for 4,500 men, Brig.-Gen. Frank T. Hines, in charge of veterans' affairs, said after a conference with President Hoover. This work will be distributed through many sections of the country, including Northport, L. I.; Somerset, N. J.; Indianapolis, Camp Custer, Mich.; and Tucson, Ariz.

The work at Hoover dam is of far greater proportions, but it is not expected to get under way for several months. A time-saving of six months will be effected, it is estimated, through the rushing of work to enable the department of the interior to publish plans and specifications for at least the preliminary work by December 1. Advance copies of these specifications will be rushed to contractors who wish to bid on the work, it was said, and the bids will be opened as soon as possible after December 1.

Post Office Plan "Radical"

The post office project was termed a "radical departure" from the usual holiday program and wherever conflicts may arise between the new procedure and the older practices, postmasters have been instructed to disregard precedent. It was announced that: "Postmasters have been directed under today's instructions to employ to the fullest extent possible competent men with families to support and who are now out of work."

During his visit to New York Col. Woods announced that 15 large cities already have projects under way for dealing with unemployment. He named the 15 as follows: Hartford, Chicago, Boston, Detroit, Flint, St. Paul, New York City, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Salt Lake city, Seattle and Milwaukee.

Col. Woods, addressing the leaders of women's clubs of six states in New York City, likened the present situation to the emergency of the war. He said:

"This Also War Time"

"The women of America put across conservation of the food supply, acting as individuals and in their clubs. This also is war time. Then shots, shells, bullets, bayonets and destruction were our enemies. Now the enemy is human suffering and we face a fight against an intangible but direct enemy that is attacking ourselves and our fellow citizens. Our weapons are different."

Auditorium Board Sponsors Community "Party" to Celebrate Installation Memorial Amplifiers

A community "party," with a program which promises to equal or surpass anything of this nature ever held in Chattanooga, will be given Monday evening at the Memorial auditorium, in celebration of the completion of installation of a modern system of amplification, which has been regarded by many as the one thing needed to make this local institution a real community center.

Manager Stanley Addis, seated in his office in the front of the building, will announce the auditorium board's welcome to their guests, giving at once a demonstration of the remarkable powers of the new system. Neil J. Crowley, chairman of the auditorium board, will then introduce Mayor Bass, who will formally present the "new showhouse" to the public.

Then a musical program, under direction of Dick Park, which will include numbers by the original and only Kiwanis quartet, remembered by hundreds of Chattanoogans as probably the best combination of vocalists ever to represent this city. The quartet, it is recalled, several years ago won prizes in widely separated parts of the country.

Other musical numbers will include groups by Lois Spencer, accomplished Chattanooga pianist; Mrs. Walter Heasty, singer, of Birmingham, who is a former Chattanoogan, and will make the trip especially for the celebration; a group by the Cadek Conservatory of Music trio, composed of Lester Cohn, violinist; Harold Cadek, cellist, and Elizabeth Armstrong, pianist, and a combined chorus including five church choirs of Chattanooga, accompanied on the organ by Miss Emily Relfe.

Following the formal program, engineers who have been busy for several weeks installing the amplifiers will give a demonstration of the possibilities of the system, and the floors will then be cleared for dancing.

The entire program, including the dancing, will be free to the public, and it is hoped that the great building will be filled to capacity for the occasion.

Since its erection as a memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the world war, Chattanooga's million-dollar auditorium, due to its unusual size, has been handicapped by the inadequacy of voices on the stage in reaching remote corners of the great hall, but preliminary tests have demonstrated that a whisper may now be heard as clearly in the furthest balcony seat as in the first row downstairs.

The improvement has made possible the booking of a large number of finer road shows, direct out of New York and with an itinerary which includes only a few of the larger cities. Colleen Moore, star of the screen, appears next Thursday night, in person, in a new comedy-drama written especially for her, "Cindy." Rod LaRoque and Vilma Banky, also in a new comedy, follow a few days later.

The program Monday night will begin promptly at 8:15.

McDaniels Calls Special Meeting Building Trades

E. E. McDaniels, former representative of the building trades, has called a meeting for Saturday, Nov. 15, at 2 p.m., at 11½ East Seventh street, to which all local building trades are invited to send representatives.

It is announced that business of importance to these crafts will come up for discussion, and each local is urged to have representatives present.

Enlistment in Army Proposed for Idle

Milwaukee.—Enlistment of unemployed in the United States army reserves is the novel suggestion made by the Wisconsin council of the American Legion.

The plan would permit any man out of work to enlist and draw regular army pay. It would be necessary to change the age limit so that middle-aged and married men could be accepted. Enlistment would only be during the business depression or until a man secured work.

Austin A. Peterson, state adjutant of the legion, said the scheme would teach men army routine which would be invaluable in time of war. But it would not jeopardize the men in that event; he would not be called for service any differently than if he had never seen army enlistment.

The Legion's council offered the plan as a substitute for various unemployment insurance plans that are being suggested. Where there are not enough barracks rude shelters, such as were erected during the last war, could be constructed by the men themselves to keep them busy, it was stated.

STEEL MERGER SUIT TO SET PRECEDENT

Youngstown, Ohio.—After one of the longest and bitterest corporation legal battles on record, testimony has closed in the attempt to enjoin the proposed billion-dollar merger of the Bethlehem and Youngstown steel corporations. The court's decision will affect future corporation practices.

The trial showed that President Grace, of Bethlehem, received $5,497,684 in salary and bonuses the last five years. Stockholders were ignorant of this salary, which was paid while dividends were passed.

PRINTERS LOSE LOYAL MEMBER

Miss Sallie C. Bobo Succumbs to Pneumonia Following Short Illness.

Miss Sallie C. Bobo, for twenty-six years a member of Chattanooga Typographical union and of the Times composing-room chapel, expired Thursday morning at an early hour, following an illness of only a few days, of pneumonia.

Miss Bobo was unusually competent as a linotype operator and in other departments of a newspaper composing room. She was loyal to the principles of her union, and it was frequently said of her that she had never turned away anyone in need, nor did she question the merits of any appeal for assistance.

Funeral services were held at the Chapman funeral home Thursday night at 7 o'clock, attended by all members of the Times chapel, and with the Rev. S. J. Lawrence, also a member of the chapel, officiating. The remains were shipped to Chillicothe, Ohio, old home of the deceased.

Expressing the sentiment of those with whom she had worked for a quarter of a century, the following resolutions were adopted at a special called meeting of the Times chapel Thursday night:

Whereas, it has pleased God, in His providence, to remove from our circle our loyal comrade and greatly esteemed fellow worker, Miss Sallie C. Bobo, we, the chapel of the composing room of the Chattanooga Times, desire to go on record in giving homage to the virtues of our deceased sister.

As a printer she was competent beyond the average; as a member of the Typographical union she had the distinction of never denying or delaying any duty imposed upon her or that she felt was involved in her obligation to the union; as a friend she was true as steel, and as a fellow worker she was just to her confreres and kind and generous to those who had been visited by misfortune, whether deserving of her sympathy or not.

The Times composing room chapel, as a memento of our deceased sister, has ordered the following resolution to be inscribed on its minutes and a copy also be furnished to the sorrowing relatives:

Resolved, That we, members of the Times chapel, on behalf of the general body, herewith send our condolences to the relatives and friends of Miss Sallie C. Bobo, whose untimely demise we greatly regret, and extend our sympathy to such relatives in their bereavement.

Shorter Work Week In Postal Service

Boston.—The federal government has not kept pace with the shorter-hour movement, declared the A. F. of L. convention in favoring the five and one-half day week for employes in the postal service.

The post office department is the government's largest business enterprise. Postal workers show that for 17 years there has been no change in working hours, although in that period the larger groups of postal employes have doubled their output.

The convention indorsed the Kendall-La Follette bill which would establish a Saturday four-hour day, or the equivalent of a five and one-half day week.

BALDWIN-FELTS OPERATIVES IN STRIKE DISTRICT

Five Thousand Pledge Continuance of Battle "If It Takes All Winter."

DANVILLE STRIKER

MRS. EDNA BROWN
One of the 4,000 textile mill strikers [illegible] of Danville, Va.

By Staff Correspondent

Danville, Va., Nov. 6.—A sinister color crept into the strike picture this week, with announcement from union headquarters that seven operatives are in Danville from the Baldwin-Felts detective agency, a well known strikebreaking outfit. However, these "dicks" are likely to find the city too small for them to operate in effectively. Everybody knows everybody else, and when a stranger tells one story here, and another story yonder, the chances are he is in both cases talking to a union picket who has been told off to follow him and report his story to the captain of the pickets.

The high light this week fell on the farce in the local court, when the postponed cases against a bevy of union girls came up again. They had been laughing on the street: and it seems the company overseers are getting so nervous that they just can't stand being laughed at—at least they charged that they had been "intimidated." The cases were thrown out of court, after the union attorney had suggested that perhaps they ought to be transferred to the juvenile court.

Rain on the picket lines today—and the shoes wearing out. But the union has a member who can cobble shoes, and friends are bringing in shoes that have good uppers and can be half-soled. So they are getting by.

"The company is wasting a lot of money," said Buford Nash, expert loom fixer and president of local 1685. "It is too bad," he continued. "It is a shame for them to be throwing away all that good money, and wasting good cotton. They will get their machinery torn up some, too. We hate to see them losing all that money, because they will need it, when we go back to work in the mill."

WILL HOLD TO LINE IF IT TAKES ALL WINTER

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Nov. 6.—The Danville textile strike is now in its fifth week with the workers standing adamant against going back into the mills until the Dan River and Riverside companies grant them the right to organize into a trade union of their own choosing without incurring the penalty of discharge by so doing.

This much was forecast at a mass meeting attended by 5,000 to 6,000 workers and their friends at Ballou park where Francis J. Gorman, vice-president of the United Textile Workers, addressed them, and was assured by the vociferous multitude that they intended to stick to win "if it takes all winter."

However, the 4,500 union workers of Danville are not unmindful of the weak economic situation in general in this city, where the tobacco growers, for cause not known, are not "getting the breaks" from the all-powerful tobacco companies in respect to price. This, with the damming of the flow of wages—small as they were—from the textile workers and the effects of the national depression, has put the business men "up against it" and brought active efforts on the part of the union to effect a settlement of the strike.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

Despite the great progress made toward shortening the work day and work week, many thousands of wage earners in the United States toil more than eight hours a day. This is particularly true of women wage earners. The eight-hour day for them is far from universal, though a longer working schedule is not advisable and unnecessary.

More than eight hours of work in this day and age is an anomaly for which there seems no excuse. The long work day and even the eight-hour day is out of date, as Mary V. Robinson, of the United States women's bureau, points out in a recent statement in which she says:

"Today with the trend toward the five-day week and the suggestion of the six-hour day the eight-hour standard is getting to be as old-fashioned as a 1920 automobile."

Newspaper editorial workers in Scranton, Pa., have a long established union, affiliated with the International Typographical union, and as a result the pay of Scranton reporters and deskmen is higher than in any city of its size. Salaries are fixed by an agreement which provides for two weeks' vacation with pay, protects the news writers from abuses of the overtime system and benefits them in other ways.

Here is something for newspaper workers to ponder over, especially those who write anti-union editorials and articles. Instead of standing aloof from unionism, newspaper editorial workers would benefit immeasurably from embracing it, as the Scranton news writers have done.

More than a year ago, the Delaware & Hudson railroad abandoned passenger service on its branch line between Au Sable forks and Plattsburg, N. Y. Since then, inhabitants in the isolated Au Sable valley in the Adirondacks have been greatly hampered in getting to the outside world.

The citizens, led by Rockwell Kent, well known artist, who lives in the valley, have been making a fight for the restoration of service and the New York public service commission has recently decided in their favor and ordered the railroad to resume service.

Railroads have been too prone to abandon branch lines that do not pay, even though their systems as a whole have shown good profits. In some cases public service regulatory bodies have let them stop the running of trains regardless of the public loss and inconvenience. The decision of the New York public service commission is encouraging. It is in the public interest and shows that sometimes, at least, some human place humanity above profits.

A CAUSE FOR REJOICING

Although a complete check-up of the effect of Tuesday's elections, as they apply to the program of America's organized workers, is impossible at this time, enough is evident to cause great rejoicing among those who have watched the trend of events recently, and to cheer many who possibly have become discouraged at what has appeared to be an unequal battle, with progressive thought and activity struggling for expression against the combined forces of greed and reaction in the political councils of the nation.

Of first importance, as we see the situation at the present time, is the outcome with reference to return to the United States senate of those solons who have been "100 per cent." friendly to the cause of the people.

Last week's issue of Labor, official organ of the twenty-one standard railroad labor organizations, published a list of nine republican and ten democratic senators "who have long and honorable records in public life," and all of whom had been unanimously endorsed by the rail unions. "The fate of much legislation of vital importance to the workers of America is largely dependent upon the election of these candidates for the senate," was the national newspaper's comment.

OF THESE NINETEEN, ALL ARE RETURNED WITH THE EXCEPTION OF SENATOR JOHN M. ROBSION, REPUBLICAN, KENTUCKY.

In addition, there is the great victory of Senator George W. Norris, who was forced to battle, as usual, against 'dirty' politics. J. Hamilton Lewis, veteran Illinois solon, who swamped Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, was reported as having a friendly labor record. Marcus A. Coolidge (not related to the ex-president), democrat, and friend of the masses, defeated the reactionary Butler in Massachusetts, although the Bay State named a republican governor. Gifford Pinchot, with a long and honorable record of friendship for the people, was swept into office with an avalanche of votes, as was James J. Davis, whose progressive attitude is known to all people throughout the country.

Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt's unprecedented majority for governor of New York state is heartening as indicating the trend of sentiment, his record of statesmanship having been outstanding among the nation's greatest political leaders.

The defeat of "Can't-Strike" Allen in Kansas was another victory for the people and an indication that reactionary thought is doomed.

Other evidences of progressive tendencies of the country's electorate may appear as the smoke of battle clears, but enough is already seen, as noted above, to cause mighty rejoicing among those who still insist that the United States government is "for, by and of the people."

THE DANVILLE STRIKE.

The strike of 4,000 Danville textile workers is no ordinary industrial dispute. It has unusual elements that should attract nation-wide attention, and impelled the Boston A. F. of L. convention to order a special plea for financial aid forwarded to all affiliates and union sympathizers.

Wage reductions, speed-up systems and the company "union" are not peculiar to Danville. Workers in every section face these schemes that are inseparable from autocratic control. In Danville, however, the final word in paternalism has been said. Here, the first company "union" on an elaborate scale was instituted in the south. The workers were watched and cared for. The "good boss" theory was presented in its most alluring form. Nowhere was autocracy more cleverly masked and trade union opposition more craftily hidden. The plot was more than a company "union." It was surrounded with a benign, warm-hearted atmosphere [illegible] and enthroned [illegible]

[illegible] has been used since the [illegible] of organ[illegible] labor pointed to Danville's [illegible] to combat trade unionism. The United Textile Workers, guided by their long experience, made no attempt to disillusion these workers, a few of whom lost their jobs when they insisted that the company "union" live up to its pretense. Wage reductions and speed-up (stretch-out) followed the workers' acceptance of the fake "union." They awoke and affiliated to the regular United Textile Workers. Officers of that organization, for months, attempted to adjust differences.

These offers were rejected and the mill management even notified the governor of Virginia: "We have nothing to mediate." It was a fitting answer from autocrats who affect a benevolent interest in "hands" whom they so mercilessly exploit.

If these workers are driven back to the mills and forced to accept the will of an industrial oligarch it will even be a challenge to every established unit of organized labor in that area.

Trade unions everywhere may well consider the moral effect of the Danville strike ending. Aside from the elements of justice and humanity in this enterprise, organized labor should realize that when they contribute to this cause they assist themselves.

Aid to Danville strikers, who are hungry, is the best form of insurance for wage scales and industrial peace in the south.

TRAFFIC PERILS GROW.

Washington.—An increase of more than 3,000 deaths from automobile accidents in this country last year is announced by the department of commerce.

A WEIRD MASS.

Debate rages as to whether depression has about run its course, or whether it has more wallops up its sleeve. Nobody knows, exactly.

Predicting industrial future is no more an exact science than is weather forecasting. Best informed persons hold that the slow upward pull has set in, that it will be noticed in some directions this winter, helped by the artificial stimulus of the Col. Woods machinery, and will set in with strength in the spring.

Nothing interests wage earners today one-half as much as the question: When will there be work to do?

Tragic business it is that with millions needing things of all kinds, this industrial system of ours cannot find the power to turn the wheels to make them!

Smug corporation chiefs sit in barred offices talking about shutting down, or about cutting wages, or about running "open shop." What sneer is there big enough to convey the proper amount of contempt for a "big business" that can do no better than that?

Organized labor offers its plans, its counsel, its co-operation. Reactionary business men, engaged in looking backward, reject the proffered help and call themselves wise. Not a single corporation has yet been recorded as voluntarily cutting down the stream of profits flowing into the pockets of dividend-takers.

That one important step remains to be taken—and it will probably wait a long time to come. Everyone is willing to let some other fellow bear the burden.

The masses, broadly speaking, are not well enough organized to stand forth and say, "thus far and not an inch farther."

Those that are organized in unions are protecting themselves with courage and ability. But when bosses say to the unorganized, "This week wages go down 10 per cent," they go and that's that. But the grocer and the butcher and the clothier feel it immediately and then the wholesalers feel it and then it gets back to the manufacturers again—and the wise men at the top betake themselves once more to the wailing wall and bemoan the improvidence of the working classes.

But at the top there is no suffering. Nobody is going hungry, or badly clothed.

What a weird mass it all is, anyway.

To scramble along with one less motor car may be a tough thing, but to get along with one less meal a day gets down to the grass roots. But getting back to a higher note, let this be said: Unquestionably much of this state of depression is a state of mind. It is, to an extent, psychological.

Manufacturers and lots of others think things are bad and may get worse and so they hedge. Throughout the nation there is unnecessary hedging, caused by the fear of what may happen, but not due to what has happened.

After all, in most things the human race has little courage and even less imagination. Too much gloom has been spread. Bad as matters are, they are not as bad as most of the psychological condition surrounding industry and commerce. And that's a fact.

A Weekly Comment on a Text From the Bible

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

The Gospel of Sunshine.

Text—"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."—Ps. 30:5.

Read John 15:1-12.

WM. L. MOSS

One of the striking facts of the earthly life of Jesus is the number of times it is recorded in the Gospels He attended feasts and social gatherings of divers kinds—first a marriage feast at Cana, where He made His initial public appearance as a Teacher, and later throughout His ministry at gatherings where "sinners and publicans" sat, and we would gather from these many instances that Jesus never shunned an opportunity to share with others the lighter and pleasanter side of life. Jesus preached the Gospel of Sunshine—the joy and fullness of life. He spoke often of the peace and satisfaction there is in life if we would live as God would have us live, and pointed out many times the evils of needless worry, the emptiness of life without good works and the grief and pain awaiting us if we ruthlessly disregarded the higher values of life.

Jesus taught us there is trial and tribulation for us in life—in the words of our text, "weeping may endure for a night"—but these are the things that are here to try men's souls and are not life's ultimate end. Life with nothing but ease and comfort would be like a feast with only cake to eat—very enjoyable at first, until we got our fill, and then we would turn away in disgust. What we too frequently regard as commonplace things of life, if thought of as gifts from God, which they really are, would lift our lives into the realm of happiness and sunshine. Our homes, wives, health, children, material blessings, relatives and friends, all are rich sources of joy even in just the mere thoughts of possessing them. To get the proper contrast, think of what life would be without them!

The Lesson for Us.

Our text tells us life has its nights of weeping but it also gives us God's assurance of a brighter side to life. There is beauty and joy in living if we will but search them out. God would not have us let things that vex our soul drag us down into the pit of despair. With the coming of day God's flowers lift up their faces to the life-giving rays of the beautiful sun, and men should likewise seek to let the sunshine of real life pour into their souls. Each new-born day is a gift from God to man as well as to the flowers! Our accounting for the stewardship of every day of our life should consist of a happy spirit and the fruit of good works, which are the least returns we can render God for having given us the opportunity to live. Life is too precious to mar by going about with a gloomy and melancholy spirit. True, all is not pleasant in life—we have God's word for that—but we can make the unpleasant bearable, as Jesus did, by refusing to be overcome by it. Never was life so irksome to any of us but that there was not someone else to whom life was even more irksome. Never was there a grief of our own so great but that the grief of another was not still greater. The Gospel of Sunshine teaches us to let the sunshine of real life fill our souls, for though vexations do come, "joy cometh in the morning" . . . no grief can last forever!

Awake Half the Night Weak and in Pain

Night after night I could not sleep," writes Mrs. Mary J. Roberts, 117 West Franklin St., Raleigh, N. C. "I would lie awake half the night. I was dizzy and weak, suffered frequently with pains in my side and small part of my back.

"When I was a girl, my mother gave me Cardui, and it did me so much good, I thought I would try it again. I took five bottles, and I feel like a new person.

"I think it is fine. I would advise every woman who is weak to try Cardui, for it has certainly put me on my feet."

40,000 REGISTER FOR WORK IN NEW YORK'S FREE JOB AGENCY

By J. R. MILLER

New York City, Nov. 6.—As the chilling blasts herald the close approach of winter the crowd of jobless at the free employment agency here grows in size. Unfortunately, the number of jobs available does not increase in number as fast, but has in fact in the past two weeks shown a tendency to decrease compared with the number of placements that were obtained for early registrants.

At about the middle of the week the total number who registered for work at this agency were 40,000, while the number of jobs found by the very active Director Edward C. Rybicki and his corps of assistants was in the close neighborhood of 12,000. This is for a period of approximately nine weeks, the agency having opened its doors at 54 Lafayette street on Aug. 15.

Situation Changes Daily.

In the days to come, when the present slump in jobs can be viewed with equananimity as a thing of the past, the student of sociology will be able to revel in the statistics which the work of this agency is now producing in the way of classification, for the records are closely kept, in the way of the number of skilled workers who apply and are placed, how the clerical quota fared, how the older were treated, the women as compared with the men, and so on. At present, however, while the agency is still very active in seeking to rub the frown from the anxious faces of the great horde of men and women who storm this haven of promise for the jobless, speculation regarding classification is relegated to a secondary place; changes radically in fact from week to week and day to day. The crowd of registrants clusters numerously about the door before it opens in the morning and there is never a moment during the working hours of the day when there are not as many as 200 men and women in the spacious quarters of the agency looking for a job. It is the human side of this tragic picture that is most strikingly appealing to the average visitant.

Agency Hunts Jobs.

If you happen to be in Mr. Rybicki's office, with his corps of clerks clustering about him, you are first impressed with the enthusiasm of the entire group. You couldn't find the like in any business place you know. Evidently the great need of the crowd gets under their skin, and they act as though they keenly sensed the qualms and sorrows of the men and women beyond the railing. If you happen to "stick around" long enough you are sure to be apprised of the fact that this particular agency does not wait passively for the jobs to come to it, but actually goes about seeking for jobs for the jobless; "outside men" they call them, and there are twelve of them very busy at this kind of work. They especially are enthusiastic in their work and if you wait still longer you are sure to hear one or the other of these men bolting in to the presence of Mr. Rybicki and joyously announce:

"I found another!"

Mad Grasp for Jobs

Before long also your attention will be attracted to a choice number in the day's program of wonderful activity. A man with a megaphone in his hand jumps upon the platform with the big crowd of anxious men surging toward him. He announces from the fact on a card that a truck helper is wanted, a soda-fountain man, a handy man on a farm out of town, a clerk in an office. Sometimes he mentions the wages offered and then he doesn't, stating that the wages are "open," by which you find he means that the wages will be arranged between the applicant and the employer. In each case he names the number of the desk to go to for definite information and it's a sight that will serve as a picture in your mind while you live to see these men bolting for the desks, standing on tip-toe and holding up their hands like children at school in their anxious endeavor to get the chance for a job.

About this time you are sure to get interested in the boss, Mr. Rybicki, who has been too busy to give you all of his time, and who is entirely unruffled by the number of telephone calls and questions he has to answer. In this particular instance you ask, "How do you do it, Mr. Rybicki? You don't seem to get flustered and worried." In this particular case the answer was:

Rybicki Is Union Man.

"Well, I did at first, but I had to reorganize; no, I mean organize my mental equipment and methods."

"And you seem to place no barriers between you and the crowd; you answer everybody courteously."

"I am a union man who happens to be in charge here. No more than the men outside looking for a job. Yes, we make it a point to treat everybody courteously here." He is a member of "Big Six" Typographical union.

"Interesting instances? Oh, yes," he continued, "there are many of them to be met with here, human tragedies I call them. It is a tragedy to me when women come here, some of them pregnant, begging for jobs for their husbands who have become discouraged. It's a tragedy to me also when a man, little over 40 years of age, displaced by machinery, comes here in the prime of life, begging us to get him a job at anything and we have to scurry about and get him a job at running an elevator or something like that, which he could do as well at 70. He's out of it through the age limit decree. I tell you they are sad, such cases as that."

Detroit's Mayor Among Leaders in Job Relief

MAYOR FRANK MURPHY

Detroit's mayor, who left a good judicial job to head the city's government, is one of the outstanding leaders in working out plans for immediate unemployment relief.

With the backing of organized labor Mayor Murphy is proceeding to cut red tape, to stir up employers and to get city government into effective action.

With a committee of 101 Mayor Murphy tackled unemployment as something to be settled and not just talked about. Approximately 100,000 unemployed have been registered, 20,000 in immediate, desperate need.

The city has appropriated $4,000,000 to advance next year's school building program. Many avenues of work already have been opened and Detroit feels encouraged.

When Mayor Murphy addressed the recent A. F. of L. convention in Boston he was given a genuine ovation because of the sincerity of his address.

noted men of this country, that this would be the only solution as a permanent cure for unemployment. Then when the shorter work week is put into effect there should be no reduction in wages, because we know that the consuming power of the worker is too low now; that is one of the reasons there is a general business depression. Lack of consumption, as well as modern machinery, create unemployment. What the masses of people in this country have to have, if we expect to have prosperous times, is a reasonable amount of wages above what it takes to buy the necessities of life for the family. If the worker was allowed to have about half of his wages left after he had paid for the necessities of his family, he could have a better home and better environments and pay his honest debts and would be consuming at least a better part of the production of this country. Also, there would be less bankruptcy among the business men, and the professional men could collect their debts, and churches could collect dues and chances are that there would not be so many "For Rent" signs sticking up.

I think there are too many middle men between the producer and consumer. With these men making large profits, the farmer gets a very small amount for his products, and the worker, who is the big end of the farmer's market, pays an exorbitant price for necessities. Of course, I think that the wholesale and the retail merchant is necessary, and if they were the only two that were making a reasonable profit between the farmer and consumer, then the farmer would get a better price for his products and the worker could buy for less, which of course would give a greater consuming power to both.

Now let's talk a little about the production of the workers. I think that there have been entirely too many employers who had the idea that to have a prosperous industry they should work the workers as long as possible, for as little as possible. These employers only thought of the workers as that much labor; they overlooked the fact that the workers were also consumers, and by enforcing low wages on the workers they were knocking the foundation out from under their market.

Many employers, too, in their efforts to reduce the price of production, put into effect the "efficiency system," which is known in some industries as the "stretch-out system." This, in a great many instances, has doubled and tripled the amount of labor placed on the worker. And the result of this system was that a great many employes were thrown out of a job—and it did not increase the wages of those who were retained and performed the tasks.

It is my opinion that the great desire to cut the price of production was created by competition. One manufacturer's business would get dull, and he would send his salesmen out and cut the price of his product; then he would go back to his plant and either cut wages or put in the "stretch-out system." Then another manufacturer would lose business, and he would apply the same plan. So it has been cut, cut, cut, until they have not only exploited the worker, but also their own industry, till even stockholders are saying that they value their stock in this or that mill as absolutely worthless. It is my opinion that every industry that has followed the above system has only put plants, and the locality where they were situated, in an unstabilized condition.

Knowing as I do of the necessity of capital and labor, and how essential one is to the other, I cannot see any opportunity for progress to either as long as harmony does not prevail between them. My suggestion would be for both sides to concentrate their efforts through representatives, around the conference board, in promoting a very necessary plan which would allow the employer a reasonable profit on his investment and would guarantee the worker a job and a saving wage.

This would eliminate the question of unemployment insurance, and also a great percentage of charity cases, which is something that is obnoxious to the worker, who is only asking for an opportunity to earn a living.

COLLEEN MOORE IN PERSON TO BE SEEN AT MEMORIAL IN 'CINDY'

Colleen Moore, whose fame and fortune have grown apace during the past few years, has, for the nonce, deserted her first love—the screen—and gone upon the speaking stage in a new comedy-drama, "Cindy." Miss Moore comes to the Memorial auditorium Thursday evening, Nov. 13. Born in Fort Huron, Mich., Colleen, in the family archives, answers to the name of Kathleen Morrison. On her mother's side, she is Irish, while her paternal forebears were from the lowlands of Scotland. While her advent into motion pictures was accomplished without any difficulty, she, nevertheless, found it far from easy to attain stardom. Along came a prize-winning scenario, "Broken Chains," in which Colleen played the leading part. Filmdom was sufficiently impressed to give her the leading role in "Flaming Youth," which made her a definite star. Then followed a succession of pictures, ranging all the way from "Ella Cinders" to Edna Ferber's "So Big," in which she revealed herself as a character actress to be seriously reckoned with. In "Cindy" Miss Moore has a role which was written to fit her talents and give her opportunities not only as a comedienne but also, as in the final act of the play, a chance to again show, as in "So Big," her dramatic ability. Manager Selwyn has surrounded Miss Moore with a large and important cast, and has spared no expense to provide an elaborate scenic production, so that her new venture may be said to carry with it everything portending success.

HERE'S A NICE, SOFT JOB

It's a Snap for Man Who Is Carpenter, Painter, Sweeper, Pipefitter, Glass-Setter, Metal Worker, Etc.

Time won't drag for the man who gets the job as janitor for the Lindsay Brothers company—a Minneapolis agricultural implement and farm vehicle firm.

A letter to an applicant for a job with the Lindsay concern explained the duties, says the current issue of "Labor."

"In a sense this is a 24-hour job," the letter says. "The fires need attention by 6 a.m. (sometimes earlier) and the dusting should be done before 8 a.m. Sweeping and scrubbing the office has to be done after 5 p.m.

"The fires have to be tended late in the evening. From 5:30 at night to 7 in the morning, and over Sunday, the janitor is solely responsible for the safety of the building and its contents."

A detailed explanation is given of the jobs the janitor is expected to perform at various intervals:

"Sweep and dust offices and downstairs lunch room; clean wash rooms; tend fires; bale up waste paper; close all fire doors at night. Sweep and dust sample floors; clean all cuspidors; pump up air pressure in sprinkler system.

"Wash windows monthly, inside and out, also glass partitions when needed. In the spring and fall, put up storm windows and awnings. Scrub sample floors.

"Additional work (as time permits)—Setting up and knocking down samples. Painting, varnishing, general maintenance and repairs on building equipment and stock. A handy mechanic who can do a little carpentry, painting, glass-setting, pipe-fitting and simple metal work can make himself doubly useful."

The janitor does not have a private sleeping room, the letter points out, "but makes up his bed on a davenport in a small room that is used for conferences during the day time."

The company says that its building "should be home" to the janitor, and they "prefer that a large part of his leisure time be spent there."

"It must be understood, however," they add, "that no company of any kind, men, women, or children, relatives or otherwise, will be permitted to visit him there at any time."

The pay "will be adjusted to the energy and ability of the man," and the firm is enthusiastic over the "very good chance the job affords a man to save money."

Union Dress Workers Win Important Shop

New York.—Dress makers affiliated to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union won a 12-year fight against the Milgrim shop, fashionable Fifth avenue dress firm.

This dress concern was the storm center of the present strike, but its long anti-union policy has been changed to recognition of the union, abolishment of the "yellow dog," an agreement to permit review of discharge and a promise not to discriminate against unionists who were active in the strike.

The concern, early in the present dressmakers' general strike, asked for an injunction against picketing, which is pending.

More than 200 tailors returned to work. The unionists are jubilant over their victory, which is more far-reaching than the number of workers involved. The Milgrim shop was considered a key position and the union spent more than $100,000 the last twelve years in attempting to organize this plant.

BIRTH RATE DROPS.

Washington.—The nation's birth rate last year was the lowest since 1915, when the registration area was established, according to the bureau census. Infant mortality rate was the lowest on record. Oregon had the lowest birth rate and for the sixth consecutive year the lowest infant mortality rate.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

This column is pleased to make its reappearance after a few weeks' absence. It hopes that this stay will be permanent and a source of interest to the readers of The Labor World in general and to the musicians of local No. 80 in particular. If there was ever a time in the history of our organization when the interest and help of every individual member was needed, it is the present, when the national convention is only months off. Preparation is essential to the success of any undertaking, but for a convention it takes early preparation—the earlier the better. President Kennedy has appointed a fine committee, and they should be able to get results. Now, it's up to us, the members, to follow and help them in every way possible. Let's go, gentlemen!

Considerable wonder was expressed when President Kennedy made Buck Weaver a member of the Ways and Means committee. Members of Worthy's band, however, set everything at ease by saying that the president's action was brought about by Mr. Weaver's ability not to own a car and still be able to find ways and means of transportation to and from jobs.

This week the Phi Delta Kappa fraternity entertained with the first of a series of dances, the proceeds of which are to apply to the convention fund of Local No. 80. Credit for the institution of these affairs should be given to Miss Tommye Lasater and her orchestra. It is a step in the right direction for the leaders of local orchestras to interest clubs and fraternities into wanting music. The more they dance, the more we play.

Local No. 80 welcomes to its membership Mr. Dick Lewis, who performs on the trumpet and trombone. Dick is playing with Jimmy Cox and his Collegians. This orchestra is the only local one using two trumpets in a seven-piece combination, and is making quite a success with this arrangement.

We see where Chicago, the Windy City, is striving and as it appears, is succeeding in becoming the leading center for dance bands in the country. There seems to be scarcely an orchestra with an outstanding reputation that is not booked out of Chicago. Paul Whiteman is now playing at Al Quodback's Granada Cafe, while Ben Bernie is similarly engaged at the College Inn. At various hotels and cafes are a long list of nationally known orchestras that includes Coon Sanders, Wayne King, Tom Gerun, Jan Garber, Jimmy Green, Sleepy Hall, etc. Add to these such outstanding studio bands as those of Frank Westphal of WENR, Jules Herbeveaux of KYW, and Jean Goldkettf of WGN, and others. It truly makes a most imposing array.

Miss Nell Brenizer and Ramon Pryor were very well received at the Tivoli several weeks ago when Mr. Pryor sang at the midnight performance of "Whoopee." Ramon has one of the best voices in the city, and we hope that the Tivoli management sees fit to again present us some live musicians.

The Peruchi Players are continuing their good work and packed houses. A great portion of their success should be reserved for Lester Cohn and his associates. The presence of live musicians in a theatre seems to give the final touch to the entertainment. One of the Bijou patrons was heard to remark last week that the music alone was worth the price of admission. Anyway, the combination of good music and good acting should draw the crowds, and that's exactly what it's been doing.

Frank Worthy and his Collegians are to be congratulated on the genuine success of the dances at Signal mountain. The crowd, it seems, just wouldn't let them stop, and so there was nothing for Mr. Saeger to do but steam heat the casino and sound the cry, "On with the dance."

The Labor World is evidently widely read, as I got a card this week signed, "Public Sentiment," which said who cares a "darn" if Brooks and Oehlson have beans or not. Well, the writer might be interested in hearing that they served Brooks turnips the last time he was out there, thanks for the change. Now if Public Sentiment will only send The Labor World some news of the office it will be appreciated. You know the columns have to be filled.

Hope the department will select a site and start the new postoffice at once, so as to give employment to a lot of unemployed.

Building Trades Ask Preference Be Given Citizens on Public Works

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, Nov. 6.—In convention here, the Massachusetts State Building Trades council voted to resubmit to the next session of the legislature a bill asking for preference to citizens and veterans in employing men for public works construction in the state. This bill was defeated in the state senate, and the fourteen members of that body who voted against it have been publicly censured by the Building Trades council. Originally, it was decided to publish a list of those in the state senate who voted for the council's bill.

The officers of the council will decide if the initiative and referendum will be invoked and election of memberships in the Massachusetts public utilities commission be started, instead of having these members appointed by the incumbent governor. There was considerable discussion over this question, and it was felt that the members of the public utilities board should be directly responsible to the voters, because of the importance of their offices and misuse of their power, with the rights of the people frequently ignored by those supposed to be their servants.

The council has petitioned the members of the Middlesex county commission to order a single contractor to handle all the work on contracts awarded by the commissioners, instead of assigning a number of subcontracts in different lines. The officers were instructed to have a conference with the commission on this subject.

Governor Preaches 'Buy at Home,' But Sends Printing Out of State

Durham, N. C., Nov. 6.—Gov. O. Max Gardner, of North Carolina, has for several months been expounding his theory of economic betterment for the state of North Carolina in what is known as the "Live at Home and Buy at Home" program. In line with the program of the governor a week was set aside recently in which Carolina-made products were featured in practically all the stores of the state.

Nullifying the actual theory itself, however, the fact obtrudes itself that state printing is still being done outside of the state. Five "open shop" printing plants outside of the state were given these printing contracts.

This matter has been called to the attention of the state officials by the members of the International Typographical union, but as yet have had no reply. Evidently, the idea is that the "Live at Home—Buy at Home" policy should be followed by citizens of the state, but can be gracefully overlooked by state officials in giving contracts, and by city and county officials in using foreign labor, and importing cheap labor, or using prison labor.

Depression Hits Price of Hooch

Durham, N. C., Nov. 6.—Uncontrolled competition and the present economic depression is affecting one of North Carolina's most important basic industries—distilling and bootlegging, reports Alfred Hoffman, southern organizer for the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers.

The drop in Wall street is nothing compared to the drop in liquor prices in this county. The bottom is dropping out, with a fall in the demand for all forms of hooch. Latest quotations on the liquor market range as low as 45 cents per pint for so-called "corn liquor." Investigators report that quotations also range as low as $1 per full half gallon of staple bootleg. The average profit on 10-ounce pints of "leg" is reported as being 50 cents per pint, on the high class market, as low as 10 cents per pint on the low class market.

Standard Oil Unit Backs Oil Control

New York.—Government control of oil production is favored by Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, largest unit in Standard Oil group.

The Lamp, official magazine of the New Jersey corporation, has rejected the old theory of control of one's property and accepts regulation of oil production by state commissions, as is the rule in Oklahoma and Texas.

The oil company's publication admits that regulation, or proration of oil output, defers income and holds in check freedom of development, but insists that "proration's many advantages outweigh its inconveniences so greatly that all operators must come at length to embrace it."

The advances of the labor movement have always been up grade. A constant demand for union-made goods and service will remove some of the grade.

NEW SOUTH WALES LABOR CAPTURES GOVERNMENT

New York.—The New South Wales labor party captured the government at last week's election, according to cables from that far-away country.

J. T. Lang, former labor premier, will again take charge. The present unemployment, he has promised, will be his first consideration. Banking interests are alarmed at labor's success. He charged that banks "engineered a financial crisis for their own benefit."

DENIED PROTECTION FROM COMPETITION

Sacramento, Cal.—A public utility which allows its service to run down "until competition knocks at the door" is not entitled to protection against competition, according to the state supreme court.

The ruling upheld an order by the state railroad commission which permits a new ferry line to compete with an existing ferry line across San Diego bay between San Diego and Coronado.

communication asking for a conference, to Harry R. Fitzgerald, president of the textile corporation, premised on the statement recently appearing in Danville newspapers in an advertisement, that he (Fitzgerald) would be agreeable to a conference "with his own employes."

The letter dated at Danville as follows:

"Mr. R. H. Fitzgerald, Danville, Va.

"Dear Sir: There appeared in the Danville Bee on October 14 a full page advertisement in which it was stated that Mr. Fitzgerald would be glad to meet his own employes at any time to discuss any grievance they might have with the mill management.

"In conformity with this suggestion the undersigned committee has been authorized to arrange a conference to be held in your Dan River office on Wednesday, October 22, at 11 o'clock. Should this time or place be inconvenient for you the committee will be glad to meet you at any time or place designated by you.

"(Signed) CARL HOUCH,
Chairman of Committee.
L. G. NUNN,
Secretary of Committee."

Mr. Fitzgerald, up to this time, has ignored the letter, and no word from any of the mill management has been received, although it is known that many Danville merchants are hanging on to their business by their eyebrows and are volubly protesting against the company tactics in delaying attempts at a settlement.

Will Stick to Limit

Officers of the local union said that if the policy of the company was to fight instead of negotiate, they accepted the gage of battle and the workers would remain out indefinitely, or until they were granted the right, without penalty of discharge, of joining a trade union of their own choosing.

In this connection, the response to the appeal of the American Federation of Labor for financial aid for the strikers here is beginning to be felt. Outside contributions are filtering in from organizations and persons not directly connected with the labor movement.

The relief committee is now providing food and fuel for upwards of 4,000 workers and their families, which means that 12,000 to 16,000 persons are being cared for.

Buford Nash, president of the local union, said contributions of shoes and clothing, as well as cash donations, would be thankfully received by the relief committee.

A carload of food has been contributed by Textile Workers' local union No. 33, of the Pequot mills of Salem, Mass. The car contains 40,000 pounds of flour among other articles of food, and will make up into more than 40,000 loaves of bread.

PRISON AND WELFARE EQUAL SCHOOL COSTS

Des Moines, Iowa.—Penal and welfare institutions cost this state almost as much as education during the past two years. The institutions cost $12,000,000, education $13,500,000 and more than $8,000,000 was expended by various state departments.

WOULD NULLIFY STATE LAWS ON COMPENSATION

oddy Miners Charge Queer Stunt to Operators.

ORCE EMPLOYES TO SIGN AWAY RIGHTS?

opy of Alleged Agreement Submitted—Say Scheme Is Child of Local Lawyer.

Soft coal miners in the United States have had plenty of experience with yellow-dog contracts in various forms, but an "agreement" believed to be new at least Tennessee coal diggers is reported as being demanded by the new operators of the mines at Soddy.

Officials of the union in the north-county community brought The Labor World this week a copy of what they declared is an agreement forced upon every man employed by the concern now attempting to dig coal from the veins abandoned more than a year ago by the Durham Coal and Iron company. This paper pledges the employe not to be bound by provisions of the workmen's compensation laws, and includes an affidavit that "the undersigned employe" was not "advised, counseled or encouraged by the employer or by anyone acting for the employer."

Under the Durham Coal and Iron company's operations, the Soddyites recalled, the mines were worked for many years at a profit to the owners, employing normally some 350 to 500 men, and always with skilled union miners. Something over a year ago, however, this concern decided the veins were exhausted and abandoned the field, transferring the property to the Durham Land company. About the first of June, this year, the "Milligan-Armor Coal corporation" began activities toward reopening the abandoned works, and brought in a few miners from outside Soddy. The union members, the story of the officials continues, then suggested a committee to see the new operators, but the corporation heads refused to treat with those appointed. Later another committee was appointed, but no results were obtained.

Meantime, some fifteen or twenty men, a majority from other fields, were employed, and a small amount of coal has been produced. Prospectors, it was said, are busy attempting to locate new sources of supply. It was reported that men employed on this work are receiving no compensation, but have been promised so much per ton for the coal found—and dug by them.

Attempts have been made, it was said, to market the small amount of coal taken from the new works at Soddy, but the citizens of the town, many of whom have spent many years of their lives in the underground passages, resent the method of operations of the new concern, and have refused to burn the product. It is reported that the company is planning to open a local retail yard on East Main street.

Copy of the alleged agreement, referred to above, said to be the work of a well-known Chattanooga attorney, is as follows:

Milligan-Armor Corporation:

A Danville Strike Picket Post

DANVILLE STRIKERS DECLARE WILL SEE GREAT MILLS ROT BEFORE SURRENDERING PINCIPLE

Victims of Industrial Autocracy "Telling the World" They Are in Fight to Stay, Win, Lose or Draw. Financial Aid Begins to Arrive.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Nov. 13.—It's a determined band of strikers—these 4,500 textile workers of the Dan River and Riverside cotton mills, tossed away like a worn-out glove from their jobs because they had the temerity to join a trade union and abandon the waterlogged "industrial democracy" set up for them eleven years ago by H. R. Fitzgerald, president of the mills corporation.

These Virginians—most of them natives of Danville—are in this strike to stay, win, lose or draw. They say so openly. They are telling the world. But in any event, the so-called industrial democracy plan—Mr. Fitzgerald's pet scheme—is as lifeless as a salt mackerel. The sharp winds of autumn, which have been whistling through the frost-bitten stalks of the withered flowers that adorn the mill lots and the open spaces around the ornate Y. M. C. A. building and Hylton hall, have sung the dirge of industrial democracy, as practiced at Dan River and Riverside. Its dust is scattered and the workers say "Let it go! We've had more than enough."

Strange to say, the workers as a whole have nothing but kindly feeling toward Harry R. Fitzgerald, the company president. They do not speak disparagingly of him, and at union meetings and other gatherings of a formal nature, which are always opened with prayer by some worker in overalls and leaky shoes, Mr. Fitzgerald is remembered in the petition. It's an eerie thing to one whose conception of a strike is more or less lethal, starting with a black eye and ofttimes ending in a funeral.

But none of that in Danville. These workers have a fanatical respect, almost, for law observance. They are gentle natured—no other term describes them—but at the same time they are adamant. Just now they are insisting on their long-delayed rights, and not even their gentleness nor Mr. Fitzgerald's mightiness will turn them away from this objective. That much is certain.

The strike is in its sixth week. For twenty-four hours a day two-score or more picket posts are maintained by the workers, each post manned by a half-dozen to fifty men and women. They are impartial in their picketing, and they guard the mill property with scrupulous care, because, they say, it is where their job is and they intend to return to it in due time. The few old watchmen in the building drowse away the night with nothing to do and nothing to fear.

Here of late the workers and their families—numbering all told between 12,000 and 15,000 souls—have wondered where their next meal was coming from, for it takes money to feed such an army, not to mention providing gas, water, oil and coal. Contributions from the organized labor world have not yet got started toward this key strike. The workers here know it takes time, and they have been doing the best they can.

November weather in Virginia is snappy; and quite so when there is no wood, coal or oil. But crews of strikers, with axes on their shoulders, accepted the invitation of some kindly farmers to "come out and help yourself to the wood," and cut truck loads of sizeable poles, hauled them to the edge of town, where a power woodsaw was rigged up, and other willing hands cut the poles into stove lengths. Most of it was green wood of a non-burnable nature, but that made no difference. The wood was sawed and delivered to those needing it.

Shoes had grown thin since the summer days, and kids had to go to school and pickets had to tramp the lines around the mills. So a cobbler and his shop, with an extra workman hired, was taken over and shoes have been repaired, where possible, and some new ones bought for children and for men who are compelled to be out of doors.

Food has been scarce, but the kids have had milk and porridge and the adults turnip greens and white pork and whatever else the commissaries could provide. But there will be no turkey for Thanksgiving, or Christmas either, for that matter. Santa Claus will drive his sleigh in some other direction from Schoolfield and Danville this year. The kids may look wistful and dad and mother solemn, but it's all in the game, these workers say. "We simply cannot work again under the old conditions!" is the burden of their plaint. Nor will they.

In the meantime the mill owners are steeped in silence. Mr. Fitzgerald is seen now and then, being driven around town in his runabout. At night—and day—two policemen guard his pleasant home on West Main street in relays. Not that he need have any fear of molestation from his former employes, for they would not harm him or any of his property—but Mr. Fitzgerald is a man of some consequence and doubtless deserves what he gets.

Sundry efforts have been made to have the mill owners, or those in authority, meet a committee of his old workers, but every effort is balked.

"In another month they will have been starved out," one official said, "and they will come back to work." Thus do these Christian gentlemen who would not spill human blood under any circumstances, sit back and wait until the spectre of gaunt hunger whips the mill workers back into line or starves them to the point where pellagra and other diseases takes them off one by one, until the morale is broken and the spirit dead, and they crawl back to work on any terms.

Not a pretty picture to conjure up. As a matter of fact the realization of the mill owners will never come to pass. The 4,500 textile workers, members of local union 1685, will watch the Dan River and Riverside mills rot down before they will go back under the "industrial democracy" scheme. And as for strike-breakers? But why bring that up. The mills are not producing despite tempting offers to workers. A few go in the main gates each morning—but they cost the company money. They are treated contemptuously by the overseers and second-hands. Recently those on the inside threatened to strike because of working conditions and may yet. The mills of the gods grind slowly!

But with food and supplies coming in the workers are ready to stand the gaff until it is over. They are a courageous band—for it takes nerve to deliberately endure partial starvation, cold and privations for a principle. That is why there is not a chance of these workers deserting the union for a mess of pottage. They're not built that way.

CHARITY WORK COSTS REVEAL UPWARD TREND

Washington.—The cost for family charitable work is upward, according to the United States Children's bureau.

Monthly relief nearly doubled in fifteen cities during December, 1929, when approximately $1,000,000 was spent by public and private welfare agencies. In January, this year, nineteen cities showed a 48.6 per cent increase, compared with January, 1929.

TRAIN TRAVEL SAFEST.

Boston.—Riding in a train is thirteen times as safe as riding in an automobile, according to the governor's committee on street and highway safety. A ride in a street car is 22 times safer than in a motor vehicle, said the committee.

These figures are the result of a study of nation-wide accident statistics.

ANDREW G. LINN RECEIVES CALL OF GRIM REAPER

"Grand Old Man" of Typos Goes to Reward.

WAS MEMBER NO. 89 OVER FORTY YEARS

One of Best Known Local Printers Surrenders After Long Battle for Life.

ANDREW G. LINN

Surrendering to a malady which had gradually sapped his vitality over a period of illness extending through many weeks, Andrew G. Linn, 73, one of the oldest trades unionists, in point of service, in Chattanooga, passed away last Monday morning at 2:30, at his home, 505 Wyatt place.

"Andy" Linn, as he was affectionately known to hundreds of his fellow workers, belonged to that "fast-thinning line" of veterans which constituted the bulwark of the trade union movement. A major part of a long and useful life had been given to the service of his fellowman through the union of his craft. A substantial citizen, a devoted husband and father, the soul of honesty and integrity, he had builded for himself during his more than forty years' residence in Chattanooga a place in the hearts of hundreds of warm personal friends, and his passing is mourned by all with whom he came into contact.

Mr. Linn was born April 23, 1858, at Landersburg, Pa., and at an early age entered a printing office at Bloomfield, Pa., where he became unusually proficient as a compositor. He was married in Ohio, in 1885, to Miss Lucy E. Coleman, and after a residence of one year in Knoxville came to Chattanooga in 1887, where he resided until his demise Monday. Mrs. Linn passed away a year ago. A son, Ward, and daughter, Mrs. Mabel Linn Taylor, survive.

Immediately upon coming to Chattanooga in 1887, Mr. Linn became actively identified with the work of No. 89, and during the entire time has held some place of trust on behalf of his fellow printers. He was at one time president of his local union, and held the office of secretary-treasurer continuously for sixteen years until his failing health necessitated his retirement October 1, last. He enjoyed another distinction given to few members of his local union, having been twice named to represent No. 89 at the conventions of the International Typographical union—at Minneapolis, in 1910, and at Indianapolis in 1927.

Mr. Linn had worked at several of the local commercial offices, but perhaps the major part of his time was spent in the newspaper offices. From the job office of the Times he went to the newspaper composing room of that paper, and later spent several years as foreman of the News composing room. Leaving that paper, he was in charge of the printing plant of the Frictionless Metal company, until that concern removed to St. Louis. For the past few years Mr. Linn had been an extra proofreader on the News.

Funeral services, attended by large numbers of sorrowing friends, were held Tuesday afternoon at the Third Presbyterian church, of which he was a member, the Rev. T. B. Cowan conducting the services.

Interment was at Forest Hills, with

LABOR WINS "BEST CONGRESS SINCE 1912"—FRIENDLY GROUPS ENLARGED IN BOTH HOUSES

Senate Supporters of Judge Parker Defeated and Men Who Stood With Workers Re-Elected—Norris Easy Victor.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 13.—Labor scored heavy victories in last week's national elections, retiring to private life some additional members of the senate who voted for Parker and generally enlarging the forward-looking wedge in the senate and house, from a purely non-partisan viewpoint.

In the absence of President Green, Secretary Frank Morrison, of the American Federation of Labor, described the newly elected congress as "the most friendly since the first Wilson administration" and this verdict seemed to express the general feeling of trade union leaders.

Some new pro-labor faces will be seen in the new congress.

Among the outstanding labor achievements was the defeat of Senator Roscoe C. McCulloch, republican, of Ohio, who was one of the leading supporters of Judge Parker in that famous battle.

Allen Is Defeated.

Another ardent Parker supporter sent down to defeat was Senator Henry J. Allen, republican, Kansas. Other pro-Parker senators disappeared earlier, Phipps, of Colorado, having declined to run, while Simmons, of North Carolina, was beaten in the primaries. Blease, of South Carolina, and Ransdell, of Louisiana, were also beaten in the primaries.

Interest in the victories of friends easily centered in the veteran Norris, of Nebraska, and Walsh, of Montana. Norris won a handsome victory over a series of amazing moves. It is interesting to note that while Norris won, Congressman Carroll Reese, Tennessee, chairman of the house committee which had the Norris Muscle Shoals bill in charge and which blocked that bill, went down to defeat. If power was an issue in Tennessee and in Nebraska, it also was an issue in New York, where Franklin D. Roosevelt, indorsed by labor, piled up a record victory for re-election as governor.

New Faces Friendly to Labor.

New faces friendly to labor will include Senator-elect James J. Davis, Pennsylvania, and Senator-elect Edward P. Costigan, Colorado, together with that of J. Hamilton Lewis, Illinois, former senator and victor over Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick.

Some new faces will come backed by local records, but without national records. Among these is Senator Huey P. Long, who will come from Louisiana to replace the pro-Parkerite, Ransdell, who was beaten in the primaries.

Senator Borah's re-election was assured long before the day of the contest. Senator Couzens, Michigan, supported by labor, won easily.

Dwight P. Morrow, once of the House of Morgan, later ambassador to Mexico, won handily in New Jersey as an outstanding wet, but with a future on labor matters that must be developed as time passes.

Most of the pro-Parker senators were not up for re-election. The same holds true of the members of the senate judiciary committee who opposed labor's anti-injunction bill.

Some of the pro-Parker senators were re-elected. Among these were Hastings, of Delaware, and Carter Glass, of Virginia.

Gifford Pinchot Wins.

Gifford Pinchot, after going through one of the most amazing races ever witnessed in Pennsylvania, in which power, party regularity and almost everything else figured, won a great victory. Labor won in several other gubernatorial contests.

The victory of Davis for the senate in Pennsylvania brings into the immediate future the necessity for selection of a successor as secretary of labor, a matter about which there has been speculation for several months.

Political "experts" have ascribed the various results to every possible cause, including prohibition, tariff, the administration and power interests. In the maze of explanations there has been and will be a great deal of purely partisan fiction. It is not shown, for example, that tariff has been a particularly effective issue in any state. Prohibition, of course, has been an issue, and the industrial depression undoubtedly has helped swing many votes one way or another on the purely academic assumption that new faces in the house and senate can "do something about it," perhaps on the old theory that "there ought to be a law."

Labor Makes Clear Gain.

From labor's non-partisan point of view, leaving aside all party prejudices and taking into account the changes in seats held by both parties, labor has registered a clear net gain in strength in congress, improving the outlook for anti-injunction legislation and for other measures sought by labor. Federal employes, forming a great army of workers, have apparently improved their situation considerably through some of the overturns in the house and senate.

Secretary Morrison said:

"I predicted some time ago that the next congress would be the most friendly to labor since the congress elected in 1912, during the first Wilson administration. The election has borne out my prediction."

Describing the result of the election as very satisfactory to labor, Mr. Morrison said that he was confident that more legislation urged by organized labor will be passed in the next congress than in many years.

Leading Auto Concern Has Wide Interests

New York.—General Motors corporation, from the standpoint of earnings, has become the largest corporation in the world, according to a historical review of this concern by the banking house of Spencer. Trask & Co.

The corporation produces eight different grades of auto and supplies most of its own parts and accessories, through ownership of companies producing Fisher bodies, Delco-Remy lighting and ignition systems, Hyatt roller bearings, New Departure brakes and ball bearings, Klaxon horns and AC spark plugs.

General Motors also manufacture Frigidaire refrigerators, has a half interest with Standard Oil of New Jersey in Ethyl Gasoline corporation, a 51 per cent interest in General Motors Radio corporattion, a 25 per cent interest in Bendix Aviation corporation, a 40 per cent interest in Fokker Aircraft corporation and ownership of the Allison Engineering company, manufacturers of aeroplane motors.

General Motors also has an 80 per cent interest in Adam Opel of Germany, which produces 40 per cent of the German automobiles.

MONTY WARD'S ADDS TO LOCAL JOB HUNTERS?

Correspondent Declares Chattanoogans Displaced.

NEW MANAGER GIVES JOBS TO "OUTSIDERS"

Situation Recalls Operating Methods When Chain Branch Was Opened.

While Chattanoogans of all groups are endeavoring to solve the problem of unemployment in the city, and business and professional men, religious, political leaders and laboring men and women are "putting their heads together" in an effort to provide a little work here and there to relieve the stress, while the Community Chest has just completed a successful appeal to Chattanoogans to "give more for a greater need"—at least one branch store of a mighty national chain which is appealing to local citizens for support is adding to the number of Chattanoogans out of work by replacing employes with men and women from other sections, according to a letter to The Labor World this week from C. H. North, who was a floor manager for the local branch store of Montgomery Ward & Co., mail order and chain store corporation with headquarters in Chicago.

Mr. North's communication will recall The Labor World's expose of conditions in the local Montgomery Ward store when that concern first opened its Chattanooga branch. Publicity at that time, recounting violation of state laws, and numerous activities called distasteful to southerners, was declared to have resulted in some improvement for local employes of the chain store—at least it brought a promise that certain laws of Tennessee would in future be lived up to by the management of the Chattanooga branch of the Chicago concern.

Mr. North's letter, which has every earmark of sincerity and truth, declares that a new management sent in from another section has replaced several local employes with others brought from outside the city, thus adding to the out-of-works which are causing so much concern to the citizenship.

"I have no desire," he declares, "to injure the business of this fine old company, but I do say that justice has taken flight in this particular case, and I wish to protect, if I can, any chain store employe faced with a similar situation."

The letter goes into detail as to the number of employes already displaced, and offers to give names and dates if necessary.

Rumors of the situation at the Monty Ward local store have been spread over the city recently, and Mr. North's communication bears out in principle the stories which are being told.

It follows:

Editor The Labor World:

I feel it my duty to acquaint you with the details of a situation in one of our local stores, namely, Montgomery Ward & Co. I am sure it will be of interest to your readers, for it has a bearing on their welfare. Montgomerd Ward & Co. changed their manager at this store on Oct. 1 last. In making the transfer Mr. Hart, in address to the employes of the store, stated that he wanted every one to know that each and every one of us had a job and he did not intend to change the personnel of the store in any way. The very next morning letters were written to friends and former employes of this manager offering positions. And these men and women were from outside of our city and were brought here to replace employes that have their permanent residence here, who live and must work and spend their salaries in this city. In face of the present industrial and commercial situation this is a civic crime. We must protect our own people in a time like this.

Mr. Hart, the present manager, made a statement that he intended discharging every clerk and sales person in the entire store and replace them with his own selection and to date he has discharged without a moment's notice three men holding the more responsible positions and replaced by three of his friends from Georgia; also four women were likewise let out and in every case they were people whose services were entirely satisfactory before Mr. Hart's arrival. Also each and every one of the persons of which I write are people who must work to live. Their very bread and butter depends on it. I will furnish names of all

DANVILLE STRIKE NOT SPECTACULAR

The strike of 4,500 Danville textile workers against wage cuts, speed-ups and the mill owners' "industrial democracy" is not spectacular. It has no "news" value because the strike has taken the form of a determined siege. The underlying cause of this strike can not be removed by flash headlines. If the workers lose, an alleged "industrial democracy" will be forced upon them. Their success, however, will affect the entire south.

There is more involved in this strike than wages and working conditions. The workers are fighting against a paternalism that reaches into their individual lives. Great fundamental struggles, such as is now on in Danville, are not spectacular. No worker should ignore the far-reaching consequences of this strike because it lacks "news" value, as understood by the daily press.

WILL STABILIZATION HELP?

Stabilization schemes are based on less workers. Where an employe, by speed-up methods, can do the work of two men, it is called "elimination of waste." The social effect is ignored. Theorists claim that if output is maintained, prosperity is based on dog-eat-dog competition—prices will be reduced and greater consumption and more work will result.

Stabilization proponents do not point out that scientific processes, automatic machinery and speeding methods are continuous. These processes enlarge the unemployed army and reduce the number of buyers. The job seeker is not interested in prices. He wants work to secure purchasing power to take advantage of lower prices.

President Green reminds stabilizers that higher wages will permit disposition of output and shorter hours will lessen unemployment. If these facts are ignored, the forces that brought the present crisis will develop another.

Stabilization is a phase of the movement toward automatic machinery, scientific processes, chain stores, mergers and a general lessening of employed. Stabilization and relief for unemployed are opposites.

BANK NOTES

Hurrah for Horton.

Amount of state funds deposited in the Caldwell bank is given as $4,400,000. Other of those more or less, to the layman, mysterious items run also into the millions. Cash on hand is reported as $82.55.

Walter Gardner suggests maybe that was in the stamp drawer and the boys overlooked it.

What's a few millions, more or less, between friends?

Everything's all right. Gov. Horton is using "all the power at his command" to protect the people's interests.

* * *

Hurrah for Horton.

Wasn't it a glorious coincidence that news of the Caldwell mystery began to leak out on election day? Fate.

Speaking about Bank Commissioner ——, it will be said that only one appointed the commissioner, he gave some unlucky unemployed constable half brother a job on the staff. We now have to support him and police until money is again provided for a payroll.

Hurrah for Horton.

Anyhow, Tennessee is still democratic.

THE AMERICAN ROUTE

How to find the road through industrial maladjustment to real and continuous prosperity is engaging the attention of the world today as never before. Every kind of nostrum and proposal has its adherents. Among other things the clamor for remedy through political schemes continues. However, it happens that labor, in a world sense, has more political party power than has been thus held in any other industrial crisis.

Labor holds political party power in England and its methods of grappling politically with unemployment have brought no success. The stinging defeats administered to the British labor party in municipal elections recently must mark at least to some extent a disgust with political action as a remedy for unemployment.

In Australia, where labor controls politically, a most acute situation exists. South Australia was saved from bankruptcy because of money contributions from the other states. A super-council rules, and there seems no hope of finding a way out from under the load of doles and fixed indebtedness.

Some twenty-nine nations have unemployment insurance. But unemployment does not yield to the political treatment of those who have the greatest stake in effecting a cure—unemployment does not yield to purely political treatment.

There is fascination in the business of proclaiming what could be done "if we had the power"—"if we controlled government"—but there is little to show for it after the power has been gained. And meantime great numbers of the ablest trade union leaders find themselves taken from industrial activity and generally made unfit for a return to their trade union posts.

Governments can help, political wisdom is valuable, political power is an asset and a necessity. But political power can be had without turning the labor movement into a political machine and governments are as unlikely as ever to apply the final remedy for unemployment. That is, unless peoples are determined to go the route of state supremacy and take all that goes with political bureaucracy, oligarchy and dictatorship. And even then there is no guarantee of cure. Abundant proof of the dubious quality of the effectiveness of the state as the boss of all things and the healer of all ills is found in Russia and in Italy.

Democratic nations, if democracy is to survive, must turn to a development of democratic practice within industry. The autocracy that persists in industry must break down and give way to the methods and practices of democracy, so that there may be that measure of check and balance within industry necessary to sane operation. There appears no other way to safety and sanity.

The effort to reach an industrial ill through the democracy of political life is an application of the right cure through pretty much the wrong channel. When industry learns to develop within industry those measures of democratic practice that are necessary to regulated control and when those measures are related properly to the democratic political life of the nation, real remedy will be in sight.

Meanwhile, we are tinkering, perhaps, with success for the time being, but not with any finality of effect.

"POLICE POWER OF STATE."

The Oklahoma supreme court upheld restriction of oil output by a state commission on the ground that such action is under the police power of the state. The decision is another recognition of the sweeping power that permits states and their administrations to adopt new methods to meet public needs and necessities.

Police power is not written law. It is no part of a state constitution. It is inherent in a sovereign state, just as memory, understanding and will are inseparably attached to normal man.

This police power is rarely discussed by citizens, who too often are unaware of their power to shape and mold a state. These citizens expect public officials to act, and the latter are willing that the fiction be continued. The officials, as a rule, maintain the status quo, while assuring the public that they are "studying the question."

Practically no social legislation is impossible under the police power of the state. It can, as the Oklahoma supreme court declares, "adjust itself to the necessities of moral, sanitary, economic and political conditions" of a people.

This change is illustrated by Oklahoma telling oil well owners how much petroleum they may produce—a procedure undreamed of a decade ago. The police power of the state, for instance, permits a state to take drastic action on unemployment. When a person says a thing can't be done, under this governmental theory he confesses ignorance of our system or he seeks an alibi for inaction.

New suggestions, however, will not be accepted without a struggle. Persistent effort is necessary to compel acceptance of new viewpoints—these are the last thing a people will accept. Long agitation and economic necessity are the invincible powers that must be placed behind advanced social thought.

Every member of organized labor should realize that the police power of the state can be extended to undreamed of lengths whenever public opinion is aroused to the need for social changes.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

Look out for one thing in this business of unemployment relief. Look out for moves to take work away from one group of workers in order that it may be handed to another group at cut rates.

The nice old gentlemen from the banks and the counting houses who get themselves put on local unemployment committees will have their financial ears glued to the ground, looking for chances to soak those who have jobs with the club of those who have none.

Nice, easy-talking, flinty-hearted old gentlemen like to try tricks like that.

Of course wherever organized labor is represented on local committees that ancient trick will have a hard time getting by.

But the fellows whose fingers are calloused from coupon-clipping will try to put it over—no, worse than that, they are trying.

A furious storm was raised in one such local committee when pious, but poorly informed, persons suggested somehow finding work in the city's dairies.

It happened that the drivers in the dairies in question work 365 days in the year—no day off ever, no rest. The labor man attacked this situation with such fury that the entire committee became interested in devising ways and means of bringing the dairies to their senses, cutting down the work-week and making legitimate jobs for a lot of them.

It isn't long since these dairies refused to deal with the union and establish decent conditions. Today the workers may get the civic support denied them back in those earlier days.

All over the country there are shocking working conditions and still more shocking wages.

It is a fact that thousands upon thousands of persons who have families to support go to work each week, putting in long hours and giving expert service, for less than $15 a week.

The good old custom of firing workers so as to hire others at lower rates may tempt many an employer today.

And they can do just what they say they can do. There are plenty in line these days.

But there is a social conscience and it can be aroused.

It ought to shock the moral sense of the nation that so many should be desperate for work. It ought also to shock the moral sense of the nation that so many should work for so little.

But to use the idle to club standards still further down ought to bring the moral sense of the nation to a sickening understanding of just how callous and actually indecent a great part of the economic structure can become.

Men turned out into wildernesses and other places where their accustomed conveniences and surroundings are missing usually soon lose much of that veneer called civilization.

Employers, given a sea of clamoring workers from which to pick, seem soon to lose their sense of industrial decency. They seem to go back to the days of baron and serf.

It is the job of organized labor to hold the lines for decency.

NOTABLE, BUT NOT FINAL, VICTORY

It is important and tremendously good news that there will be more friends of labor in the coming congress. But right now is a good time to cool off and form a balanced estimate as to what the election means.

Among things it does not mean is this: The new congress will not cure unemployment. Perhaps a lot of hope went into the casting of votes, but realization is always several jumps behind hope.

The big thing is that there are more friends of human liberty and of the rights of man in the new congress than are in the old one. That is of enormous importance. It may have its effect internationally as well as within our borders. But trade unionists need to keep this safely under their hats: No political result can achieve for them those fundamental measures of progress that must, by their very nature, be taken within industry through economic organization. And if it were possible it would be highly undesirable.

The election has not lifted any of the load from the trade union organizations of the United States. Nor should it. To organize wage earners is the big, continuous job, if industrial justice is to come.

We rejoice in a notable victory—but we don't quit working at the real job!

What Next!

The perfection of a device to prevent noise from entering rooms through ventilating spaces was announced recently at Hartford, Conn., by Hiram Maxim, the inventor. A successful demonstration was given at a meeting of directors of a Hartford bank.

The new silencer is installed by opening the window, slipping the silencer into the opening and closing the window on the frame which holds the device. The silencer is five inches wide. An electric fan is a part of each silencer and may be used either for expelling air from or drawing it into the room.

A Weekly Comment on a Text From the Bible

Written for The Labor World

Mercy.

Text—"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy god."—Micah, 6:8.
Read John 8:1-11.

Micah, from whose prophecies our text is taken this week, lived during the Jewish monarchy in Moresheth, a small town 26 miles southwest of Jerusalem and situated on what scholars now term the Maritime Plain. He was a younger contemporary of Isaiah and prophesied about 735-725 B. C. Micah saw with remarkable clear vision the social wrongs of his age. There was one great social evil that abounded in his time and he was unsparing in his denunciation of it. He inveighs over and over again in his book against this one dominant failure of the old Hebrews, which was their utter lack of the quality of mercy. Holding up before them their lack of mercy, God cried to Israel through Micah: "Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied . . . thou shalt sow, but not reap." This was an awful prophecy—a nation was declared to soon fall until it would be but one step removed above the beasts of the field, a nation forever seeking its food but never satisfying its hunger, and again, as a nation giving its strength to produce yet never sharing as an owner in the harvest! All because the nation lacked mercy, the most sublime and tender expression of real love.

The Lesson for Us.

Among the many forms of worship that flourished at Athens stood an altar apart from the others, conspicuous and receiving its full share of attention as one of the chief Grecian altars. Though no image of a god rested on it and it was barren of any inscription of pagan dogma, supplicants thronged around it daily. It was dedicated to "Pity" and was venerated throughout all the ancient world, thereby becoming the first great assertion among mankind of the sanctity of Mercy. And so the ages as they have rolled on and on have further hallowed mercy. Weak men become strong because of it; strong men become gentle through it. It is true religion—

O brother man, fold to thy heart thy brother!
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

The world needs more of mercy, for sometimes in our littleness we forget that others have souls such as we have, feelings like ours and hearts as tender as our own. The man who in the light of this world's reckoning considers himself really "big" needs to temper his life with mercy, for it will make him bigger—in a splendid way. The man who does not hold such an exalted idea of himself needs mercy in his daily life, for it gives satisfaction and richness to humility. The seemingly unspiritual things—those everyday, prosaic duties of life—if interspersed with needs and thoughts of mercy become a joy. The rich man needs it, for without it his gold will cloy. The poor man needs it, for mercy will breathe a benediction upon his labors. Deeds of mercy are the one true revelation of the hearts that beat within us. Mercy is not a sign of weakness—it is an indication of strength. Oh, wondrous power of human sympathy—tender mercy! We all need it, and our yearning for it teaches us to render deeds of mercy.

The radio world, or at least that portion of it served by Station WDOD, was given a rare treat last Monday when two famous men were featured in public speeches. In the morning King George, of England, was on the air, and in the evening George Forbes, of Chattanooga, equally well known in these parts, appealed for support of local citizens in the campaign for the relief of unemployment. Both speeches were the subject for considerable comment. George (Forbes) asked The Labor World to make it clear that he was the party speaking in the evening, while the other George featured the morning program.

Pale and Weak

"I THINK Cardui is a wonderful medicine, for I improved greatly after taking it," says Mrs. A. W. English, of R. F. D. 4, Roanoke, Va. "When I was just a girl of 13, my mother gave this medicine to me, and it did me a great deal of good. I was weak and run-down. After I had taken Cardui awhile, I felt much better.

"In 1924, my health was poor. I felt miserable, and hadn't enough strength to do my housework. It took all my willpower to keep up. I was pale and weak.

"I got Cardui again and took it. My improvement was wonderful. I can recommend Cardui to others, for my health was so much better after I had taken a course of the Cardui Home Treatment."

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

A card was received this week from W. C. Morgan and J. L. Miller, who drove to Washington and Baltimore. They say they are having a great time.

J. L. Langston, of the East Chattanooga station, is back at work after a long absence on account of illness.

C. P. Connor has been off on vacation a few days. He came into the office the other day dressed up in overalls, like as if he had been working or intended to work.

Hubert Guthrie and Earl Miller went out to Pat Connor's one evening this week for dinner and incidentally to play a little game of checkers.

C. C. Oakes has returned to work. It rained, but he says he got those steps built at last.

Supt. Walker has bought a pecan tree which he will plant on his place. He expects to raise oodles of nuts some time in the future.

Also, Pat Connor is putting out a grove of pecan trees. There ought to be more planted; in fact, they ought to be planted along our highways.

Five Thousand Full Time Workers Could Be Used in Postal Service

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 13.—"The postal service could absorb at least 5,000 additional employes," declared Thos. F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer National Federation of Postoffice Clerks.

"The service is undermanned, especially the distribution forces in the larger offices," said Mr. Flaherty. "These workers are forced to labor under speed-up systems that extend them beyond reasonable limits. The postoffice department has survey inspectors putting into effect petty economy practices that are harmful to service morale and are responsible for a curtailment of service to the public and the elimination of work opportunities for thousands of substitutes.

"Through its failure to fill vacancies as they should be filled, the postoffice department has increased the unemployed and added to the burdens of employed. This policy is harmful to regular employes, the substitutes and the public.

"The postmaster-general has determinedly fought legislation pending in congress to shorten the postal 48-hour working week to 44 hours," said Mr. Flaherty.

"If our proposal for shorter working hours had not been fought last winter by Mr. Brown, the postal employment situation today would be much better."

The department's recent order giving substitutes preference in overtime work is an "empty gesture," according to the trade union official.

"The order relieving regular employes from overtime was widely heralded as helping the present unemployment crisis. The facts are that the only group that work overtime are the distributors and they are excluded from the scope of the order," said Mr. Flaherty.

"If the government wants to set an example to private industry, it should at once discontinue the practice of requiring one postal worker to do the work of two men. Thousands of veteran clerks are compelled to study distribution schemes on their own time at home—after working eight hours at the office—instead of putting substitutes on these duties under an apprenticeship system. The apparent sole aim of the postal administrators is to cut the postal pay roll regardless of its effect on the men or the service."

BIG FUND PLANNED TO FINANCE BUILDING REPAIR OPERATIONS

Chicago Employers to Raise $5,000,000 for Loans to Be Made to Property Owners Desiring to Make Improvements — Head of Modernizing Bureau to Direct Fund.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Chicago, Nov. 12.—The creation of an emergency fund of $5,000,000 from which loans may be made to property owners who desire to make repairs or alterations on their buildings in the immediate future rather than to wait until next spring is the purpose of a group of building construction employers of Chicago.

It is designed to operate the fund as a division of Governor L. L. Emmerson's commission on unemployment and relief. Loans are to be made at six per cent interest. One per cent of the interest will be set aside to offset any possible losses. The fund is for the present emergency only and its books will be closed after the last loan has been liquidated.

B. J. Rosenthal, a Chicago capitalist, who has gained a wide reputation because of his activities in behalf of worthy public projects, has signified his willingness to underwrite the fund, provided O. W. Rosenthal, vice-president of the modernizing bureau of the national construction industry, will take active charge of its operations. The latter gentleman has consented.

Lack of Money Handicap.

A stumbling block that has been encountered in the campaign to induce property owners to make repairs and alterations to relieve the unemployment situation is that many of the property owners find themselves unable to finance the work at this time, and the fund is to be created to meet this need.

O. W. Rosenthal is widely known as one of the foremost spokesmen for the American building construction industry and is decidedly progressive in thought and in his activities. He is one of Chicago's leading general contractors. He is outspoken in his opposition to wage reductions and a severe critic of irresponsible contractors in the industry.

"Some of us foresaw the present crisis as long ago as February, 1928," Mr. Rosenthal said in an interview with International Labor News Service. "Fifteen of us got together at the Blackstone hotel in this city at that time and organized the modernizing bureau of the national construction industry. Governor W. J. Kohler, of Wisconsin, accepted the presidency.

Much Accomplished.

"We have been able to accomplish a great deal toward keeping the wheels of industry turning and in modernizing and beautifying American communities. The plans and purposes of our organization fit in with the plans and purposes of the agencies set up by President Hoover for the relief of the unemployed and with those of the commission appointed by Governor Emmerson. It is our purpose to operate the $5,000,000 fund in conjunction with the governor's commission."

It was ascertained from other sources that much more than $5,000,000 will be available for loans to property owners willing to spend the money for repair and reconstruction work.

Part of Charity Budget Raised

The United Charities stated that $550,000 of its budget of $1,150,000 already has been pledged and that it is expected that the remaining $600,000 will be available by the end of the present year. The claim was made that the United Charities is spending from $6,000 to $7,000 a month for meals and beds for homeless men and that this is more than twice the amount that is spent during normal times. The greater amount of the relief work done by the United Charities is for suffering families, it was stated.

One-Sixth of U. S. Population Face Acute Need This Winter

Washington, Nov. 13.—Employment has not improved since September, according to trade union reports received by William Green, president A. F. of L. He said one-sixth of our population are threatened this winter with acute need from unemployment.

"Employment made no further gains in October," said Mr. Green. "Trade union reports from twenty-four cities show 21 per cent still out of work, as in September.

"The very large number out of work on the threshold of winter is cause for concern. Last winter's unemployed, as indicated by our figures, increased 71 per cent from October to January and doubled by February. Winter before last, when conditions were unusually favorable, out-of-works increased 47 per cent from October to February.

"Wage earners this year have no reserves to fall back on. Savings have been exhausted in the hard struggle for the past year.

"If all groups wholeheartedly join in the movement to provide jobs and relief, unemployment can be largely conquered. We must visualize the danger ahead and face the problem. The government officially estimates the unemployed at 3,500,000. An increase of unusual proportions would bring the number well over 5,000,000. Including the families depending on these men and women, over 20,000,000, or one-sixth of our entire population, are threatened with acute need from unemployment this winter.

"In addition to these entirely out of work, millions more are unemployed part time. Our figures for trade union members, who probably suffer less than any others from 'unemployment within employment,' show that 15 per cent were working part time in October. This means serious reductions in income and buying power."

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

AYMON HERE TO TESTIFY

State Federation President Tells Congressional Committee About Reds.

Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and representative of the American Federation, came to Chattanooga this week to appear before the congressional committee headed by Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, which is investigating communistic activities in the United States.

Mr. Aymon, along with other local citizens, was questioned by the committee members. It was his opinion, however, that the radicals have met with little or no response to their campaign in the south.

Mr. Aymon has been stationed at Danville, where a strike of 4,500 textile workers has been on for some six weeks. He states the spirit of the strikers is amazing, and that victory will eventually crown their efforts no one seriously doubts. Money, food and clothing is needed, however, to maintain the strikers and their families, and Mr. Aymon made a renewed plea for local unionists to contribute to the cause.

the foregoing, if desired. My own situation is much the same as several others. I was discharged on no notice whatever and asked to leave at once. The manner of dismissal was very sweet, however, for he told me how sorry he was, but it was absolutely necessary. He knew I had a family of six children, ages from 14 years to 6 months old. He also knew how hard I worked to succeed with that company. I averaged working overtime three nights per week for the past year. My services were evidently satisfactory, for I print here verbatim the recommendation he gave me:

"Nov. 12. 1930.

"The bearer, Mr. C. H. North, has been in the employ of Montgomery Ward & Co. for the past year. I found Mr. North to be a good merchant. He understands merchandising in a number of departments, especially clothing, men's furnishings, ladies' underwear, hosiery and men's work clothing. He has successfully merchandised the above departments in the Chattanooga store for Montgomery Ward & Co. He is courteous, can apply himself easily, is quick to make friends and is a good mixer. He is honest and is far above the average as a salesman.

"I consider him a valuable asset to any business where his experience could be used.

"(Signed) H. C. HART, Manager."

You may use this letter as you see fit. I have no desire to injure the business of this fine old company, but I do say that justice has taken flight in this particular case and I wish to protect, if I can, any chain store employes when faced with a similar situation.

FELLOW WORKER PAYS TRIBUTE TO MISS BOBO

Following tribute to Miss Sallie C. Bobo, member of the Times composing room force, who passed away last week, is submitted by a member of the morning paper chapel:

"Death, like the misty dew of the night, stole into our ranks, and with its chilling fingers wrote '30' for Miss Sallie Charlotte Bobo. The death of this beloved member of No. 89 came as a distinct shock, although she had been ill with pneumonia for a week.

"As soon as the demise of Miss Bobo was learned, there settled a deep silence over the composing room of the Chattanooga Times where, for twenty-six years, she had labored faithfully, always giving her best efforts toward maintaining the high efficiency of the printing department of this paper. Small groups gathered, and on every lip a deep regret was expressed at the passing of this exceptional woman.

"Miss Bobo was staunch in her convictions, yet very considerate of those of other people. Few really knew and understood her, yet those who did have nothing but praise for her, and Miss Bobo's memory will linger long in the hearts of those whom she called friends. She was always willing to help a brother printer along life's way, and very few cards, if any, were passed that she didn't contribute her part.

"Miss Bobo had worked the market machine for many years, and her place will be hard to fill. There will be a sincere feeling of sadness in the composing room, for her place will long remain unfilled.

"Simplicity in itself is beautiful, and the following lines are the ones by which Miss Bobo lived from day to day:

"If we noticed little pleasures,
As we notice little pains,
And quite forgot our losses
And remembered all our gains.

"If we looked for people's virtues,
And their faults refused to see,
What a happy, cheerful place
This world would be."

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

Today's Good Telephone Service Must Be Better Tomorrow

Not long ago very few long distance calls were handled while the calling subscriber remained at the telephone. Today more than 70 per cent are handled that way.

Today the average time required to complete a long distance call is only 2.4 minutes as compared with 7.5 minutes five years ago.

Similar improvements have been made in your local service and errors now average less than two in every 100 local calls.

These achievements are the result of new inventions, improved operating methods, new equipment, combined with the skill and interest of experienced operators, linemen and engineers co-operating with an army of loyal workers, many of whom are technical experts.

Proud as they are of these accomplishments, the telephone organization is not satisfied. There is no standing still in the Bell System and every day organized effort is directed toward making your service even better tomorrow.

GLASS BOTTLE BLOWERS NAME OFFICERS FOR ENSUING TERM

"New" Officials of Branch 92

JAMES V. ROBINSON

WILLIAM B. BLAND

By WILLIAM B. BLAND.

Branch No. 92, Glass Bottle Blowers association, has elected and installed the following officers for the ensuing term:

President, James V. Robinson.
Vice-President, William Kountz.
Financial Secretary, Robert Carmin.
Recording and Corresponding Secretary, William Bland.
Guard, Patrick Coyne.

Bro. Roy D. Cleary, executive member, has gone to Atlanta, Ga., to try and organize the Neon sign workers in that district. The Neon sign workers, wherever organized in the east, middle and extreme west, are members of the glass bottle blowers union, which department consists of glass benders, glass blowers, electrode makers and pumpers.

This Neon sign work is practically a new and modern industry, and has developed wonderfully since its inception about six years ago for sign display and advertising. The first branch union was organized in New York City in 1927, starting with three members. At the present time this same branch has a membership of 150. Branches in proportion are located in nearly all large cities in the United States.

The Neon letters up to the present time have been employed chiefly for advertising, for beauty and display. However, their field is growing larger. The greatest use for the future, we believe, is in the field of aviation. Tests have proven that the peculiar orange red light emitted by mammoth Neon lights can be seen through fog for twenty or more miles, and in clear weather for 100 or more miles.

The largest electric spectacular letter sign in the world is located at the southeast corner of 46th and Broadway, New York City. This sign is 88 feet long and 45 feet high. The letters are from three to six feet high, and while this industry is in its infancy there is great possibilities in the future for the "sign of the living flame."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

We see where Guy Lombardo and a few of his band just couldn't restrain themselves from indulging in the new sport of the age, miniature golf. Herman Dodd calls it "manature golf" and explains himself by saying that any way you play it, you're sure to get a trimming. Lombardo has built a musical course, so we are told. Each hole has, in place of the usual hazards, musical instruments so placed that one must go through, around or over them to reach the hole. Imagine driving from the top of the piano, over a few trumpets and trombones, into the bell of a saxophone. Or perhaps top your drive and get stuck in the bottom of a kettle drum. We suppose that clarinets are used for golf sticks.

We think Sandy Summers should put up one of these courses. He certainly has enough instruments in his store. Uncle John Washburn could be caddy-master. This column will announce the opening date later.

Speaking of hazards—the ways to conventions are full of them. Some we can't help getting into, but others, like the experience of last week, should be widely avoided. Let's help President Kennedy keep the car in the road.

One would wonder last week who was really holding sway at the charity ball, the debutantes or the musicians. Frank Worthy had his band out there playing the dance—and we might add, and how! Then there was the vaudeville show, where we were represented by Miss Nell Brenizer, Pat Brenizer and Ramon Pryor. The show was well worth the price from the time Ramon sang the opening chorus until Virginia Simpson gave her final dance.

Ellis Goodloe, the boy wonder of Jimmy Cox's brigade, was very indignant when someone accused him of dropping music and going into the clothing business. Mr. Goodloe wants it expressly understood that banjo-playing is still his business and that he only doubles on clothes-selling.

The rainy days of the past week may seem hard on a few of you fellows but all will be O. K. soon. Sandy will have his miniature course in, and the weather will be out of the reckoning.

The Phi Delta Kappas are having their second dance for the benefit of the local. It will be held Friday night, Nov. 21, at the Hotel Patten. Tommye Lasater will play and a good time is promised to all.

There's rumors of a coming battle dance between two of our local orchestras. We petition the executive board to arrange some sort of Marquis of Queensbury rules. Our local membership is not large enough to warrant the complete annihilation of any considerable portion of its members.

Brothers Cash and Pless are making some large arrangements in the way of pre-convention activities. We hope the society will continue to stand 100 per cent behind anything they might wish to do.

Mr. Linn will be greatly missed by all who ever came in contact with him.

Before the election Basil Palmer said that if Alabama re-elected Senator Heflin, the next time he went to Birmingham he wasn't going through Alabama. LaRoque, Banky in "Cherries Are Ripe" Next at Auditorium

Vilma Banky and Rod LaRoque, outstanding stars of the screen, have been selected by the Memorial auditorium board as the first big "road show" to be presented under the auspices of the board at the city showhouse on next Wednesday evening.

These internationally known artists are being starred by Arch Selwyn, one of the greatest of America's theatrical producers, in a romantic comedy-drama entitled "Cherries Are Ripe," and press reports from cities where the play has been staged are loud in their praises of the work of the large company, as well as the production as a whole.

"Cherries Are Ripe," with Miss Banky and Mr. LaRoque in person, it is announced, will be presented with the original cast and production.

A novel feature of the local appearance of the famous stars has been arranged in the form of a dance following the performance, in which all members of the company will participate, and which will be a courtesy of the auditorium management to the "customers" who attend the performance.

'SHORT HORSE SOON CURRIED'

Central Body Meeting Brief. Radio Concern Opposed to Organized Labor.

Monday night's regular meeting of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council was, so far as matters permitting of publicity are concerned, brief and featureless. The secretary's minutes, however, contain a number items of importance which are expected to bring interesting developments in the future.

President Ortwein was absent, due to illness in his family, and Vice-President Gardner presided with his usual grace. R. F. Shinault, of the Plasterers, and Johnny Mahoney, of the Musicians, were obligated as delegates representing their respective locals.

George Forbes urged co-operation in relieving unemployment, and asked that any member owning his own home have all possible repairs made at once.

A communication from the Metal Trades department of the American Federation of Labor called attention to the antagonistic attitude of the Grigsby-Grunow company, manufacturers of Majestic radios, electric refrigerators and household appliances.

The letter, signed by James O'Connell, president, and John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades department, follows:

The twenty-second annual convention of the metal trades department of the A. F. of L., held in Boston, Mass., the first day of this month, instructed the officers to send you information concerning the dispute between the trades affiliated with the Chicago Metal Trades council and the Grigsby-Grunow company, of Chicago, manufacturers of the Majestic radio, Majestic electric refrigerators, and Majestic household appliances.

It is reported that the company's attitude is actively hostile to any trade union organization on the part of its employes. Because of this attitude, a strike has taken place, resulting, among other things, in the employment of a number of men to serve as guards for the strikebreakers. On September 10, this year, two trade unionists were shot, and one killed by one of these guards.

The convention was furnished with detailed accounts of the company's active anti-union methods by delegates from Chicago. A resolution was adopted expressing the anti-union policy being displayed by the Grigsby-Grunow company, which had been carried to such an extent that trade union representatives were refused an opportunity of discussing an adjustment of the difficulties with the company's representatives.

Acting under the instructions of the convention, the metal trades department formally placed the matter before the convention of the American Federation of Labor, with the result that the executive council of the A. F. of L. was instructed to endeavor to bring about an adjustment of the strike.

This letter is to inform you of the present attitude of the Grigsby-Grunow company.

Strike Level at Record Low Point

For First Time, U. S. Is Virtually Free of Severe Industrial Disputes in Period of "Hard Times."

(By International Labor News Service.)

Chicago, Nov. 20.—For the first time in history, the United States is virtually free of severe industrial strife during a period of business depression, according to the Standard American Corporation of Chicago, which has just completed a study of industrial relations.

Statistics compiled in this survey showed the nation's strike level at the lowest point in history, and a complete absence of serious industrial conflict which has usually marked the recurring business depressions of the last century.

Up to Oct. 1, the survey showed a total of 444 industrial disputes this year as compared with 740 in the same period last year—a decline of 40 per cent. There was also approximately 70,000 fewer men involved in this year's disputes than in 1929, which was the banner year in the absence of industrial strife.

In connection with its study the Standard American corporation developed interesting figures showing the course of industrial disputes during the last fifteen years, which in that time has resulted in 31,127 strikes and lockouts, involving 16,458,000 men.

"Analysis of these figures, compiled from government and private sources," said the survey, "revealed that since 1919, the greatest strike year in the history of the country, relations between capital and labor have continued to improve until today the continuity of production is being disturbed by relatively few industrial disputes. Since 1921—the last severe depression year in which there were more than 2,000 disputes—the decline in labor trouble has been most rapid and pronounced.

"In recent years the number of workers involved in industrial disputes has ranged from 200,000 to 400,000, which is relatively small when compared with the period prior to 1923, when the number of strikers ranged from 1,000,000 to 4,000,000 annually. In the unparalleled strike year of 1919, more than 4,160,000 persons were involved in labor conflicts which swept the iron and steel, mining, shipping, building and railroad industries."

Labor Paid 35 Cents For Michigan Work

Detroit.—A wage rate of 35 cents an hour for common labor employed on state construction work has aroused a storm of opposition by Michigan trade unionists.

The order was issued by the Michigan administration board. Gov. Green, in defending the order, said contractors were "taking advantage of the unemployment situation by paying as low as 15 and 20 cents an hour for common labor."

The Detroit Labor News says: "Think what a 35-cent per hour rate means to a man who has a family to support. He will, if present plans are carried out, work but three days a week in order that the work may be more evenly divided."

UPHOLSTERERS GAIN.

New York.—Upholsterers and carpet and linoleum mechanics are maintaining work conditions and there is a slight business improvement in some sections, according to William Kohn, president of that international union.

UNDERHAND TACTICS USED AT DANVILLE

Puerile Efforts Made to Break Big Strike.

RED CROSS USED FOR INTIMIDATION

Sister of Mill Owner Heads Chapter—Representative Denies Charges.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Nov. 20.—Workers of the Dan River and Riverside Cotton mills of this city have entered the eighth week of the strike, as determined as ever to stay out until their constitutional right to join an association of workers of their own choosing is recognized by the mill management.

Harry R. Fitzgerald, president of the corporation, as far as any one knows, has made no effort to bring about a settlement. The only utterance from him is that he "will not treat with the union," on the ground that "outsiders have put foolish notions into the heads of his workers."

Various underhand attempts have been made, either directly or indirectly by the company, to break the strike. The latest is the injecting of the American Red Cross society into the Danville situation in the role of strikebreaker.

Last August the Altavista (Va.) Cotton mills folded up and went into receivers' hands. This mill employed from 600 to 800 persons. Most of these workers have since left Altavista for other fields, although a number of families are still in the mill village, marooned because of poverty and destitution. The Red Cross has been supplying relief to these families.

A few days ago it was reported that Red Cross workers of the Altavista chapter, which is said to be directed from Danville, had informed families receiving relief that further aid would be cut off unless they took jobs at Danville in the textile mills.

A committee headed by Rufus Mosely, of the Danville local union of textile workers, went to Altavista, where, they said, they had confirmed the order. "What we can't understand is why the Red Cross is acting as a strikebreaking agency," Mosely said. "Many of the workers here have contributed to the Red Cross and we thought the society acted impartially."

Mrs. O. K. McCartney, in charge of the Red Cross supplies at Altavista, denied the charges. Mrs. Herbert Martin, of Danville, sister of Harry R. Fitzgerald, is head of the Danville chapter of the Red Cross.

The Danville committee which investigated the Altavista affair reported that none of the destitute workers of that place would accept jobs as strikebreakers in Danville. It is known that Hylton Hall, a dormitory owned by the Dan River mills, was being put in readiness to house the Altavista workers, but none of them showed up.

Another crude attempt to break the strike through the agency of the courts was made when a damage suit of $15,000 was filed in corporation court in Danville against fifty alleged members of the union here, supposedly owners of real estate, by Sallie Hudgins, a strikebreaker, and former member of the union.

The Hudgins woman alleges in her complaint that, acting under the orders of the union, Ernest Moore, Harvey Boyters, Ben Caldwell and others, pickets of the union, "insulted, humiliated and frightened" her when she attempted to get in her auto to go to work in the mills. On this count she asks $5,000.

On a second count she alleges she was roughly handled by the above named persons and "assaulted" and for this she asks $5,000. The third count on which she asks an additional $5,000 is that she was deprived of her "free rights and free will" to go to work.

Inasmuch as Sallie Hudgins is a mill worker and that it takes money to prosecute lawsuits, members of the union and the public are asking "Who is furnishing the money?"

Officers of the local union expressed the belief that the suit was pure bluff and designed to break the morale of the week-kneed strikers and scare them back into the mills.

The ridiculousness of the suit can be imagined when it is known that the 4,000 workers are virtually destitute and on the cold charity of the public and without money or property. As far as can be learned none of the members of the union own property in their own names. Attorneys for the union say that if the case comes to trial, which is unlikely, the plaintiff will have to file suit against each of the 4,000 members of the union, who will demand separate trials, inasmuch as the complaint holds the union responsible in the premises.

Officers of the local report that contributions to the aid of the strikers have begun to come in slowly. The workers' council of the Columbia

CIRCLE MEMBERS ARE GIVEN TREAT

Commissioner Anderson Discusses State Constitution and Banking Laws.

JAMES H. ANDERSON

Members of Circle club were given a rare treat Monday night, when James H. Anderson, United States commissioner, addressed the club. Judge Anderson stated that, no subject having been assigned to him, he had chosen the topic which was on the minds, possibly, of a great majority of Tennesseans, and launched into one of the most instructive and interesting discussions of the state constitution which the majority of his hearers, possibly, had ever listened to.

The present deplorable condition of the state's financial affairs, due to the manipulation of public monies by state officials and their masters, was thoroughly covered in Judge Anderson's address, and he expressed the opinion that the governor should immediately resign.

The speaker was given a warm reception by the small number of members present.

Next regular meeting of Circle club will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Forbes in North Chattanooga, and will be in the nature of a celebration of the silver wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Forbes (or is it "golden," Kitty?). The affair is scheduled for the evening of Sunday, Dec. 14.

Land Owners Oppose Less Cotton Acreage

Montgomery, Ala.—Reduced cotton acreage that would make a fair price possible runs contrary to the owners of cotton land in this state, who are only interested in land rents, says the Alabama department of agriculture.

"We may as well speak plainly on this subject," says the department in its monthly bulletin. "About one-third of the crop land in Alabama is farmed by cropper and cash tenants, and fully one-third of the cotton land is so occupied.

"The owners of these lands are interested primarily in securing the rental contracted for, and only secondarily in profitable crop production. Cotton has been the source of rent from these lands and consequently cotton production has been encouraged to the exclusion of other crops. These tenants have had nothing to offer as security for credit except their expected cotton production and hence the sources of credit have encouraged the growth of cotton.

"This one situation has done more to keep cotton acreage in advance of other kinds of farming than all other influences combined."

Conserve company, of Indianapolis, Ind., informed the relief committee that the employes of the Indianapolis concern had contributed 10,000 cans of assorted soups to the strikers' commissaries.

Due to scarcity of food supplies and the lack of coal some sickness has been reported in the families of the workers. Flu, pneumonia and a few cases of pellagra have been found.

The conference between a committee of strikers and James J. Davis, secretary of labor, at Washington, a few days ago is expected to have some bearing on the situation here, the committee said. A formal statement from Secretary Davis may be forthcoming in a few days, it was announced. Meanwhile the workers have taken a fresh toehold on the situation and are prepared to stay out indefinitely.

Sherwood Anderson, distinguished American author, a champion of the cause of labor, told a mass meeting of strikers: "I hope to God you win."

Anderson came to Danville to obtain data for a series of articles and was prevailed upon to make a short address.

"I came here," he said, "in the hope that I might be able to write something that would bring your situation to the attention of the country. There is something we have in common and that is we are all Virginians, and Virginia has a tradition for freedom and right that makes me ashamed to know that there are men in Virginia who are not willing to grant your rights and to deal with you fairly."

CENSUS DATA SHOWS CAUSE UNEMPLOYMENT

Value of Output Soars as Wages Lag Behind.

TEN LEADING LINES SHOW DEEP PAY CUTS

Industrial Captains Break Pledges Made at White House Conference.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 20.—Complete reports of one vital phase of the United States census of industrial plants just made public, taken together with figures issued at the same time by the United States department of labor this week, show with a new authority the cause of present unemployment and forecast continuing waves of unemployment. In addition it is shown that there have been sweeping wage reductions in ten enumerated lines of manufacture during 1930, or since the White House conference in which industrial leaders pledged themselves against wage reductions.

It is reported by the United States bureau of labor statistics that in the ten enumerated lines of manufacture the total average reduction in employment has been 19.7 per cent, while the total average reduction in amount of payroll has been 27.7 per cent since September, 1929.

The United States census bureau's figures, subject to final revision, show a continued increase in the value added by manufacture—that is, a given number of workers employed produce a growing volume of value in the form of manufactured output.

Substantial Gain in Value.

The census figures show that in 1927 there were 8,349,775 wage earners in the plants enumerated and that these produced a "value added by manufacture" amounting to $27,585,210,400.

In 1929, 8,550,284 workers—almost the same number as in 1927—produced "value added by manufacture" amounting to $31,095,855,410.

The census figures do not show manufacturers' profits. They show numbers employed, wages paid, value of products, cost of materials and value added by manufacture. The value of products in 1927 was $62,718,347,289, while in 1929 it had risen to $68,453,486,518.

What Percentages Show

Put in percentages, as the census bureau puts it, it is revealed that the 1929 value of output—at f. o. b. factory prices—exceeded the 1927 value by 9.1 per cent. The number of wage earners increased 2.4 per cent. Wages increased 3.9 per cent. Value added by manufacture increased 4 per cent. The 4 per cent raise in "added value" means much more than the 3.9 wage gain because of the enormously large base figures involved.

The census figures stop at 1929, but the department of labor supplies information that carries the chain of events forward into 1930.

The census shows that during 1929 wages, on the average, were holding their upward trend, manufacture was going ahead full blast, employment was holding fairly constant, at least in the enumerated manufacturing establishments. In the fall of 1929, too late to affect the employment averages of the year to any marked extent, the crash came.

Sharp Wage Reduction.

From September, 1929, to September, 1930, there was, says the department of labor, a reduction of 19.7 per cent in employment in the plants enumerated, accompanied by a wage reduction of 27.7 per cent. The fact that wages have fallen more sharply than employment is taken as conclusive evidence that there have been wage reductions, although it is likely that some of the drop in total wages paid is accounted for through the discharge or lay-off of older and more highly paid workers and the retention of lower-paid workers. But the important fact is that the total volume of wages paid has fallen sharply. The total amount paid in wages has fallen by more than 25 per cent and the buying power of workers has been thus slashed at a time when business and industry need buyers. What must be the source of recovery has been hit below the belt by those who control industry. More than anything else these figures reveal the stupidity of a great portion of management and the hypocrisy of a lot of employers.

Figures in Several Lines.

The bureau of labor statistics report, as of September, shows that in the production of textiles and their products the reduction in number employed has been 17.7 per cent as compared with September, 1929, while the reduction in payroll is 24.7 per cent; in iron and steel and products, number employed reduced 21.2 per cent, and payroll reduction 33.1 per cent; lumber and products, employment reduced 29.8 per cent, payroll 37 per cent; leather and products, employment reduced 13.5 per cent, payroll 26.9 per cent; paper and printing, employment reduced 6.8 per cent, payroll 8.5 per cent; stone, clay and glass products, employment reduced 20.3 per cent, payroll 27.5 per cent; metal products, other than iron and steel, employment reduced 22.7 per cent, payroll 34.5 per cent; tobacco products, employment reduced 6.4 per cent, payroll 14.1 per cent; vehicles reduced employment 35.2 per cent and payrolls 48.1 per cent.

Some Gain Despite Slump.

Meanwhile the Standard Statistics company, Inc., accepted by business as an authority, has submitted a report to Printers' Ink showing that for 1930 some fifty corporations have increased their business and probably their profits. Practically all of the lines listed in the showing of gain are competitive lines and the indication is, therefore, that even in depression there are leaders shrewd enough to win where others fail.

PROTESTED $3 WAGE

MISS FRANCES PERKINS

Protest Brings Increased Wage

Quick Action of Matthew Woll, Miss Perkins and Others Spikes Low-Wagers' Plan in Relief Work.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, Nov. 20.—Following protests against a wage rate of $3 a day, made by Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, Frances Perkins, state industrial commissioner, and others, the emergency employment committee will pay men sent to work in parks on a three-day basis at the rate of $5 a day, or $15 a three-day week, instead of $3 a day, or $15 for a five-day week as heretofore. The committee has set for itself the task of providing 2,000,000 days' work this winter.

Announcement of the decision to pay $5 a day was made by Sward Prosser, chairman of the committee.

"In this way," Prosser said, "we will be enabled to double the number of men on our payrolls without reducing the weekly amount now being received by the men who are already employed."

Declaring that the proposal to pay only $3 a day was "bound to prove anti-social in its consequences" because the wage is below the prevailing rate and would make the men feel as if objects of charity, Woll said in a letter to Prosser:

"The $3 daily wage is bound to affect the standard of prevailing wage and I know you will agree that this is no time to lower wages and reduce purchasing power. I notice already that some of these men are going to work in the streets, competing with street cleaners whose wage is considerably above $3 a day. The history of such movements is replete with instances proving that lower wage standards tend to depress other wage scales and prosperity depends on mass purchasing power, which cannot be great if wages are low.

"If your committee can succeed in getting some thousands of men to work for $3 a day in the parks, what will prevent some other committee from getting unemployed men to work for the same scale doing other work in competition with more highly paid men? It seems to me that the $3 wage paid these men is too low even for a bare minimum of subsistence and is in addition a danger to the rising standard of living upon which we depend for our increased well-being—manufacturers, the public and the workers."

Mr. Woll suggested that the committee pay men $5 a day. Even if they had only three days' work, he pointed out, they could then devote the rest of the week to looking for steady employment or to obtaining extra earnings.

Bills to Aid Idle Urged by Wagner

Washington.—Senator Wagner will urge his unemployment relief bills when congress convenes next month.

The most important of the measures—which would provide $150,000,000 for public works when there are indications of a slackening of employment—is still in conference between the two branches of congress.

Another bill—which would create a system of employment agencies through which the states and the federal government could co-operate in placing the jobless—is slumbering in the house.

The third bill provides for the collection of unemployed statistics. This bill became a law, but no money was voted to make the plan effective.

UNION LABEL AVAILABLE FOR CHRISTMAS USE

Manning Lists Many Acceptable Gifts.

MAKE DAY MERRY FOR FELLOW WORKER

Offers Suggestions for Relief of Unemployed Trades Unionists.

Suggestion for a real Merry Christmas for trades unionists is offered by John J. Manning, secretary of the Label Trades Department of the American Federation, in a letter to The Labor World this week.

"Make it a Union Label Christmas," is the text of Mr. Manning's communication, in which he itemizes presents that may be purchased with the emblem of fairness attached.

Many of the articles named in the letter can be secured in Chattanooga; others must come from out of town.

The letter follows:

To Organized Labor—Greeting:

Trade unionists and their friends are earnestly requested to make Christmas shopping profitable to organized labor by giving gifts of union labeled articles to relatives and friends.

So many truly acceptable gifts with the union label attached can be obtained that one's Christmas shopping can be done quickly and satisfactorily, coupled with the keen sense of enjoyment engendered by the knowledge that one has lived up to trade union principles to the very letter.

Some gift suggestions are a snappy suit or overcoat; comfortable, well-fitting shoes; well made gloves; smart hat; classy neckwear, shirts and collars; nobby caps; beautiful hosiery and underwear; useful suspenders, garters, overalls and belts. All of these can be obtained with the union label attached.

Other suggestions are fine jewelry and leather goods; cutlery; perfume bottles; engraved visiting cards; fountain pens and pencils; brooms of all kinds; flour; stoves; mattresses; furniture.

Further suggestions are union cigars, tobacco and cigarettes; union fruit cake or a basket of cake; a turkey from a union market.

Another suggestion is the gift of a bob, shampoo or wave at a union barber shop or beauty parlor.

Just a suggestion for Christmas cards. Have you ever given your order for Christmas cards to a union printer or engraver? Try it this year and find out for yourself how much nicer they are. Another dandy suggestion is the rebinding of a favorite book for a book-lover.

And just a word to the wise about other gifts that would be greatly appreciated by housewives whose chief pride and delight center in the home. Nothing would please more than new electric wiring and plugs installed where needed; new wall paper and painting necessary; new upholstering and long neglected repairing of all kinds; all of this work to be done by men with union cards.

Another way to help members of organized labor this Christmas is to use your influence with church or lodge to engage union musicians for all Christmas services or entertainments and to have all printing done in union printing establishments on union water-marked paper. If hand bills or posters are used, see that union billers and bill posters are engaged.

If these suggestions are followed, the unemployment situation among trade unionists will be relieved and you will enjoy a Merry Christmas.

Fraternally yours,
JOHN J. MANNING,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Union Label Trades Department.

8 Hours for Women Not General Rule

Washington.—The vast majority of women work more than eight hours, according to a statement issued by the United States women's bureau. Contrary to general belief, wage working women have no eight-hour day, it is stated.

"With the trend toward the five-day week and suggestions of the six-hour day, the eight-hour standard is getting to be almost as old-fashioned as a 1920 automobile," the bureau states.

"Many women in factories have an eight-hour day or less, but they constitute the minority of all those in industry, Uncle Sam's investigations show. A work day of such length was reported for only one-fifth of the 227,000 women working in 2,700 factories, stores and laundries scattered throughout sixteen states that were included in women's bureau studies during the period 1919-1928."

Petroleum and its products, which already have some thousands of uses, are regarded by the United States bureau of mines as potential sources of a host of new commodities.

Research work now under way is seeking means of producing from petroleum in commercial quantities substitutes for butter, lard, leather, rubber, perfumes, explosives, antiseptics, sugar and other products. Artificial rubber tires, druggists' supplies, waterproof clothing, electrical insulation, cement, substitutes for varnish and linseed oil and a number of alcohols also are seen as possibilities.

Would Use Armories To House-Feed Idle

Albany, N. Y.—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt asked the war department for permission to use 16,000 cots and blankets in the event that it became necessary to open state armories to shelter unemployed this winter.

The governor will ask for the use of army field kitchens and mess kits with which to prepare and serve breakfast and supper. The armories can house 11,900 persons, but these buildings will not be used until all municipal and private charity facilities are exhausted.

In his letter to Secretary of War Hurley the governor said: "Present indications point to the probability of an emergency in this state during the coming winter months, in connection with the care of unemployed and homeless men and women who may require shelter."

WORKLESS CAN BE RELIEVED.

The unemployment issue cannot be solved by incantation. Confidence resolutions and talk of our country "being fundamentally sound" will not appease hunger or afford shelter. Millions of workless have heard this story for a year, yet winter looms with more publicity-seeking.

Facts must be faced unless we are only interested in building a temporary road to another and yet another inevitable depression. No realist denies that mass production has created a surplus that cannot be purchased with present wage standards.

Our boasted "high" wages is a myth, when compared with output. The long work day is enforced upon hundreds and hundreds of thousands of working men and women.

A charitable act is no substitute for social justice. To give a man a few hours work or arrange for the homeless to sleep is to gloss the evil. This so-called relief may interest charity workers, but statesmen and owners of industry should be interested in causes of unemployment and their removal.

Conferences and more conferences, surveys, studies, resolves and press releases are the rule, while jobless men despair, women weep and childhood hungers. Our year-old hush-hush policy is satisfactory to industrialists who talk one way and act another—who preach on the value of high wages and who stealthily lower wages, or who accomplish the same purpose by speed up processes.

That this hush-hush policy may be intensified—if not challenged—is indicated by the Washington (D. C.) Herald: "There are less than 5,000 unemployed here and most of these 5,000 would not work anywhere, anyhow. This newspaper will not join the calamity howl."

Workers face a second winter without employment and with exhausted resources. They want work. This can be secured if national production is placed on a five-day week basis, if wage cutting is replaced by the opposite policy, and if a building program of magnificent proportions is quickly launched.

Shorter hours and higher wages are basic remedies. Soup houses is charity, as ancient Rome provided bread and the circus for her hungry slaves. Trade unionists should drive home these facts in no uncertain tone.

Visionless and timid men, who really protect low-wage employers, should be jarred from piddling relief proposals. Their foundation is the hope that "things will eventually work out."

When they do "work out," the very forces that brought on this depression will, if not corrected, begin to immediately develop conditions similar to today.

Ban on Night Work Fails to Enthuse

Washington.—The agreement of cotton mill owners to eliminate night work by women and minors under 18 not later than March 1 fails to enthuse Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the United States children's bureau.

"The agreement is commendable, but experience has taught us that such pacts are not effective without legislation," said Miss Abbott. "The best of the industries abide by the rule while the less ethical do not. Night work laws in a number of states, particularly in the southern area, are below what they should be."

Miss Abbott said that night work by children under 16 has been quite generally prohibited, but little such protection is offered minors between the ages of 16 and 18.

The cotton mill owners agreed to eliminate night work by women and minors by applying the elimination policy to 75 per cent of the spindles in the whole industry the first year, 80 per cent the second year and 85 per cent the third year and thereafter.

WORK FATALITIES UP.

Albany, N. Y.—During September the deaths of 182 men and women as a result of industrial accidents were reported to the state department of labor. This represents an increase of 27 over the August total and is 11 more than the September average for the past five years.

TREASURY LOANS URGED.

Burlington, N. C.—Loans to cities from the national treasury at a low rate of interest to aid construction programs was urged by Mayor Horner as a means of relieving unemployment. The suggestion has been forwarded to President Hoover's relief committee.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

A steady, downward march of wages, as compared with production, is marked straight through the period of the last decade by the United States census.

This is not as dark and gloomy as it sounds, but it points with accuracy toward a basic fault in our economic organization.

The danger, with facts like this, is that the high-hat chaps will play around with the idea, producing all manner of fantastic notions, while the too-serious will find portents of this, that and the other disaster.

What is found in the census figures for the last ten years also can be found in the same figures for the last fifty years.

Compared with production wages have kept getting further behind.

And yet, as a people, we have kept going forward.

That sounds like a contradiction, and it is, in part, but it is not a complete contradiction. That's why we haven't had worse convulsions.

Our industrial plant has been so prolific that the total stream of output certainly could be larger, profits could be more generous and yet the masses of the people could have more than they had in the "good old days" of hand labor.

But, looking at the figures, we come up to this question: How long can this thing continue, with safety to the social structure?

Nobody knows the answer to that.

But everybody who is willing to consider humanity as a valuable thing knows that it is desirable to create equity where there is inequity.

The existence of inequity is established. Then why not proceed?

There is much evidence that powerful men among employers are looking at matters today from a much more human and humane point of view than ever before, that they consider justice as a more desirable thing and that they more freely admit the injustice of what is going on today.

By that much we have gone ahead.

The chance is, however, that matters will be measurably righted for the time being before there can be any very marked achievement wrought out of this new state of mind.

What we shall have gained will be a little headway in the matter of sentiment and conviction and there will be that much less ground to be fought over when another depression comes.

For another depression will come.

The next depression will not be so long in coming and it will hit harder and perhaps more suddenly when it does come.

That is clear, if we look at the figures that show the constant growth of the space between wages paid to workers and the total value of output.

The future is on the lap of the gods and most of the human race can only wait and let it happen.

What we know today is that there is no good to be achieved by losing our sense of proportion, our sense of values and our understanding of where to work for betterment.

Not out of the rare, upper strata of metaphysics will our relief come to us, nor yet out of the wrangling of partisan politicians.

Largely we will get it out of the economic structure wherein lies the trouble. The masses of the people will speak and exert influence to the extent of their ability to speak as organized units. The thing, then, is to organize. That, in very truth, is the supreme thing!

State Employes Back New Retirement Plan

Madison, Wis.—More than 100 state employes approved a retirement system for state employes presented by a legislative committee.

Elective and appointed state officers, except those on the same basis as an employe, are excluded as are teachers covered by the teachers' insurance and retirement fund. University professors under the Carnegie pension fund, part-time employes, provisional, emergency and temporary employes and employes under 30 years of age are also excluded.

Voluntary retirement age was set at 60 after 20 years of service. The compulsory retirement age would be 70 years after January 1, 1932, and one year less for each succeeding year until January 1, 1937, when the compulsory retirement age would remain at 65.

The minimum annuity on compulsory retirement after ten years of service would be $45 per month, under the plan.

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

U. T. W. Levies Assessment To Help Danville Strikers Win

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, Nov. 13.—President Thomas F. McMahon, of the United Textile Workers of America, has issued the following statement:

"The emergency committee of the United Textile Workers of America, at headquarters, 605 Bible House, New York City, consideerd the Danville strike situation and it was decided to levy an assessment of $1 on the membership of the United Textile Workers of America.

"Several organizations have already paid the assessment and it is proposed that all local unions will make weekly contributions for the duration of the strike.

"The appeal by the American Federation of Labor is now starting to bring results and plans for the sustenance of the Danville strike during the winter months are now becoming effective.

"John P. O'Connell, business agent of Local Union 33, Salem, Mass., has just returned from Danville, Va., and attended the meeting, reporting the latest developments and stating the strikers are determined to continue in the struggle against oppression and the denial of the workers the right to organize.

"Organizers of the American Federation of Labor, publicity representatives and others connected with social work, are now in Danville, also Miss Matilda Lindsay, vice-president of the National Women's Trade Union league, and Organizer C. W. Bolick, representing the United Textile Workers of America.

"Vice-President Francis J. Gorman will return to Danville and expects to attend a meeting of the southern organizing committee, at Birmingham, Ala., on Nov. 16, to further expand plans of southern organization work and to secure support for the Danville strikers."

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part I.
FOREWORD.

What did Jesus teach concerning money?

Here is a most vital question today, as much so as it has been in generations past, for in the answer or lack of an adequate answer to it hangs the fate of a great deal of peace of mind on the part of dutiful Christians and of loyalty to the church as a force for good on the part of many others.

WM. L. MOSS

Has the teaching of Jesus on money, especially wealth, a place in our modern social and economic world? When we compare our very complex world of today with that in which the lowly Galilean moved, frankly speaking, are we so far advanced in ethics, culture and economics that His words on money, uttered some nineteen hundred years ago, have no application today? Ought we to allow Jesus to speak for us in money matters as we do in things religious when what He says on the subject of money might injure us economically? In the light of present day conditions shall we regard what He taught about money as adequate insofar as its capacity to meet modern economic conditions is concerned?

There's a great deal of vagueness as to just what Christ meant when He spoke concerning money and how He expected His utterances to be interpreted. Some say He meant one thing, and in their lives interpret it accordingly. Others say He could have only meant something else, and they interpret it their way. Very, very many say the world is a far different place in which to live from that world in which Christ moved, and, therefore, what He might have uttered about money in His day and time does not hold good now. All kinds of answers to the question before us have been given by Christians and unbelievers—no single answer seems to satisfy everybody!

A Task for Sincerity.

Our intelligence at least demands the truth for the truth's sake about the question of Jesus' teaching on money. The question of applying what He said and our views regarding money are the applications, and these applications ought to be applied with the same sincerity as we seek for enlightment on the subject. For the next few weeks I shall select as our text each week one of the sayings of Christ on money. We will go into the subject slowly, covering the ground step by step. We will take the Master's own words and attempt to get out of them their real meaning, that is, what He meant when He uttered them! I believe those who follow to the end this series of articles on Jesus' teaching concerning money will have a keener insight and better knowledge of the subject than they now have, for fresh material scarcely available to the average layman will be constantly brought forth, and findings of value, no matter whom they may hit, will be frankly printed.

Painful Condition

"When I was just a girl at home," writes Mrs. B. F. Riggan, of Baird, Texas, "I took Cardui for cramping and pains in my side and back, and it helped me at that time.

"After I was married, I found myself in a weak, run-down condition. I suffered a great deal with my back, which was so weak it hurt me to get up or when I would stand on my feet. I fell off in weight.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

This is what we call saying it with songs: Nobody cares if I'm blue, but if I had a girl like you, I'd say bye, bye, blues, and go laughing at life and forget that my bluebird was caught in the rain. I know a lazy lane that is for sweethearts only, and if I could be with you one hour tonight, I'd love you so much, for you're the sweetheart of my student days. It seems to be spring, so pick yourself up, leave a little smile, in memory of you, and let's go native, somewhere in ol' Wyoming, and take life free and easy.

"JOBLESS ARMY IS INDICTMENT AGAINST INDUSTRIAL LEADERS"

—CHAS. P. HOWARD, President I. T. U.

Indianapolis, Nov. 20.—"Unemployment is an indictment against our industrial leaders," declared Charles P. Howard, president International Typographical union, in a radio address.

The refusal of controllers of industry to shorten the work day and week "is largely responsible for the present depression, bankruptcy and unemployment," said the trade unionist, who pointed to the increased productive capacity of the machine that neither purchases nor consumes.

"Refusal to deal upon a collective basis prevents complete organization of workers," asserted Mr. Howard. "We are without the one agency through which it is possible to establish and maintain conditions which prevent destructive competition with its inescapable effect upon elements which must be fixed."

"Conferences have been held under federal, state and municipal direction to deal with the unemployed problem. Officials of high and low degree have discussed and deplored conditions, but few have had the courage to deal with the question in other than generalities and fewer have expressed a willingness to apply the only remedy which will permanently improve conditions.

"The control of industry has remained so autocratic that not even the federal government can regulate industry either individually or collectively to do the one thing that will substitute prosperity for bankruptcy. The responsible head of each industry ignores the situation or naively suggests that some other line should apply the remedy. They refuse to recognize that American ideals and institutions are on trial. They comment that we suffered panics in the past and in due time prosperity returned.

"Is it possible for those who know not the pangs of hunger or the suffering from cold to understand what these mean? Winter and unemployment mean just that—and nothing less—to millions who are willing to work, but who are unable to find it. Under such a condition in the richest nation in the world, are we not justified in asking: Is business and industry serving the people or have they become the masters of our workers?

"The remedy is apparent. To meet the immediate need, governments, corporations and individual industries should create every job possible. Opportunity for employment should be extended to the greatest number of workers by the adoption of the five-day work week.

"In a nation of intelligent people it should not require a revolution to distribute benefits resulting from invention and mechanical progress."

READING WORKERS CUT.

Reading, Pa.—A 30 per cent wage cut was handed a group of workers in the Berkshire Knitting mills, the world's largest full-fashioned hosiery plant. Reductions are promised other employes.

The American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, affiliated to United Textile Workers, are leading the fight against these cuts. Workers are urged to join the union.

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

Shoals Solution Before Congress

Washington.—Senator McNary will demand a show-down of the Muscle Shoals problem when congress convenes next month. He is chairman of the conference committee—representing both branches—which is attempting to reconcile differences between the Norris bill, which provides for government operation of Muscle Shoals, and the Reece bill, which provides for leasing to private interests.

The Norris bill passed the senate and the Reece bill passed the house. Reece was defeated at the last election by an independent candidate who entered the race ten days before polling time.

The effect of the Reece defeat is indicated by Senator Fess, of Ohio, who is quoted as saying that while he favors leasing to private interests he would be inclined to vote for government operation "rather than see the power go to waste."

Packers Prosperous; Less Labor Employed

Chicago.—Largest meat packing companies are not affected by the business depression, and it is expected they will equal or exceed last year's profits.

Storage stocks are reduced and this has made it possible to hold prices. The packers' prosperity is shown in the redemption by Armour & Co. of $10,000,000 7½ per cent gold bonds out of accumulated cash that is not listed as profits.

Wilson & Co. retired $2,500,000 6 per cent notes five months before they were due.

The greatest saving by these corporations was made in reducing the number of employes. During the first six months of this year the number of employes was below the corresponding period a year ago. Beginning in June, last year, the number of employes dropped steadily as against a rise during the corresponding month in 1929.

DRESSMAKERS GAIN.

New York.—A wage increase of $1 a week was awarded children's dressmakers by Dr. I. N. Stone, impartial chairman of the dress industry. The workers are members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union. They struck for $2.

GREEN ASKS LABOR TO COOPERATE IN UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF PLAN

A. F. of L. Head Calls on Local Unions Throughout Nation to Make Special Efforts to Help National and Other Committees Formed to Aid Jobless.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 20.—In a message to organized labor, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, asks that trade unions throughout the country co-operate with national, state and municipal committees formed to aid the unemployed.

President Green asks that representatives of organized labor volunteer their services on these committees and expresses the belief that a solution for unemployment can be found "if all concerned are determined to master and control the economic forces which make for unemployment."

After pointing out that the recent Boston convention of the A. F. of L. recommended that the president of the United States appoint a committee to deal with unemployment and called upon governors and mayors to do likewise, Mr. Green goes on to say:

"The president of the United States has appointed a committee known as the 'President's Emergency Committee for Employment.' Col. Arthur H. Woods is chairman.

Seeks Co-ordination.

"This national committee, appointed by the president, is seeking to coordinate all the organized forces created by the national, state and municipal governments in an effort to provide employment and to develop ways and means by which distress can be relieved. Efforts are being put forth to stimulate federal, state and municipal work so that, so far as possible, the slack of unemployment may be taken up.

"While I realize that the state federations of labor and city central bodies have been rendering very effective and special service in work of this kind, I respectfully request that you make special efforts to cooperate with the national employment committee appointed by the president of the United States and with similar committees created by the governors of the states and by the magistrates of the cities.

Create Committees, He Urges.

"I respectfully suggest that you create committees and that these committees call upon the governors of the states and the mayors of the cities, offering the recommendations for the relief of unemployment and of distress developed by your respective organizations.

"Volunteer your services to assist and help in every possible way. The situation is acute and requires heroic and immediate attention.

"I further recommend that your organizations strongly request that organized labor be represented on committees appointed by the governors of states and the mayors of cities to formulate plans for the relief of unemployment."

TWO CABINET CHIEFS HEAR PROTESTS AT TEXTILE PAY CUTS

William F. Kelly and William Smith Tell Davis and Lamont Textile Industry Has Violated Agreement With President — Demand Tariff Protection Be Made Conditional.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 20.—William F. Kelly, second vice-president of United Textile workers, and William Smith, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, meeting with Secretary of Labor James J. Davis and Secretary of Commerce R. P. Lamont, presented to them protests against the vicious and unfair attacks by the employers in the textile industry generally upon the wage level, contrary to the understanding had with President Hoover, November, 1929. Following the conference Kelly and Smith said:

"The textile industry is the only basic industry which has openly violated the understanding had with the president, with the possible exception of the bituminous coal industry.

"The understanding has been violated despite the fact that the leaders of the textile industry have repeatedly and successfully asked for government subsidy through the high protective tariff, and to that end have the co-operation of the organizations of the workers.

Research Not Remedy.

"The deplorable conditions which exist in the textile industry are not due to any cause which can be remedied by the expenditure of two million dollars—or ten million dollars—in research work.

"No research is required to show the high cost of the removal of textile plants from one section of the country to other sections, in search of cheaper labor.

"Neither is research required to determine the high costs of the manufacturers' attacks upon an American standard of living, which has resulted in costly strikes of long duration, brought about intentionally and deliberately by the methods pursued by the manufacturers.

"There is good reason to believe that if the total of these two items of cost were shown, it would appear that they exceed the amount of a reasonable profit upon the industry.

Government Should Act.

"We believe that the government, in view of the high protection afforded to the textile industry, should demand that this protection be made conditioned upon the establishment and maintenance of a proper American standard of living for the workers employed in the industry.

"Attacks upon the wages of the textile workers, which have been taking place within the last year, have served only as an attack upon the purchasing power of these workers, and thus have been an attack upon the whole American level of living, aggravating the unemployment situation.

Work Day Must Be Cut.

"It must be recognized, by those in control of textile manufactures, as is recommended today by all modern economists and financiers, that every improvement in manufacturing methods and machinery must be accompanied by a corresponding reduction in the hours of labor. A failure to do this will inevitably result in the accumulation on the one hand of the army of the unemployed, and on the other hand the accumulation of the mass of unabsorbed commodities.

"The failure to recognize these principles, and the following of an ancient and out-of-date policy of lengthening hours and reducing wages, has brought the textile industry, despite governmental protection by means of the tariff, into a condition of chaos.

Co-operation Only Remedy.

"We affirm, and submit that there has been established, the fact that the only solution of problems of the textile industry today is union labor management-co-operation.

"This statement can be substantiated in those sections of the industry where this program has been adopted.

"We believe that in any research affecting these problems, the direct contribution of the workers will be of material assistance in reaching a fair and logical conclusion.

"In view of the fact that the Textile Foundation is financed by government monies, we believe that there should be a representation of the workers engaged in the industry, of their own choosing."

PEOPLE'S LOW BUYING POWER BROUGHT BUSINESS LET DOWN

Washington, Nov. 20.—"Census bureau figures, just issued, sustain the view that the business depression was caused by low buying power being unable to purchase the nation's surplus," says the Washington Post in a leading editorial. The Post is one of the nation's prominent daily newspapers.

"The fact that there was an 'overproduction' can no longer be questioned," says the editor, who asserts that if industry paid wages in the same proportion as it did in 1849, "wage earners would have received an aggregate of $16,000,000,000. Instead, they were paid $11,271,116,000."

"On the basis of productive capacity American labor is cheap," declares the Post. "A study of the increases in both wages and industry suggests that the working man is not receiving his full share of the wealth he helps to create.

"A glance at the more recent figures is more convincing. During 1927 wages amounted to $10,848,802,000 and the products of manufacturing industries were worth $62,718,347,000. Wages increased in the following two years by $422,214,000, in spite of the fact that fewer workmen were employed. But during that same period production was augmented to the extent of $5,735,139,000. In other words, labor registered a gain of 3.8 per cent in its purchasing power, while the output of industry gained more than 9 per cent.

"In these figures lies the story of the industrial depression. While goods were turned out at a pace never before equalled in history, the buying power of the public was making but small gains. When the climax was reached in the last months of 1929, a period of adversity was inevitable because the people did not have sufficient money to buy the surplus goods which they had produced.

"If the country is to go on producing at the 1929 level, the buying power of the people must be increased. Consuming power already exists, and it has no limitations. From the long range view, all that is necessary to make it effective is to increase the earning power of the workman's family."

CHARITY GROUP SEEKING FUNDS

Independent Organization Appeals for Contributions to Emergency Relief.

An independent charities group headed by Mrs. Elizabeth Brennan is raising funds for emergency relief, and any reader of The Labor World who is financially able may help a good cause by sending in a check or a pledge.

Mrs. Brennan, in her capacity as police matron, is in as good if not better position than any one in the city to see where immediate and necessary relief is required, and for this reason she has been named chairman of the independent group. "Not one cent of the money raised in this manner is used for overhead," she told The Labor World, "but it is all employed in furnishing food and coal for the extremely needy. We asked first for a lump sum of $200, which was given by our close friends, but this has not been sufficient. Any money contributed may be paid 25 or 50 cents per month, or as one may wish to pay it, over a period of the next few months."

Checks may be made payable to the Independent Charities and addressed to Mrs. Elizabeth Brennan, city hall.

He Signs Appeal

President William Green

The strike of 4,500 textile workers at Danville, Va., is the battle front of the southern campaign.

Sixteen thousand men, women and children must be fed daily.

This requires a steady flow of cash into Danville.

The men and women on strike never earned enough to permit savings.

They need help every day of the strike.

The courageous men and women on strike have been out two months.

The mills stand silent. The mill president is equally silent. He seems to just sit back and wait, hoping that the long, lean fingers of starvation will grip the throats of the strikers and choke them back into his mills.

Hungry half the time, the men and women outside are determined—and most of them are healthier than they ever were in the mills. That's what the mills were like.

Every dollar helps. Every nickel is a bit more strength on the side of right and justice—on the side of human freedom.

Nothing that it is possible to do today is as important as victory in this strike. The whole labor movement will feel the quickening thrill of victory when trade unionism wins the right to exist in this vital contest.

Victory depends upon food and food depends upon the money to buy it.

Give today. Use the blank. Mail your victory contribution to the American Federation of Labor.

RAIL WORKERS TO AID JOBLESS

Whitney Declares 63,000 Trainmen Dropped From Payrolls Since 1923.

A. F. WHITNEY
President Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Chicago.—The "Big Four" rail brotherhoods and the Switchmen's Union of North America will act jointly to relieve the unemployed in the transportation industry.

This proposal was adopted at a meeting of 700 general chairmen representing engineers, conductors, firemen, trainmen and switchmen on the railroads of the United States and Canada.

Five representatives from each organization were appointed to draw up details of the plan.

A six-hour day with eight hours' pay may probably be a major recommendation. It is suggested that no rail transportation worker have more than twenty days' mileage a month, that employment may be spread. The effect of new processes on railroads is indicated by a statement by A. F. Whitney, president Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, who says his organization has 63,000 men dropped from the payrolls of 200 roads since 1923.

The rail workers made a joint hour-reducing movement in 1916, which culminated in the Adamson act just as the men were ready to suspend work throughout the nation. The railway labor act, which has since been passed, provides for mediation of disputes.

Issues Call For Special Meeting Building Trades

All local building trades unions are urged to send representatives to a special meeting for these crafts Saturday afternoon at 12:30, at 11½ East Seventh street. The call is issued by E. E. McDaniels, business manager of the Electrical Workers' union, and former representative of the Building Trades council.

Mr. McDaniel states that matters of importance to all building trades workers in the city will be discussed, and it is hoped that each local union will have its representative present.

MUST FURNISH SUSTENANCE IF STRIKE IS WON

Southern Committee Issues Urgent Appeal.

REVIEW CAUSES OF DANVILLE WALKOUT

Morale of Autocrats' Victims Declared High, Despite Suffering.

(By Staff Correspondent)

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 26.—Meeting at headquarters here, the southern organizing campaign committee of the American Federation of Labor issued an urgent appeal on behalf of the Danville textile mill strikers. The appeal stresses the importance of the Danville fight and points out the necessity of rushing help to Danville at the earliest possible moment.

Following the meeting of the committee, Edward F. McGrady, William C. Birthright and Francis J. Gorman communicated with all labor organizations in the south on the Danville situation and instructed all organizers now in the south to emphasize the strike in the Virginia city. The appeal for relief met with an almost instant response, several organizations already having acted. Huntsville, Ala., and High Point, N. C., have shipped food and clothing to Danville and other organizations will soon follow the example set by these two cities.

Among constructive steps taken to aid the Danville strikers was the decision to send McGrady and Birthright to Danville to address the meeting of the strikers. They will visit Danville in the near future.

"Twelve Thousand Must Be Fed."

The committee's appeal, addressed to all secretaries and officials of state federations, central bodies and local unions follows:

"We are calling your attention to a situation which means much to the south and to our organizing campaign. Four thousand textile workers and their families in Danville, Va., are now in the eighth week of a strike forced upon them by a company which refuses to allow their workers to organize in the American Federation of Labor. Over twelve thousand men, women and children must be fed, and at the present time there is a great need for food and clothes.

"These people have been members of our movement for almost a year and have commanded the respect and admiration of all who have kept in touch with the conditions in Danville. The morale is splendid, the strike is a great success, but we are now in a critical period and more bread must be provided.

"Will you interest yourself in behalf of these hungry men, women and children? Some organizations in the south are sending in a truck load of food and clothes. Huntsville, Ala., and High Point, N. C., are shipping the necessities of life this week and we appeal in all sincerity to your group for quick action.

Quick Action Urged.

"Our committee is now in session at the Birmingham headquarters, and we have pledged the support of the southland in this great struggle for human rights and decency. President Green has indorsed the appeal, and the entire labor movement will be canvassed. This is a grave crisis just now and we are sending this letter to our membership and friends.

"Rush assistance to the United Textile Workers of America. J. C. Blackwell, Secretary, Loyal Street, Danville, Va.

"SOUTHERN ORGANIZING CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

"Wm. C. Birthright, Francis J. Gorman, E. F. McGrady.

"P. S.—Record of donations will be compiled, acknowledged and published."

Strike Fight for Principle.

In a letter to organized labor, Mr. Gorman supplements the appeal of the southern organizing campaign committee with a statement on the Danville situation and a vivid word picture of the brave fight made by the Danville workers. Emphasizing that the fight in Danville is a fight for an American principle, the right to belong to a trade union, Mr. Gorman says in part:

"Men and women who are deeply conscious of social evils are now engaged in all parts of the country striving with great effort to ward off a winter of suffering for the jobless, and undoubtedly these efforts will succeed in minimizing the hunger and want so prevalent throughout the land.

"So it is with the same desire to aid the unfortunate that our southern committee is making a strong appeal to all trade unionists and friends for approximately fifteen thousand men, women and children in Danville, Va., who receive no consideration from the civic social agencies because they are strikers, and they must depend entirely upon the support from union members, and sympathizers. And why are they striking? The answer which covers ten months of oppression in Danville can be summed in the words of one of the petty bosses, 'If you want to work in this mill you must tear up your union book.' These people for eight months avoided strike, even under the most distressing conditions, and at the end of this period the employer declared a strike against the workers by the method above outlined.

Strikers Stand Firm.

"The Danville workers could have turned in their union books and kept their jobs, but they appreciated a sacred principle and were willing to accept the consequences. Today after

Labor World Will Forward Clothing

Contributions of clothing to the families of 4,000 workers in the front-line trenches at Danville may be sent to The Labor World, 310 West Eighth street, and all such will be forwarded immediately to the stricken workers. This is in accordance with instructions of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council following the reading of a telegram Monday night, signed by W. C. Birthright, Francis J. Gorman and Edward McGrady, constituting the southern campaign committee of the American Federation of Labor.

The wire, addressed to Matt Gerlach, reads as follows:

"Four thousand union workers and their families hungry and cold in Danville. They are striking against industrial injustice and autocracy. Calling upon you as individuals, local unions, central labor unions and state federations to rush assistance in the form of money, clothes, food immeditely to help our people. Urge your immediate interest and action. Contributions should be sent to J. C. Blackwell, United Textile Workers of America, Loyal street, Danville, Va. Remember, 12,000 of our people are awaiting your response. Do not fail them in their hour of need."

Cash contributions may be sent to Secretary Frank Morrison; those desiring to send clothing may forward it either to Mr. Blackwell, at the above address, or bring or send it to this office, where it will immediately be sent to the "front."

WANT REAL NOT A FAKE DEMOCRACY

News-Sentinel Reviews Danville Strike.

HAD TASTE OF SHAM, NOW WANT GENUINE

Edward J. Meeman Finds Workers Resent Hypocritical Paternalism.

Note.—The Labor World is glad to reprint the following excellent description of what is wrong in Danville. This article demonstrates that this newspaper is not alone in its analysis of the evil, that the United Textile Workers and the American Federation of Labor are not making a prejudiced statement of the cases. The following News-Sentinel article states the case just about as labor has stated it.—Editor.

By EDWARD J. MEEMAN
Editor, the News-Sentinel, Knoxville, Tenn.

Danville, Va.—This city sees the strange sight of 4,000 men and women in the sixth week of a strike in a period of business depression—and all for a principle. Can it succeed?

I accosted, at random, one of the many pickets who gather around the campfires in the streets around the great Dan River mills, one of the largest and finest cotton mills in the world.

"Pretty nice houses," I said, waving a hand in the direction of the neat mill village.

"Yes," he admitted. "But those houses were built during the war because the mill didn't want to give the money to the government in taxes."

"Then it's the wages you don't like?" I said.

"Not the wages, so much," he said. "We want recognition of our own organization."

Paternalism Resented.

There you have it. There is a deep resentment against the paternalistic system which has made these mills famous for their elaborate welfare work. The workers are tired of having these things done for them and being told they should be grateful.

Harry R. Fitzgerald, president and treasurer of the mills, has steadfastly refused to discuss the strike for publication, so it is impossible to present the mills' side of the dispute. I called on him, however, and had an informal talk. That talk convinced me that Fitzgerald has a profoundly sincere belief in the rightness of the course he has taken.

I am convinced that he honestly believes that he has given true representation to his men. But I am just as convinced that he has failed to give them such representation.

Gave Only Shell.

What he has done is to give the workers the shell of representation. In doing so he has bred in them the desire for the kernel. They have had "sham" industrial democracy for years; what more natural than that they should now want the real thing?

That's why 4,000 men and women, used to union organization, are standing together like veterans; willing to live on rations of bare necessities, supplied to them by funds donated by

Senator Shipstead Ridicules Politicians and Pleads for Constructive Leadership.

HENRIK SHIPSTEAD
Farmer-Labor Senator from Minnesota.

Washington, Nov. 26.—If leading politicians of both parties are correct in their plea for non-partisan action in the present industrial crisis, what becomes of their claim that ours is a government of parties, and why not apply non-partisanship at all times? asked Senator Shipstead in a nation-wide radio address.

The northwest senator called attention to Washington's warning against the baneful influence of party spirit, which is now accepted by leaders who have hitherto insisted that "we must have government by parties."

"Now," continued Senator Shipstead, "when the country most particularly needs salvation, the leaders of both major parties unite in proposing and accepting an abandonment of party and a recurrence to the principle of George Washington, the principle of non-partisanship toward the solution of the difficulties of the republic.

"I welcome their conversion. I hope they will continue to put country above party, not only in an emergency, but normally and uninterruptedly.

"We then come to the second attitude which at this moment is recommended. We are told that we must now not only be non-partisan, but 'constructive.' Again I heartily concur. I had supposed, indeed, that it was desirable at all times to be 'constructive.' I had not supposed that either party at any time would bring forward measures intended to be 'destructive.' In any case, however, I join earnestly in the suggestion that we should today—and then perhaps even tomorrow—cease entirely from being 'destructive' and negative and become wholly 'constructive' and positive."

Party Lines Breaking; Political Chaos Seen

Chicago, Nov. 26.—The political party spirit is passing in this country, according to Senator Borah, who made this statement while waiting for a Washington train:

"I have just one thing to say about the recent election. I have never known so little party spirit among the people. The people are more and more voting for individuals and less for parties. There is a widespread belief that parties no longer keep pledges as parties, and, therefore, voters try to elect individuals in whom they repose their confidence. I venture the opinion that there will be political chaos in 1932."

CHURCHMEN ASK WAGE STANDARD BE MAINTAINED

Increased Pay and Shorter Hours on Program.

FEDERAL COUNCIL TAKES FIRM STAND

Religious Bodies Urged to Organize for Relief of Nation's Unemployed.

"One of the worst possible results of the unemployment period would be a permanent impairment of present standards of wages and hours," says the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in their program for unemployed relief, copy of which was sent The Labor World this week by James Myers, industrial secretary of the council's social service commission.

"Child labor and home work should be discouraged," the commission holds, and the churches are asked to "inform the membership with regard to any proposed legislation with reference to unemployment. Write American Association for Labor Legislation, 131 East Twenty-third street, New York, for information."

The churchmen declare for a "more equitable distribution of wealth and consequent increase in purchasing power of the masses."

Establishment of conferences for permanent solution of the unemployment problem, to study the possibility of preventing a recurrence of unemployment periods by stabilizing industry, planning public works far ahead, increasing wages, shortening hours and abolition of night work for women are also urged.

An unemployment committee by each local church to aid emergency relief, employment of church nurses to aid the sick, opening of church parlors and club rooms to those needing shelter, and correlation of the efforts of the churches with those of government organization is favored.

On the subject of wages and hours, the stand of the churches is given in the following unmistakable language:

"Any payment of lower wage wage rates or maintenance of longer working hours which would tend to break down present labor standards should be discouraged. The government and leading business men have gone on record in favor of maintenance of present wage rates during the depression period. In the case of emergency jobs created for purpose of relief, when only a given amount of money is available, it is better to employ men or women for part-time than to employ them full-time at reduced rates. One of the worst possible results of the unemployment period would be a permanent impairment of present standards of wages and hours."

Worker Lacks Time To Spend His Money

New York.—A five-day week would allow workers more time to spend their money, is the unique plea for a five-day week that was advanced at the final session of the Association of National Advertisers.

The speaker declared that it is not the producer who must be told to produce more goods, but the consumer must be taught to use more.

No reference was made to the need for money to buy these goods.

Political Parties Don't Affect Trade

New York, Nov. 26.—The Magazine of Wall Street, authoritative financial publication, is not alarmed at the success or reversals of political parties in the recent elections.

"There is little ground," the editor says, "for the idea so stubbornly held in some quarters that American prosperity depends upon the political color of the government at Washington. The last bitter year should dispose of it once and for all.

"Either of the great parties is amply able of giving us foolish legislation and weak administration, but neither has a monopoly of patriotism and political wisdom.

"If prosperity is incubating in economic processes, as we believe it is, neither inaction at Washington now or ill-advised action in the future can stop it."

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

The nation seems stirred as never before by the menace of unemployment. From every section come reports of action to deal with the situation. Governments—national, state and local—churches, organizations of every kind, individuals, are co-operating to relieve unemployment and find work for the jobless.

All of this is to the good, but it should not make the nation lose sight of the pressing necessity of a permanent plan for preventing and dealing with unemployment. Charity and hasty emergency measures help a little now, but something far more reaching is required. A permanent constructive policy must be worked out, else another period of hard times and unemployment is inevitable.

Those who profess to believe that Haitians favor American occupation of their country will have a hard time explaining why Stenio Vincent, leading opponent of American occupation, was recently elected president of Haiti by the national assembly. Vincent had no trouble winning and popular approval of his selection was shown by thousands who lined the streets and cheered when he was escorted to the national palace and inaugurated president following his election. The American marine force in Haiti was confined to barracks during the election.

Apparently the Haitians have left no doubt as to where they stand on American occupation. Strange as it may seem to some folks, the Haitians are very like other people—they actually want to run their own country and government, just as do Americans and the people of every nation.

President Hoover was in a position to know what he was saying when he made the statement: "The American people should understand that current expenditures on strictly military activities of the army and navy constitute the largest military budget of any nation in the world today."

Supporting this statement the official figures show that our military budget for the last fiscal year was $741,000,000. This was an increase of 1st per cent over the pre-war budget.

The American people are not only bearing a tremendous burden paying for the past war, but are supporting a staggering budget for the next war.

Now comes Gen. Pershing with statements that do not coincide with those of the president. He says, "America is already disarmed. Good people tell us we should throw away our armaments. We have very little to throw away."

If this is true, what the American people want to know is where that $741,000,000 is or are going?

Like Hashimura Togo, we ask for reply? Possibly President Hoover may delegate the matter of a reply to some one in the cabinet. Could the secretary of war tell us?

GET AT THE SOURCE!

Temporary unemployment relief can't remove fundamental causes. Bread lines and lodging houses do not lessen the number of out-of-works. To feed the hungry and shelter the homeless is necessary, but this should not obscure the fundamental need.

Responsibility for social justice cannot be evaded by charity. If compulsory idleness is not attacked at its source this wrong, in a more malignant form, is certain to reappear.

Machine production and a low purchasing power caused our unemployment. There is no element of industrial statesmanship in ignoring the continuous installation of scientific processes and detracting public attention from this fact by charity to the victims of our machine age.

Charity is elemental, but bread lines is not a solution if future depressions are to be avoided. Distribution of wealth is the problem, not creation of wealth through processes that increase non-buyers and logically enlarge the idle army.

The cause for unemployment should be seared into the nation's consciousness. Every organized worker should be a missionary to carry this message. It will not be done by men who profit temporarily by present conditions and who are blind to ultimate consequences.

Wages must be increased and hours reduced. This cannot be done by piece-meal methods, covering a long period of years, that will permit the machine to again engulf the workers. Daring must replace policies of small-minded, timid men who hope against hope that the flood of commodities turned out by the machine can be absorbed by present standards.

Wages must be raised and working hours reduced to cope with machine output and scientific processes yet in their infancy. Men must face present conditions and future prospects that they may apply new methods for a new age.

The machine is a challenge to the nation, and this challenge cannot be met by charity, unemployment surveys and temporary jobs.

MARCH OF MACHINE IGNORED.

E. Kent Hubbard, president Connecticut Manufacturers' association, seems unacquainted with machinery that is displacing labor of all degrees of skill. Mr. Hubbard, at the annual meeting of the association, called for immigration laws that will permit entry "of that class of men who do a considerable portion of our unskilled work." The average American, he said, does not take kindly to unskilled work.

If Mr. Hubbard will note how roads are built, how wheat is threshed, corn husked, sewers dug and heavy construction work is done, he will realize the machine is not bounded by "skill" limitations. The plea for more immigrants is the old system of wanting three men for every job when we have that condition now.

LET LABOR CARRY LOAD.

The five organizations of rail transportation workers are discussing the six-hour day with present rates to relieve unemployment. Thousands of workers have been discharged the past ten years because of improved methods, but the roads handle a greater output.

The workers' suggestion that they share in these benefits does not appeal to Milton W. Harrison, president National Association of Owners of Railroads and Public Utility Securities. He proposes that employed [illegible] their time with the [illegible] that publication has been ended. The Dallas union stated these reports are erroneous, the lockout is still in effect, and when settlement is made all unionists and their friends will be formally notified.

L. Wergin, Taylor Buchanon and W. L. Gardner was named to draft resolutions to forward to that corporation expressing the sentiment of local workers in regard to the situation.

International Jewelry Workers' union asked assistance in organizing a local union of that craft, and organizing committee was instructed to investigate, with the idea of rendering all possible aid.

The meeting Monday night was altogether one of the most interesting and important in many months, and an unusually large number of delegates was present to participate in the discussions.

APPLE PRICES BOOSTED WHEN IDLE SELL FRUIT

New York.—Unemployed persons who sell apples in this city to secure a few pennies are called on to pay an extra 50 cents a box for the fruit.

When the apple peddling movement started, the price was $1.75 a box. The price now is $2.25, and another 25-cent increase is predicted.

WHEN A FELLOW NEEDS A RIDE

COMMON SENSE SPEAKING

From a New York copyrighted dispatch to the Washington Evening Star, by John F. Sinclair, the following is taken:

The telephone activities of Theodore Gary, of Kansas City, cover the world. Because of his vast connections, I asked him this question:

"Can there be a general recovery of business until the price level is stabilized, not only in the United States, but throughout the world?"

Mr. Gary replied: "No, in my opinion there will be no general recovery until the world price situation is corrected."

Then I asked this question: "What should be done to alleviate still further the unemployment distress? Do you favor an unemployment plan supported by industry and supervised by the state? Would a five-day week, or a shorter one, help?"

"In my opinion," Mr. Gary said, "a five-day week, or even a shorter one, would materially aid the unemployment condition."

Mr. Gary's reply was significant. It showed that some of the larger business leaders are beginning to modify their views upon this question—views which were so popular a short time ago.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part II.

INTRODUCTION

Modern life has brought acutely before men the question: Are the old standards by which we judged the use of money still to be in effect or shall we attempt to find others? The unending change of years into the long roll of centuries has brought corresponding change in men's standards of living, habits, clothing, and so on. Are we also to alter our conception of money? True, to an immeasurable extent life has changed with the passing of time, but let me here make plain one thing that must be engravened deeply on one's mind: while outwardly all things have changed, the principles that govern the world, including men's lives and thoughts, have not! A wrong is still a wrong and goodness is still the same old goodness it ever was—only the environments in which these qualities exist have suffered alteration, not the qualities themselves. Today we still recognize as did men of old that "hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of heaven," but then, with our changed standards of living in mind, we realize that money occupies a very large place in our existence today and we become confused in our thinking from this point on, crying for someone to lead us into the right path of thinking in order that we may correctly judge money without destroying any of the social fabric of our time. Frankly, we are sensible enough to want the old principles to still govern us—but we want to keep our material possessions intact. We still recognize that money tends to corrupt one's life, but in a world in which the medium of exchange called money holds such widespread sway, in what way are we going to deal with this corruptive influence without tearing down our economic structure? Here again we must remember the application of the old principles of life must be made—it is the use of our money always that must be studied.

WM. L. MOSS

So it is with the purpose of finding the basic principles that govern our possession of money, the real reason for their existence and how they apply to us of today that we turn to Jesus and His teaching on money. But why single out Jesus Christ as our Preceptor and not some other great teacher of mankind—and, above all else, who is this Jesus? (1) Our Teacher on this particular subject is Jesus because His teaching is the media in all things else by which practically the entire civilized world judges its life, both spiritual and material. (2) The question as to who is this Jesus is implied in the daily lives of millions of people. Because of the widespread influence of His teaching, permeating as it does to the farthest corner of our everyday life, we are met constantly with the reminders that such-and-such a thing is not Christ-like, or such-and-such remark is not what Jesus would have said, etc. His teaching in some form or another is met with a display of either favor or resentment by nearly every civilized person in his daily life. It is no exaggeration to say that the question, Who is this Jesus, never ceases to be asked day or night.

Therefore, before we can think of discussing a single one of the sayings of Jesus concerning money we must first answer the question: WHO IS THIS JESUS?

What Next!

Tiny ultraviolet ray lamps to be swallowed, as one might swallow a pill on a string, to provide curative rays for ulcers of the stomach or similar diseased conditions, have been devised in Europe, notably by Dr. S. Westmann, of Berlin, and Dr. Husserl and Herr Babler, the latter an electrical engineer of Vienna. The lamps are connected to flexible wires inside a rubber tube, which the patient swallows also. The electric current then is turned on and rays generated from the swallowed lamp, to bathe the whole lining of a diseased stomach, for example, in curative radiations. When the treatment is over, the capsule is withdrawn.

Can't Withhold Wages When Output Is Spoiled

Albany, N. Y.—The rule of an industrial plant whereby an employe's pay is deducted when the work is spoiled, has been declared illegal by Atty.-Gen. Hamilton Ward.

The company forced employes to sign an agreement that they are responsible for any loss sustained. The attorney-general called attention to various provisions of the state labor law, saying:

"The effect of these provisions is that the wages which a man has earned shall be paid to him on the due date without any deductions or withholdments of any nature, and an agreement on the part of an employe to allow a deduction is void. The statute provides that the wages earned shall be paid in cash, while the rule provides for an agreement that they may be forfeited or withheld. This is an unlawful contract."

Head and Back Quit Hurting

"A few years ago, I found that I was very weak and nothing I ate seemed to give me any strength," writes Mrs. R. B. Douglas, 704 South Congress St., Jackson, Miss.

"I suffered intense pain in my head and back. At times I would have to hold to something to steady myself, so as to do my little work. I was worried about my condition.

"My mother told me that I should take Cardui. After taking two bottles, I felt stronger, but I kept on taking it until my head and back quit hurting. I took about six bottles in all, and have never quit praising Cardui."

Chicago Wipes Out Squatter Town, Winter Refuge of Unemployed Men

"City Hall" of Chicago's Squatter Village, Just Before It Was Demolished.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Chicago, Nov. 26.—An International Labor News Service photographer got on the job in time to take a few pictures before "Hooverville," a squatter village on Chicago's lake front, was wiped out by employes of the South Park commissioners. The shantytown was built and occupied by unemployed men who had been sleeping in the public parks and under Chicago river bridges during the summer and fall. The shacks were at the foot of Randolph street and were constructed of materials salvaged from the nearby S. S. Commodore, for many years the home of the Illinois naval reserve, which is being wrecked.

The South Park commissioners decreed that the village should be wiped out and the work of destruction began. The photographer got on the job a few minutes before the last three shacks were demolished.

The picture above is of the combined "city hall" and "executive mansion" of "Mayor" Mike Donovan, crippled laborer, coal miner and railroad brakeman. It stood at the corner of "Prosperity road" and "Easy street." "Mayor" Donovan is shown in a dejected and sorrowing attitude, hat in hand. Behind him stands a member of his "cabinet," who tried to console him. At the right rear stands a menacing tractor which in a few minutes will wipe out Mike's dream of a home for the winter.

Florida's Women Workers Toil Long Hours at Wretched Wages

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 13.—Florida's fame as a winter resort state has brought distinct problems to its women workers in the form of long hours and regular employment, according to a recent state-wide survey of hours, wages and working conditions of wage-earning women made under the direction of Ethel L. Best, of the United States women's bureau. Its climate brings yearly floods of tourists into Florida, with a resultant seasonality of employment in hotels and restaurants, in laundries, and in other lines of business. The chief woman-employing manufacturing industry of the state, cigar-making, also is distinctly seasonal in character.

Due partly to this characteristic and partly to the tardy industrial development of the state, Florida has remained one of only five states that have no laws limiting the number of hours in a day or week for which a woman may be employed, although this very irregularity described increases the need of such legislation.

The women's bureau survey of Florida found both daily and weekly hours of work to be long, a daily schedule of ten hours or more being required of 15.3 per cent of the white and 69.1 per cent of the negro women in factories, stores and laundries, while only 16.3 per cent of the white women and none of the negroes had a day of eight hours or less. A weekly schedule of 48 hours or less was found in only eight firms, employing less than 5 per cent of the white women and between 5 and 6 per cent of the negroes.

The length of the day in hotels and restaurants was very irregular, and another disadvantage there was that nine-tenths of the women reporting had to work seven days in the week. Practically 18 per cent of them had a schedule of as much as sixty actual working hours during the week, and a few waitresses and kitchen helpers had the extreme requirement of eighty hours or more of work.

The median of the week's earnings of the white women in factories, stores and laundries was $15, one-half receiving more, one-half less, than that amount. The median wage for negro women was less than half as much, being $6.65. When these wage figures are compared with the $16 rate estimated by the District of Columbia minimum-wage board, when such board was in existence, as the lowest amount on which a woman could properly subsist, it is obvious that many Florida women must be unable to support themselves at a standard of health and decency.

RAIL WORKERS' 6-HOUR PLAN RECALLS "NO-STRIKE" ORDER

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 26.—A six-hour day discussion by rail transportation employes in Chicago recalls the fight for an eight-hour day by these workers in 1916, and the record-breaking passage of the Adamson law by congress that evaded a general strike by an eyelash.

The rail managers rejected and the employes accepted President Wilson's peace offer. The strike date was set for Sept. 4. The president, in a message to congress, Aug. 29, outlined his plan, which was included in a bill sponsored by Congressman Adamson. The house approved the bill on Sept. 1 and the senate took similar action the following day. The bill was signed by the president on Sept. 5, the intervening days being Sunday and Labor day.

Numerous injunctions were secured by rail managers restraining the government from enforcing the law. The United States supreme court upheld the law on March 19, 1917, by a 5 to 4 vote.

The majority decision, handed down by Chief Justice White, will prove of far-reaching effect, as an "obiter dictum" declares that railroad employes can be stopped from striking. The court, in discussing rights of employes, made this side observation: "Such rights are necessarily subject to limitation when employment is accepted in a business charged with a public interest."

This declaration aroused Associate Justice Day, one of the dissenters, who denied that the right to cease work can be outlawed under the plea of popular convenience.

"I cannot agree," he said, "that constitutional rights may be sacrificed because of public necessity, nor taken away because of emergencies which might result in disastrous inconvenience to public or private interests. If this be not so, the constitutional limitations for the protection of life, liberty and property are of little value and may be taken away whenever it is supposed that the public interest will be promoted by the sacrifice of rights which the framers of the constitution intended should be forever protected from governmental invasion by any branch of government."

Despite Justice Day's stinging rebuff, the "public interest" theory was warehoused for future use. It is the basis of "can't-strike" legislation passed by the Kansas legislature at the behest of Gov. Allen, recently defeated for the United States senate, and which is still on the statute books of that state.

EVEN DIVISION IN CONGRESS MAKES PARTISAN HELPLESS

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 26.—The republicans will control both branches of the new (Seventy-second) congress by the narrowest of margins, according to a preliminary list compiled by William Tyler Page, clerk of the house of representatives. Several contests may change this estimate that cannot include the certainty of mortality among newly elected members between now and December, next year, when the new congress convenes.

The Page figures show that the republicans, on the face of present returns, will have 48 members in the senate, the democrats will have 47 and the farmer-labor party one. The same close margin prevails in the house, where the republicans have 218 members, the democrats 216 and farmer-labor one.

While the Page survey shows that the republicans are in control of both branches, this is a "paper" control, and, naturally, does not consider the breakdown of party lines that can not be defined, but is most pronounced in the senate.

The congress that convenes the first Monday in this December will not include the candidates who were successful in the recent November elections. Next month's congress will be the last session of the Seventy-first congress and will be marked by many "lame ducks" whose term of office will expire on March 4 next by constitutional limitation. The new senators and representatives will not take office until December, next year, thirteen months after their election.

The president has the authority to call a special session of congress after March 4, when the newly-elected members would be sworn in and could function. The administration, however, does not favor such a policy and this seems to be favored by conservative leaders of both parties who oppose "alarming business."

The weakening of party lines is seen on this issue, as progressives in both camps are discussing an extra session to consider the following legislation:

The Norris resolution doing away with "lame duck" sessions of congress, and permitting newly elected members to take office in the January following election, rather than thirteen months afterwards.

Organized labor's anti-injunction bill.

Farm debenture and the Norris bill for government operation of Muscle Shoals.

Passage of the Wagner unemployment bills and an increase of federal appropriations for road building.

the local unions of the American Federation of Labor in various cities.

Anyone who thinks this strike was caused by "outside agitators" from the north misreads the situation. The record shows that a committee of the loom-fixers' organization, a local union formed spontaneously and not affiliated with any national labor body today, called on President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and asked him to send organizers in to organize their fellow workers.

Action Only Natural.

President Fitzgerald need not feel surprised and pained at what has happened. It is natural enough.

His employes are like a man who has been given every advantage of fatherly care and education. When he grows up the thing he wants most of all is to be independent of that fatherly care. He wants to stand on his own feet and have a life of his own. That's what the Danville cotton mill employes want.

Although the employes opposed the wage cut when it was put into effect, the union is not demanding its restoration at this time. The union is only asking for union recognition. It asks a union shop but not a closed shop.

Will they get it?

City Wants Settlement.

Danville, a city of 22,000, half dependent on tobacco which was hit by drought, and half dependent on cotton mills hit by strike, would like to know the answer. They do not want the strike prolonged.

The general belief is that the strikers will stay out indefinitely as long as the labor unions of America continue to finance them. Can they win thus?

President Fitzgerald seems to be adamant in his opposition to the union, having even turned down an offer of mediation from Gov. Pollard.

But his remark, quoted by the union loom fixers with whom he dealt some years ago after saying he wouldn't have anything to do with the union, is recalled:

"A man will change his mind sometimes."

Jackson Employers Cut Wages One-Third

Jackson, Mich.—Contractors in this city started a fight by attempting to enforce a wage reduction of one-third on plasterers and bricklayers.

This is one result of the recent order by the Michigan administration board that rates for common labor on state construction work be 35 cents an hour. Gov. Green, in defending the order, said contractors were paying as low as 15 and 20 cents.

Remember, Priscilla, that everyone who has little red pants is not a Santa Claus.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

Well, Thanksgiving is over. For some it meant joy and revelry—for others just another day. Ellis Goodloe took advantage of it by initiating a brand new derby. Ralph Miller wore his usual pair of spats. Dick Stamper celebrated by driving a few hundred miles from Alabama to play the auditorium dance with Tommye Lasater. Quite a number of us attended the football game. For us all it was a happy day and Buck Weaver assures us that the spirit of Thanksing will linger on—he's sure 'cause he has some left.

For a time we believed that the local musicians would go strong for miniature golf, but we were sadly mistaken. It seemed that any effort made on our part to get Sandy to install a course would be quashed by some member of the local. Yea, readers, you will be shocked to hear that as far as our members are concerned, golf has been put aside for a more violent form of amusement—tap dancing.

Joe Leland appears to be the father of this new sport and it had its origin at the Bijou. It is impossible to say just how many of the Bijou orchestra have caught the bug. Don't be surprised if you should wanter backstage in the midst of a tap dance.

Among the visitors in Chattanooga last week was none other than our old friend, Chris Hebert. Chris has for the time moved his domicile to Atlanta, and is busily engaged in entertaining the music lovers of Atlanta via a 16-piece orchestra in the Keith-Georgian theater. Along with him is Dick Gordon and Joe Garca.

Speaking of Chris recalls those pleasant memories of stage-band days at the Tivoli. O! for those good old days when one could get a good seat and wait for our inimitable Alex Keese to introduce those Troubadours.

Jack Park dropped in to see us from Memphis. Jack is a student in the Tennessee Medical college and reports that he is working hard. He says that as far as dance work is concerned, the Bluff City is doing quite well with about ten bands regularly employed.

The Peruchi Players have a fine offering for next week's menu. It is one of Irene Bardoni's favorites, "Little Miss Bluebeard." Local musicians would do well to get the Bijou habit, as it is the only Chattanooga theater to offer us the best in music—that played by real live musicians.

MORE ABOUT RELIEF PLEA

all of the persecutions, trickery, treachery and evasion on the issues involved, the morale of the strikers is of the highest caliber, and every day they reiterate their determination to carry on the fight until they can return as members of the union.

"We know that all of us cannot go to Danville, but we can visualize a picture of the pickets on duty twenty-four hours a day, guarding every gate of these big mills, and sitting around the picket fire singing the songs and hymns of their people, and praying for a higher standard of social justice. We can see the little children without shoes waiting in line at the commissary for flour and beans, and we can see these sturdy men and women holding up their heads bravely with no sign of weakness, only asking for subsistence—bread, and a garment to cover their bodies. Infants must not be the victims of this outrageous system, so long nourished by unfair employers in the south.

We are therefore urging all members, friends and sympathizers to take part in the Danville strike. If we only have a little, share it with these good people. What will be your answer—tear up your union books, or carry on to the end?"

Author Backs Strikers.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Danville, Va., Nov. 26.—Sherwood Anderson, distinguished American author, a champion of the cause of labor, told a mass meeting of textile mill strikers here: "I hope to God you win."

Anderson came to Danville to obtain data for a series of articles and was prevailed upon to make a short address.

"I came here," he said, "in the hope that I might be able to write something that would bring your situation to the attention of the country. There is something we have in common and that is we are all Virginians, and Virginia has a tradition for freedom and right that makes me ashamed to know that there are men in Virginia who are not willing to grant your rights and to deal with you fairly."

Wage Should Be Held To Check Depression

New York.—"Business could contribute mightily to the prevention of unemployment if it would begin to regard more seriously its obligation to maintain steadiness of work and continuity of wages," said Senator Wagner in a radio address.

The speaker said that the present "hit or miss method of job finding" would long since have been eliminated if congress passed his bills providing for long-range planning of public works and the establishment of a nation-wide system of employment offices.

Pointing out that wage earners already have lost at least $10,000,000 in wages during 1930 and that millions more will be expended in charity, Senator Wagner said that while there is much industry can do directly to prevent repetition of such a depression, the government is in a stragetic position to take the initiative in avoiding future unemployment.

"Business can regularize employment to a far greater extent than has yet been attempted," he said.

Willie—What was the name of the last station where we stopped, mother?

Mother—I don't know. Don't bother me. I'm reading a story.

Willie—Well, it's too bad you don't know the name, because little brother got off there.

GREEN FLAYS "TYRANNY" OF WAGE-CUTTER

Labor's Patriotic Duty to Resist Cuts.

BOSSES CALLED PUBLIC ENEMIES

Calls on Fair Employers and Workers to Maintain Living Standards.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 4.—Employers who are taking advantage of economic and industrial distress to lower living standards through forced reductions in wages "can well be classified as public enemies," William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared today.

"The wrongs which they are perpetrating are against the public," he said, "and serve to undermine our national economic structure at a time when the leaders in government and public spirited people are striving to maintain wage standards so that we can facilitate and hasten a return to normal conditions."

President Green declared it was the patriotic duty of the American workers to resist with all their power any attempt to reduce wages.

Wrongs Against Public.

"In every national emergency, during war periods or times of peace," he said, "there are those who attempt to exploit the workers and thus secure an unfair economic and industrial advantage. In the present emergency created as a result of widespread unemployment, history is repeating itself.

"There are employers who are taking advantage of economic and industrial distress to lower living standards through forced reductions of wages. Such men can well be classified as public enemies. The wrongs which they are perpetrating are against the public and serve to undermine our national economic structure at a time when the leaders in government and public-spirited people are striving to maintain wage standards so that we can facilitate and hasten a return to normal conditions. These men, exploiting the economic necessity of unemployed working people, force them, in their hour of greatest need, to accept lower wages.

"The employers to whom I refer are found in the textile industry, the boot and shoe industry and in some other miscellaneous manufacturing enterprises.

"Because of their action a substantial decrease in the purchasing power of these workers, who become their victims, is brought about and to that extent the day of returning prosperity and normal industrial activity is being delayed and an injury is inflicted upon those industries where employers and workers are heroically endeavoring to maintain established wage standards.

Patriotism in Resistance.

"Because all good citizens are striving to bring about a return to normal conditions and because we are dealing with the problem of unemployment in a practical and constructive way, it is the patriotic duty of American workers to resist, with all the power they possess, any attempt of employers and corporations to reduce wages or lower the standards which have been set. Working people will render a great service to organized society if they will be alert and vigilant in the enforcement of all safety measures which have been secured for them after so many years of effort. There should be no lowering of protective measures and no surrender of safeguards against injury and loss of life secured through legislation.

"Free men and women cannot yield to tyranny and injustice. They cannot submit to a lowering of working and living standards without protest and without resistance.

"The government has committed itself to the maintenance of wage schedules and working standards. It is the duty of all working people to support this policy and to hold fast to the wage levels already established.

Many Fair Employers.

"Fortunately, there are many employers of labor who believe in the philosophy of high wages. They understand that if we are to consume the product of industry the purchasing power of the masses of the people must be maintained at a point where it will balance with the facilities of production. Those public enemies among employers who will not willingly subscribe to this humane and sound economic policy should be compelled, through the resisting power of working men and women and the pressure of sound public opinion, to maintain wages, hours of labor and conditions of employment which are in accord with American traditions and the American standard of living."

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

Presence of State Militia Increases Determination of Danville Strikers

STRIKE PASSES CRUCIAL TEST AT DANVILLE

State Militia Fails to Intimidate Workers.

PRESENCE PLANNED BEFORE BREAK CAME

Newspaper Charges Sending of Troops Was Plot to Destroy Union.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Dec. 3.—Despite the protection afforded by 1,000 soldiers and a group of plug-uglies believed to be Baldwin-Felts detectives and strikebreakers, the Dan River and Riverside Cotton mill workers, on strike for nine weeks, passed the crucial test Nov. 30 and saw the mills no further along toward production than they were when the clattering machinery stopped, as the workers walked out in protest against conditions.

Virginia soldiers have been on the ground here for almost a week, sent in through the breakdown of Pittsylvania county peace authorities, who laid down on the job. There had been no damage done, no one had been injured during all the weeks of the strike. Impromptu parades in Schoolfield—the Dan River mill village—by workers, laughing, singing and thumbing noses at strikebreakers, made up the "devilment" charged against the strikers. Finally a strikebreaker slapped a woman striker and was seriously threatened by a group of strikers. He took refuge in a mill village hotel harboring scabs. Sheriff Murphy refused to go in and arrest the culprit and it was only through the efforts of Charles Anderson, a strike picket captain, who forced his way through the milling throng and succeeded in having the man arrested. He was later taken to jail and fined $25 and costs for assault and battery and carrying a gun which he drew on some of the strikers.

Following this episode the county peace officers quit cold turkey, and prevailed on the commonwealth attorney and Malcolm K. Harris, attorney for the mill interests, to call for soldiers, which Gov. Pollard sent to the scene of action.

The whole play, strike leaders say, was merely to get the soldiers into Danville so as to break the strike. They declare that Gov. Pollard was imposed upon as to the necessity for troops, inasmuch as not a red cent's worth of damage had been done to mill property and no one had been injured. There were no riots and with the exception of a bloody nose or two nothing had occurred even to warrant talking about troops coming in.

A Danville newspaper, the day the troops arrived, printed a story to the effect that the plan to bring the soldiers into Danville had been made and decided upon even before the workers had left the mills at the beginning of the strike. It is known that investigators for the governor had been in Danville regarding the strike, but none of them asked a union official or member a single question regarding conditions here.

Now that the soldiers are here to give protection to the strikebreakers —being quartered in Hylton hall, a dormitory belonging to the mill company—the scabs are not materializing as rapidly as supposed. Monday morning (Nov. 30), when the mill whistles blew, and as the military with tin hats and fixed bayonets surrounded the various mill gates there was a conspicuous absence of strikebreakers flocking into the mills. From actual count made by newspaper men on the scene the number was about the same as on ordinary days, between 500 and 700 entering Dan River mills, this number including overseers, second-hands and other straw bosses, as well as negro roustabouts who do odd jobs from raking the mill park of fallen leaves to washing windows. Those not included in these classes are largely made up of farmers and other unskilled workers who cost the company more than they are worth.

A few weeks ago Harry R. Fitzgerald, who is known as a pious Christian gentleman, announced that he would not evict any of the striking workers from the company houses this winter, but he would next spring if the strike lasts that long. The rumor now is that the company has changed its mind and that those occupying company houses will have to move. While no official announcement to this effect has been made, union officers would not be surprised if this would not be the next move to break the strike. The only way in which the strike can be broken is through starvation and freezing.

Just how long the soldiers will remain on the job is problematical, authorities say. It is believed, however, that the troops will be withdrawn gradually over a period of several weeks, this being the strategy to break the strike, although sharp criticism has been directed at Gov. Pollard and other officials for sending troops into Danville.

The strikers won a victory when Gov. Pollard issued an order countermanding one given the military by Sheriff Murphy, to chase the pickets off the line around the Dan River mill. Telegraphic protest to the governor when Murphy issued his order was made by the union on the ground that statute law of Virginia was set aside by the sheriff. Gov. Pollard made a personal visit to Danville and after a conference gave the order that picketing be permitted. Commonwealth Attorney Posie Hundley then said that no fires would be allowed the pickets to warm themselves, thinking this would hinder the picketing, and the pickets have resumed their watch.

The morale of the strikers is high. Food and clothing have been coming in slowly but in sufficient quantity to keep the workers from starvation and freezing. Truck loads of supplies are coming in regularly from High Point, N. C., provided by trade unions of that city which have just been organized but which desired to help Danville strikers in their distress.

On Sunday last more than 2,000 workers packed the union hall to suffocation to hear Edward F. McGrady, acting chairman of the southern organizing committee, speak. "All these good people need," McGrady said, "is food and warmth and they will stick until this battle is won."

DANVILLE UNION PLEDGED TO ORDER

From a statement issued by an authorized committee of Local 1685, United Textile Worers of America, at Danville, Va., after the troops were ordered in by the governor:

"On behalf of the strikers we can pledge to the public that their attitude and actions will continue just as peaceful in the future, even with the presence of the military, but we cannot be responsible for the action of the scabs and communists employed in the mills."

Girl Victim of Trooper's Club Is Badly Injured

Reading Young Woman, Beaten in Attack on Pickets, May Never Be Able to Work at Trade Again.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Reading, Pa., Dec. 4.—Further examination of the injuries inflicted on Mary Talliho, 25 years old, striking full fashioned hosiery worker, who was clubbed by a state trooper at the Berkshire mills last week, now indicate that the young woman may never be able to work at her trade again. With her arm dislocated and still in a cast it has been impossible to make a final examination of the injuries, but it is apparent that the condition is more serious than was first thought to be the case, states Mrs. Anna Geisinger, who paid a visit to the home of the injured girl.

"Her nerves shattered by the experience of being ridden down and beaten by a mounted Cossack, Miss Talliho has been hesitant to even take legal action against the officer who rode her down," Mrs. Geisinger stated.

"It is heart-rending to see this pretty and refined young woman, now so utterly crushed and broken up, by this criminal act of brutality on the part of a uniformed thug. Mary went on the picket line full of pep and gaiety to add her protest to those of her fellows against the policy of wage cutting which is reducing a well-paid industry to the level of the low-wage textile trades. There was no disorder at the time the clubbing took place and the crowds of strikers were marching up and down on the pavements opposite the mill, obeying the orders of state troopers regulating traffic. Absolutely nothing would have happened had not the commanding officer of the state police, Capt. Gerheart, ordered Corpl. Bloom to break up the lines marching on the sidewalks.

"Instantly this young officer rode his horse up on the footwalk and began clubbing right and left. Mary Talliho was struck and also trampled by the horses' hoofs. The girl was hastily taken to the hospital and has been under medical care at home since being discharged a couple of days later. Capt. Gerheart told our union officials he accepts full responsibility for the action of his man, Corpl. Bloom, and justifies everything that was done at the Berkshire. The people of Pennsylvania must protect themselves against cruel, reckless brutality of this character."

CIVIC BODIES DOUBLE-CROSS MILL STRIKERS

Merchants and Others Back Low-Wagers.

APPROVE PRESENCE OF STATE MILITIA

Unionists Indicate Reprisals Against Supposed Friends for Treachery.

(By Staff Correspondent)

Danville, Va., Dec. 4.—Danville, national news center for eight weeks of the south's outstanding strike, leaped to new heights of importance with the coming of state troops on the eve of Thanksgiving and is holding that position with the strike as firm as ever.

Gov. John Garland Pollard, at whose order the troops were rushed here in accord with a plan laid weeks ago, evidently stung by a wave of protest, came here Saturday and surveyed the situation in person.

The result of the governor's visit was a modification of the activities of the soldiers. Immediately upon their arrival the troops had systematically destroyed the union's shelter tents erected along the picket line and had stopped all picketing. After the governor's visit picketing was resumed.

Arrival of the governor followed union protests to the effect that the troops had usurped statute law "here in Virginia where the Declaration of Independence was conceived and where liberty was born."

Union Stands Ground.

The union has stood its ground with amazing cool headedness, has made its protests with firmness and dignity and has, in reality, walked off with the laurels that H. B. Fitzgerald, his cronies and the state officials evidently had hoped to pin on themselves.

In addition to the protests filed by the union here, other protests are understood to have piled up on the governor's desk from all parts of the country. In addition to that new pledges of support have come to the union from throughout the nation and the organization here feels itself stronger than ever.

It has been charged here that the real force back of the call for troops was Malcolm Harris, lawyer, though the official call was signed by the Pittsylvania county prosecutor. (Gov. Pollard wired International Labor News Service that he didn't know Harris, a statement utterly without significance.—ILNS.) Harris is attorney for the mills.

Shirking of Duty Charged.

A union committee composed of C. W. Bolick, L. T. Shumate and C. L. Anderson, declared that if "local officials had done their duty" there would have been no excuse for the sending of troops. It is pointed out that in all of the "disturbance" preceding the call for troops no life was lost, no property damaged and no situation created that could not have been handled by local authorities. There is still wonderment as to what hand communists, in mill employ, may have played.

Charges of the harshest kind are made against the Schoolfield authorities for a "lay-down" on their job.

The Retail Merchants' association and the chamber of commerce, considered fairly neutral until the troops came, got behind the mill ownership after arrival of the soldiers and sent the governor their meed of praise. The union promptly retaliated and adopted resolutions condemning the action of these two bodies, which are composed of members whose business has come from mill workers through three decades. As a matter of fact the union has declared a war that they say will continue long after the present strike has been won. Following are paragraphs from the union's resolution:

Management Held to Blame.

"Whereas, this strike was brought about by the attitude of the management of the Dan River and Riverside mills who refused to grant the same right and privileges they themselves had taken; and,

"Whereas, we have not been misled by foreign agitators and are wholly competent to judge when our lawful rights are withheld from us; and,

"Whereas, we are citizens and voters of Danville and Pittsylvania county, and patrons of the stores and other businesses of Danville, and spend our money with these firms and individuals; and,

"Whereas, we have rights in the premises as citizens of Virginia, and these rights have been trampled upon and utterly disregarded by the powers of the state called in to break our strike against a private concern

MOTHER JONES, CRUSADER, HAD EVENTFUL LIFE

Service to Labor Can Never Be Surpassed.

TRIBUTES OFFERED TO FALLEN LEADER

Dramatic Story of Unusual Career Is Filled With "Human Interest."

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 4.—"Mother" Jones, famous labor crusader, died peacefully shortly before midnight of Nov. 30 at the farmhouse of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burgess, near Silver Springs, Md., a few miles outside of Washington. "Mother" Jones had been failing for several months and had been in a critical condition for some days before her death. She was 100 years old last May 1.

The last years of "Mother" Jones, spent in the quiet Maryland countryside, were in striking contrast to her more than half a century of intense activity in the industrial and mining centers of the nation. Though feeble in body, "Mother" Jones kept up her interest in the labor movement and followed its struggles with keen attention. Labor executives frequently visited her and on her hundredth birthday, a large delegation of trade unionists celebrated the anniversary at the Burgess home, with "Mother" Jones enjoying the occasion as much as if she had been fifty years younger.

Following requiem high mass at St. Gabriel's church, the body of "Mother" Jones was removed to a funeral parlor and was later placed in a special car of a train bound for Mount Olivet, Ill., where burial took place in Mount Olivet cemetery, near the monument erected in memory of the miners killed at Virden in 1898. The body was accompanied from Washington to Illinois by Edward Knockles, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and other labor representatives.

Green Pays Tribute.

"In the death of 'Mother' Jones a unique and picturesque figure has been removed from the ranks of labor," President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, said on learning of her death.

"Even though she has been incapacitated through illness and advancing age her name and her personality has been a great influence in public life and an inspiration to the men and women of organized labor," Mr. Green continued.

"During her entire lifetime she has been in the forefront of labor struggles, cheering and inspiring men and women to fight for the cause of organized labor.

"The loss sustained cannot be measured and the services she rendered will never be surpassed or excelled.

"The hearts of the men and women of labor are very sad because millions of working men and women mourn the death of 'Mother' Jones."

Known World Over.

"Mother" Jones was loved in thousands of humble homes in lonely creeks and on steep mountain sides. Although she never left the shores of her America which she dearly loved, her fame is known the world over. If the stories of her daring had not traveled of their own momentum, the word of her exploits was carried by word of mouth. Thousands of American mine workers returned to Czecho-Slovakia, to Wales, to Poland, to Ireland to tell about the white-haired woman who spurred their flagging courage until the grim strikes were won.

"Mother" Jones' life story is the epic of labor itself. Following her career traces nearly every page of the terrific struggles of the American labor movement. In no country in the world have more desperate battles been fought between labor and capital.

Ludlow, Colo., Cabin Creek, W. Va., the American Railway union strike, Homestead, all tragedies of the American working class, saw her in the fray. The great steel strike of 1919 was her last great venture, when she was one of a hundred organizers thrown into the fray against the steel trust. She regretted illness prevented her aiding the striking railroad shopmen. Her last years have been peaceful ones.

Optimistic to Last.

Great men will praise "Mother" Jones, but her loss will be felt keenest by the humble workers whose lot erty was her only cause. She was optimistic to the last, seeing vision of a republic of labor in which the workingman would come into his own.

Hundreds of anecdotes are told about "Mother" Jones. Humorous, pathetic, courageous scenes were enacted by strikers under her inspiration. She knew how to dramatize the labor struggle. She worked in front, not behind the scenes, and she walked right up to a machine gun and put her hand on the muzzle to protect a group of twenty-six Cabin Creek miners in the line of fire.

LOCAL UNIONS MOURN LOSS OF GEO. P. WOODLEY

Plasterers' First President Goes to Reward.

WAS PROMINENT IN FORMATION OF 157

Veteran Craftsman Leaves Two Sons, Three Grandsons Members of Local.

Another pioneer in the Chattanooga labor movement passed to his reward on last Sunday afternoon, when George Preston Woodley, aged 76, surrendered to the Grim Reaper following a battle of several months' duration against the ravages of a fatal attack.

Mr. Woodley was prominent in the formation of the local Plasterers' union, being a charter member and its first president. He was born in London, England, Dec. 24, 1854, the son of Thomas B. and Myra Woodley, the former a postoffice inspector in the British government service. C. Edward Woodley, noted English writer and composer, was a brother. Educated in the London schools, Mr. Woodley came to the United States when 20 years of age, and, coming to Chattanooga in 1881, quickly became a leading contractor, which position he held until his passing. He was married on Feb. 2, 1882, to Miss Mary Ann Gillen, and two sons, a daughter, nine grandchildren and the widow survive. Of these, the two sons, Thomas B., and B. Edward, and three grandsons, Robert and Louis Lerch and Thomas Preston Woodley II., are all members of Local 157. The surviving daughter is Mrs. A. P. Lerch.

Funeral services were held Tuesday morning from Coulter's funeral home, the Rev. D. C. Young, of the Missionary Ridge Presbyterian church, officiating. Interment followed at Greenwood cemetery, with grandsons of the deceased serving as pallbearers.

From the organization of the Plasterers' union in Chattanooga, July 17, 1901, Mr. Woodley was active in its councils, serving several terms as president and filling every other office within the gift of the membership. Regular meeting of Local 157 Wednesday night was in large part given over to eulogies of the deceased trades unionist, who was known and loved by all members. A committee to prepare a suitable tribute to the memory of Mr. Woodley was appointed, with the following as members: T. F. Belote, Mike Beck, Mark Beck, Walter Branham and L. T. Adwell.

The Labor World joins the Plasterers and hundreds of other friends in deploring the passing of this loyal trades unionist and good citizen, and in expressing sincere sympathy for the bereaved relatives of Brother Woodley.

STAR CLOTHING CO. "UNFAIR"

Main Street Concern Ignores Organized Labor in Emment of Sign Writer.

Pickets in the vicinity of the Star Clothing company, 242 East Main street, this week are "telling the world" that the concern employs non-union labor.

Efforts to prevail upon the management to favor members of Local 299 in the matter, it was reported, were unavailing, and after representatives of Central Body had failed to adjust the complaint brought by the Signwriters, the firm was formally declared "unfair."

Unionists in Detroit Feed Hungry Members

Detroit, Mich.—The local federation of labor's dining room, in which hungry members of organized labor are fed, is a tribute to labor's co-operation and efficiency.

Two wholesome meals are daily served to any person who presents his union card.

The dining room is operated by volunteers from the ranks of organized labor. Dishes are washed and the rooms kept clean by men who gladly offer their services after being fed.

The unions have been contributing all costs, which have increased, and now the city, through the assistance of Mayor Murphy, is assuming part of the cost.

The dining room and kitchen, with space and equipment, have been loaned by Fraternal Order of Eagles.

FRIDAY DECEMBER 5, 1930.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

Continuously the problem of unemployment presses upon the American people as the greatest issue a nation ever has been called upon to solve.

Continuously it becomes clear to men and women everywhere that this depression is not "just one more," but that it is decidedly a new kind of depression. And because it is this new kind of depression it must be solved, for nothing short of solution will permit the achievement of the national goal, which is continuous progress and a constantly rising level of life and living.

The reason this depression is a new kind of depression is that since the old-time panics, such as that of '93, mass production has been developed. Mass production cannot continue to grow and enlarge its field of operation unless there are men and women with a constant supply of money with which to buy and likewise with a constantly growing supply of money for that purpose.

That seems to be a fairly concise and complete statement of the situation.

Gentlemen of high degree and of various degrees are putting this way and that about what ought to be done. They are pouring over our almost helpless heads a vast quantity of the oil of loquacity, babbling much and saying little.

Scholarly professors and popular "economists" are orating, declaiming and getting all red in the face telling us what to do, though they themselves know not.

Newspapers are feverishly thinking to cure everything by urging us to "buy now." That is well enough and most of us want to buy now. But no superficial formula, no action that the people can take outside of the work places, will solve the problem, cure this depression and stop future depressions.

We can all "buy now" and go broke so that we can't buy tomorrow, though if we buy now we shall help revive industry somewhat and perhaps relieve the general pain somewhat.

But, unless there is fundamental cure we shall come back to depression, meeting the next one with a smaller reserve of savings and resources, and going on to the next in the same way, riding down a diminishing scale to the bottom.

That is why this new kind of depression cannot be left to itself to peter out in a glow of reviving activity.

From this point we must either definitely readjust matters and go on up to new heights, or bring about some kind of half recovery which will before long recede into renewed and more desperate depression.

The nation cannot stand many such jolts if it is to preserve the present industrial order. That's the hard truth.

We need and must have the enlivening stimulus of democracy within the work places, so that the masses may be empowered to speak with effective voice in behalf of that simple but vital thing that means cure—higher and continuously higher rates of wages per hour of work and a continuously shorter work day, so that a balance may be preserved between the growing productivity of the machine and the purchasing power of the people.

In another paragraph I have said that "control of private economic power fully condemned by President Hoover be eliminated and recurring depressions be stopped.

We need organization in and around industry for the intelligent control of industry so that it may not by its very functioning dig its own grave under a pile of surplus production.

CHARITY OR JUSTICE?

Declarations that "American initiative and intelligence will solve unemployment" bring shouts of approval, but these declarations do not necessarily mean anything. Charity is being distributed and millions of additional dollars will be necessary to care for the millions of jobless and hungry. Our boasted "American initiative," however, has done nothing to solve unemployment. Our whole policy seems to be based on the theory that if we get over this depression some one, some how, some way, will rescue us from another depression which the machine age makes inevitable.

Wrongful economic conditions are not righted by charity doles and hope for a better day. It is no solution, for instance, when one of the nation's largest industrial corporations that still applies the long workday, and has millions of undivided profits in its treasury, contributes $50,000 to feed New York City's hungry.

Men who exploit workers and who dodge excess profits and income taxes throw a few thousand dollars to the workless and talk of "American initiative" to end unemployment. This is no advance from the days of ancient Rome when the hungry were not only fed, but were amused.

Workers have been told for more than a year that prosperity is just around the corner. This is not true. Statistical information points to curtailment in basic industries. Steel production, for instance, is as low as 46 per cent of capacity. Auto output is off 58 per cent from October of last year.

If we would attack unemployment let us stop talking and apply such easily understood remedies as placing men to work by reducing the work day.

Take the 44-hour week for postal employes, now pending in congress. The government should be the first to reduce hours. But notice how that bill will be opposed by men who give to charity, but who will not change working conditions until they are compelled to change. They will give to charity because this can be charged to overhead and their income tax payments are reduced. They are strong for charity, but not for social justice which would compel them to yield some of their present powers.

Opposition of this element to the postal workers 44-hour bill is indicative of the attitude of men in the machine age who cling to the old and who generalize about "American initiative solving the unemployment problem."

"THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH."

The idea that workers have a vested right in their employment is taking deep root in industry. A vested right is a property right—worth money.

Edward S. Cowdrick, an industrial engineer, writing in Nation's Business, magazine of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the holy of holies of business, points out that slaves and serfs of old days had better protection than the modern worker against starvation. Then he says:

"The man who works for one employer for ten or fifteen years, even if he does not actually obtain a vested right to his job, at least builds up a presumption that he will finish his active service in the same company. To break off the connection becomes a serious step not to be taken hastily by either party."

Mr. Cowdrick points out that some companies have gone so far in recognizing at least "the presumption" to a vested right that they have "adopted the expedient of paying [an] employee cash indemnities," or "industrial alimony."

Creating "the presumption" is but one step removed from creating the actual recognition of a condition.

A vested right in the job carries with it, necessarily, a voice in determining the terms and conditions of working at the job and the unquestioned right to speak through chosen spokesmen.

We are coming to the time when employers, such as the mill owners of Danville, will no longer even think of summarily discharging workers because they join a union. The rights of the workers will be a real bar to autocratic action.

A BLOW FOR FREEDOM.

Products of convict labor have been stopped from entry into the United States. This prohibition is made effective through treasury department regulations enforcing the old tariff law.

It is of the utmost importance that the burden of proof is on the importer. He must prove the innocence of his product. A pending proof he must post a bond to the value of the goods.

It is to be doubted that the importing world yet realizes what a terrific blow to exploitation this measure will prove to be, nor how widely the scythe will cut through their profit harvest.

Perhaps no nation has ever acted so drastically to strike at low labor standards in other lands. It is an action carrying forward the concept of human freedom laid down in the famous Seamen's act.

The free workers in all lands will be helped by this drastic prohibition against the products of convict labor.

But this is only a beginning. In January a year hence American law will bar from entry the products of any kind of involuntary labor. That will cut far and wide, bringing consternation to some of our most pious millionaires and some of our most ponderously pretending idealists.

With all of the greed of which it is accused, every now and then the United States—the American nation—strikes such a terrific and dramatic blow for the freedom of the human race as to leave an indelible mark on race history.

JESUS AND MONEY.

"Ye Cannot Serve God and Money."
Part III.

WHO IS THIS JESUS?

In seeking an answer to the question, "Who is this Jesus?" we shall proceed by four steps, namely, (1) a study of Jesus' home, (2) a glimpse of the province and town in which He grew up, (3) another view which will consist of the political and economic conditions of Palestine in Jesus' time, (4) a contemplation of Jesus the Anointed of God.

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus was reared in the type of home which in all centuries has been the source of every nation's stability—a home neither rich nor poor. Every Jew then had to learn a trade, for to toil with one's hands was not a sign of ignominy but rather a badge of respect. Jesus learned the trade of Joseph and with him worked day by day at the bench in the home workshop, using adz, saw, square, awl and glue-pot, all of which we know existed then. Wages were either "in kind" or in money. The wants in the little home were few. Its pressed floors needed no carpet, its one or two windows were bare of draperies and walls were covered not with decorations but with cooking utensils hanging from pegs. From the home a view could be had of vineyards, fruitful grain fields, gardens, palm trees and olive groves, means that taught the Nazarenes the meaning of commerce since their little town was on the main line of travel of merchantmen.

The intimate home life of Jesus was lived midst an atmosphere created by a deeply religious family, the old Psalmist having sung of such families as "the quiet of the land" (Ps. 35:20), their fireside being made happy by a heartfelt piety that gave the ancient deliverances of God's written Word first place. Of Jesus' growth and development we know that He grew "in wisdom and stature" (Luke 2:52)—that is, He went through all the normal stages of development of a youth. With this physical and mental growth there came to envelope Him a quality so marked that Dr. Luke adds that as He grew He became more and more "in favor with God and man." That word "favor" signifies here "grace" or "charm." The study of God's Word was a part of His home life, and through His teaching later we know also He studied the Book of Nature, and did so lovingly and well.

Let us now summarize: Jesus' home was typical of His period; He was educated in Holy Scripture, handicraft and Nature's book; He took a normal part in the every-day life of the world around Him. As the years went by He grew serene and tranquil, the meanwhile becoming more and more acquainted with the hopes, fears and expectations that were astir all about Him. His soul gradually rounded to its perfect fullness while at work in the carpenter shop adjoining the home and as He roamed the fields and mountains nearby. Neither the social perils of wealth nor of poverty to any marked degree burdened the life of the little family circle at Nazareth.

We start this life of toil and strife
With nothing on or less!
We're ushered in, without a pin,
A button, pants or dress!

But soon enough we learn this tough
And cruel truth to know;
That day by day for raiment gay
Our hard earned kale must go!

Not always thus did mankind fuss.

No single cent for garb was spent.
Ah, those were happy days.

We envy Eve's and Adam's leaves—

Federal Power Law Under Court Probe

Washington.—The state of Pennsylvania has asked the District of Columbia supreme court for permission to intervene in the case of Clarion River Power Company versus Federal Power Commission.

Behind this simple announcement are moves that may wreck the federal water power act, passed ten years ago after long and strenuous conflicts with private exploiters of natural resources.

The Clarion river case follows a ruling by United States Attorney-General Mitchell, in which the effectiveness of the federal water power act was injured. The attorney-general, sworn to uphold the law, quietly prejudged the case by interpretation and has placed the private power interests in a favorable position.

The private power group took advantage of the attorney-general's decision at the first opportunity, and if the suit filed by the Clarion River Power company against the commission is upheld the federal power law will be upset.

The commission is attempting to wring $6,300,000 of water out of this concern that would demand interest charges on fake costs that have been written into their liabilities.

The commission's chief accountant has ruled that the $6,300,000 claim is unlawful, and the company asks for an injunction to stop this annoying interference whenever they capitalize water.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY FACING MANY PERILS

Washington.—Women seem to be more susceptible than men to benzol and lead poisoning and the offspring of women handling these substances are likely to be affected, according to the United States women's bureau. Occupational diseases were described as more insidious perils than industrial accidents.

"Behind an after-dinner cigar, a box of chocolate, a luminous wrist watch, the cosmetics in a lady's vanity case, the enameled gas range in the housewife's kitchen, lurk possible menaces to the health of the women who help to make these popular articles," said the bureau.

Child Bureau Foes Launch Old Scheme

Washington.—An attempt to dismantle the United States children's bureau, by turning infancy care and administration of maternity over to the United States public health service, was made at the conference on child health, called by the president.

The old scheme of hampering useful bureaus failed. Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the children's bureau, made a brave single-handed fight in the committee. It was carried to the floor of the conference, where Miss Abbott received such unexpected support that the divisionists postponed a decision.

Opponents included trade unionists, women's organizations and Secretary of Labor Davis. The latter reminded the conference of the staffs of specialists and scientists who have been assembled by the children's bureau.

The children's bureau, as now conducted, tells the country the effect of low wages received by breadwinners, and why this forces children into industry. The bureau's investigations are not welcomed by child labor exploiters, who resent having the nation continually reminded of the evils of child labor and the harm that follows low wages to adults.

If the work of the children's bureau can be divided with the public health service, there will be less of this information, as medical men are not economists.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What were Samuel Gompers' earliest recollections of unemployment?

A.—He says in his autobiography, "Seventy Years of Life and Labor:" "One of my most vivid early recollections (as a boy in London) is the great trouble that came to the silk weavers when machinery was invented to replace their skill and their jobs. No thought was given these men whose trade was gone. Misery and suspense filled the neighborhood with a depressing air of dread. The narrow street echoed with the tramp of men walking the streets with no work to do. Burned into my mind, was the indescribable effect of the cry of these men, 'God, I've no work to do. Lord strike me dead—my wife, my kids want bread and I've no work to do.' Child that I was, that cry taught me the world-wide feeling that has ever bound the oppressed together in a struggle against those that hold control over the lives and opportunities of those who work for wages."

Q.—What is the oldest of the printers' unions still in existence?

A.—This honor is claimed by Baltimore Typographical Union No. 12, organized in November, 1831, and still going strong. There were earlier printers' unions in New York, Philadelphia and other cities, but their existence was not continuous until the present.

What Next!

The "electric eye," or the photo-electric cell as it is technically known, a device which can be made to open doors and closets, and other mechanisms, has been employed by public health officials in underground tunnels to control ventilation and in water cribs to aid in the purification of water supplies, according to the New York state department of health.

The photo-electric cell will undoubtedly be employed in many other ways in public health work, the department stated. In large garages and repair shops the cell might be advantageously employed in cold weather to start a ventilating fan as soon as the exhaust gases become dense, it was pointed out, and in like manner, it might be used in industrial plants where dust and fumes constitute a health hazard.

Street Car System "Legalized Racket"

Milwaukee.—The city council instructed the city attorney to prepare a bill that would curb the Wisconsin railroad commission. The bill will be submitted to the legislature.

Alderman Gauer, who introduced the resolution, referred to present policies as a "dole" system and said it is "the greatest legalized racket of all time."

"Notwithstanding facilities for cheaper power, one-man street cars, labor-saving machinery and growth of the city, street car rates have increased so as to be a hardship upon thousands of people of moderate means," he said.

PROGRAM FOR 'SWEET CHARITY'

Lions Club to Sponsor Entertainment at Auditorium Wednesday Evening.

A high-class boxing card, with vaudeville on the side to make up an entertainment of something like three hours' duration is planned for the Memorial auditorium next Wednesday evening, it was announced Friday.

The "show" is sponsored by the Lions' club, and the entire proceeds will be turned over to the Independent Charities, of which Mrs. Elizabeth Brennan is chairman.

An indication of the "class" of the card is seen in announcement that the program will include a match between Johnny Flynn and Palmo, Kid Cotton vs. Johnny Hannon, and three additional bouts.

A number of high-class vaudeville acts, it is said, will be an added feature, and a real entertainment is promised, aside from the opportunity to aid the charities in dispensing Christmas cheer to the really needy of Chattanooga.

Rail Workers In Solid Stand For Less Hours

(By International Labor News Service.)

Chicago, Dec. 4.—Virtually all organized railroad labor is now lined up for shorter hours with no reduction of pay as a means of alleviating unemployment among railroad workers. Latest to indorse the movement is the executive council of the Railway Employes Department, American Federation of Labor, which has adopted a program seeking a five-day week with no decrease in wages. The Railway Employes Department represents the shopcraft unions with a membership of 400,000.

Indorsement of the five-day week program followed approval of a campaign for the six-hour day with no pay cuts, given here at a conference just adjourned attended by representatives of the "Big Four" Railroad Brotherhoods and the Switchmen's union.

In a statement issued by B. M. Jewell, president of the Railway Employes Department, two programs were indorsed. The second program urges that all classes of transportation be operated by one group of corporations regulated by the interstate commerce commisssion as railroads now are, and that all federal and state laws now applying to railroads should apply to busses and all other carriers.

"Increased output per man," Jewell said, "within the last seven years has greatly reduced the number of men employed. Our proposal is in keeping with this increased output and will tend to stabilize unemployment attributable to this increased efficiency."

"Resolved, That the 4,500 mill workers, members of the textile union of Danville, hereafter determine who its friends are and treat them accordingly; that the mill workers and all other trade unionists of this community protest against the action of the so-called civic bodies, and that we continue to protest until our rights as citizens of this commonwealth are recognized and our economic status determined."

Installment Buying Doesn't Harm Nation

Baltimore.—The average loss on bad debts in this country is but six-tenths of 1 per cent, according to Edwin B. George, of the federal department of commerce, at a meeting of retail credit men.

Instalment buying ranges between four and five billion dollars a year and $15,000,000,000 more of goods are sold on open credit, said Mr. George.

"Despite this annual retail bill of $20,000,000,000 that is based on credit," he said, "the grocer, the butcher and the candlestick maker usually get their money and the last painful instalment is usually paid."

The speaker said that the first survey of retail credit practices by the department of commerce show that electrical-appliance stores had the highest credit loss, 1.5 per cent. Radio sets and supply stores were second, with open-credit loss of 1.4 per cent. Department stores keep the tightest grip on their business, thereby escaping with a loss of 0.4 per cent.

The average loss from bad debts on instalment sales was 1.2 per cent. General clothing stores led with 8 per cent, while coal, wood, lumber and building material dealers brought up the rear with 0.2 per cent.

SYRUP COMPANY AND UNION IN CO-OPERATIVE AGREEMENT

First Pact in South Providing for Full Co-Operation Between Employers and Organized Employes Signed at Columbus, Ga., by W. H. Cargill Firm and United Brewery Workers.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Columbus, Ga., Dec. 4.—The first agreement in the south for union-management co-operation has been signed here between the W. H. Cargill company, manufacturers of syrups, and the International Union of the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal and Soft Drink Workers of America. The agreement is hailed as epoch-making in southern industry.

The W. H. Cargill company permitted union organizers to go into the plant during working hours and organize the men and even offered to advance initiation fees in case the worker did not have it. The local union has been installed and the firm is now making syrups, etc., bearing the union label on the cans.

The agreement between the Cargill firm and the union provides for a thorough-going plan of co-operation. Full and unqualified union recognition is given by the management, which agrees to recognize the trade unions as agents for the workers in matters affecting their welfare. The company, says the agreement, recognizes the unions "not only in regard to the welfare and protection of their members, but also desirable to the management, inasmuch as the co-operation of their members is essential to the continued and successful operation of its manufacturing plant."

Union to Co-operate.

The union agrees to promote in and sale of the products of the company and pledges its support to co-operate in other ways. Provisions are made for the settlement of differences and the company agrees to pay fair wages, maintain good working conditions and, as far as possible, give continuous employment.

False Economies Must Be Abandoned

London, England.—"The world must face the fact that economies taught in the past has been falsified," said James H. Thomas, of the labor party cabinet, in an address to American business men. Mr. Thomas is secretary of the National Railway Men's union.

"We are living in an abnormal world," he said. "Revolutions come and revolutions go. One regime or one dictator is superseded by another. Is it not an anomaly to say that there is suffering, not because of shortage, but because of over-production?

"I have been in the United States ten times," declared the speaker, "and I think I know what I am talking about when I say that never in your experience have you gone through the hell you will in the next four months."

DRASTIC CURES FOR IDLENESS URGED BY NEW YORK CLERGY

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York, Dec. 4.—Sermons on unemployment by New York clergymen are being marked by stinging indictments against the inability of men to secure work.

Unemployment was characterized as the "nemesis of any civilization," by Rev. George M. Stockdale, of St. James' Methodist church. The clergyman called for the conscription of wealth to relieve unemployment, although he declared that this relief is a "mere stop gap" and does not get to the root of the trouble.

"A more equitable distribution of wealth" was demanded by Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner at the Broadway Methodist church.

"Something is wrong with our system," said Dr. Reisner, "when honest workmen can be reduced to starvation by unemployment in a few weeks, while the few live in abundance because they happen either to have superior ability or to invest wisely, or accidentally choose the right kind. The day will come when America must, in the light of such a Father God as we believe sits on the throne, face the fact of the unequal distribution of wealth.

"It is an undying shame and disgrace to a land of untold wealth that periodically thousands of her citizens should be compelled to go begging for the mere necessities of life while others bask in the sunshine of plenty," said Dr. Reisner.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine has aided in solving the unemployment problem "in the only way in which it can be solved," by giving out contracts totaling more cathedral, Dean Milo H. Gates declared in his sermon.

"What the unemployed want is not charity but work," he said. "The splendid declarations of the labor unions prove this."

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union-made goods and service.

JOBLESS AT PEAK.

New York.—Police department figures for heads of families out of work in this city reached 41,555. This is a record number since the police canvass began more than a month ago.

The municipal lodging house sheltered 341.115 homeless men, women and children since the first of the year. This is 8,078 more than the highest total in 1914, when 333,037 were cared for.

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

Money, the mystic word, the substance that is necessary for conventions, is proving quite elusive to local committees. Every time our hunters gather and prime their guns for the hunt, someone shoots in the wrong direction and the game gets away, leaving the poor hunters in debt for their ammunition. If hunting continues to prove so expensive, it is better to let the wild beast, money, continue its uninterrupted way rather than for us to lose our time, friends and ammunition in the hunt.

MOTHER JONES

She has been nominated to be among "the twelve greatest women in the United States," and sponsored as among the "six greatest women the world has known." She will be remembered mainly as an organizer and inspiration of the unsung heroes of labor, men and women, who built the American labor movement.

Born in Cork.

Mary Harris Jones was her full name. She was born in the city of Cork, Ireland, in 1830. Many of her kin died in the Irish revolt of the early nineteenth century. She came to this country as a girl of 5 years of age. Her father, a railroad worker, settled in Toronto, where she attended the public schools and the normal school. She taught in a convent for a while, learned dressmaking, married. The first great tragedy in her life took place in Memphis, Tenn. A yellow fever epidemic took each one of her four children, and then her husband, who was buried by the Iron Molders' union, to which he belonged. She then became a nurse while the epidemic waned, after having taken full toll of the workers.

She was next heard of in Chicago, where she conducted a dressmaking establishment. The work was mainly for the aristocrats and beef millionaires. She saw the contrast between their luxury and the starving hordes of unemployed. Then came the Chicago fire, which burned up her establishment. She took refuge in old St. Mary's church on Wabash avenue, with many others who had lost everything. Nearby in an old, tumbled down, flame scorched building the Knights of Labor, just organized, held meetings. She listened to their passionate eloquence and found the first outlet for her crusading spirit.

Joined Knights of Labor.

"Those were the days of martyrs and saints," she frequently recalled to the modern generation. She became a member of the Knights of Labor and thereby a champion of the oppressed and a scourge and a goad to the oppressors such as no other woman has ever been.

Her first great strike was the B. & O. strike in 1873 and her first great spectacle the burning of 100 locomotives in the roundhouse at Pittsburgh. Those stirring events of the 70s saw the birth pangs of the American labor movement. She witnessed the Haymarket tragedy in 1886, when an inflamed public took harsh toll of the eight-hour movement leaders in Chicago who were prompted by anarchist bravado.

In 1891 when she was 61 is the first record of a mine strike in which she participated. It was her first adventure with coal company gunmen. She saved the miners' organizer who was with her and got off free, by use of the Irish wit for which she became noted. They were accused of taking a revolver into a church used by negro miners.

Manager Expresses Surprise.

The coal company's manager expressed surprise.

"What are you astonished about?" asked "Mother" Jones.

"That you should go into the house of God with anyone who carried a gun."

"Oh, that isn't God's house. That is the coal company's house. You know God Almighty never comes around a place like this!"

She helped found the Appeal to Reason, famous socialist weekly, and she toured the country as a free lance speaker and organizer. The 90s saw her in the Pennsylvania coal fields as a regular organizer for the Miners' union. Then her pity was aroused for the children at work in the breakers and in the mills.

Organized Miners' Wives.

She organized the miners' wives and frequently these Amazons with pails, brooms and mops chased the non-unionists from the mines.

"Pray for the dead, but fight like hell for the living," was one of her pithy sayings, and she lived up to it.

With a boy driving her in a buggy, drawn by a patient nag, she crossed the mountains carrying the message of labor. Her work and that of hundreds of other volunteer organizers made the situation ripe, when the brilliant leadership of John Mitchell and the terrible exploitation led the anthracite miners to their successful revolt and federal intervention.

"'Mother' Jones is in the mountains raising hell," was the usual report given of her deeds. Her tactics were effective. But while she was a doughty leader of men and women, almost forgotten is her exploit in shocking the conscience of the staid citizens of Philadelphia to the horrors of child labor in the textile mills. She brought a procession of mill slaves, stunted, warped, crippled boys and girls to the city hall.

"Philadelphia mansions are built on the broken bones, the quivering hearts and drooping heads of these children," she said.

Child Labor Law Passed.

Soon after the state passed a law forbidding children under 14 in the mills. The union freed the boys from the breakers.

The stormy life of "Mother" Jones was much too full to recount in detail. She went through the Moyer, Haywood, Pettibone case. In 1906 she was in Paint Creek and Cabin Creek braving the guns, when twenty-six miners were killed in one skirmish near her. She was on hand during the murderous attack on the tent colony in Ludlow, Colo., in 1914. How she pilloried Rockfeller for his role in that tragedy enacted by the Colorado Fuel and Iron company!

Lived as Few Have.

"Mother" Jones lived as few humans have dared to, giving of her great heart and courage for the disinherited, accepting in return hardships, danger and the small pay of a union organizer. She was in scores of jails, confined in the "bull pen" many times, tried often on charges of accessory to murder and similar crimes. Neither courts, nor gunmen, nor prisons, nor militia could stop her. Her name will stand at the head among the great in Labor's Hall of Fame.

Home Safety Factor Has Small Average

Washington.—"We think of home as the safest place in the world, but it's the most hazardous, Luis I. Dublin, insurance statistician, told a section of the president's child protection conference.

"There are stepladders that collapse, shaky chairs used for reaching, improvised and crude implements, gas and fire," he said.

He forecast that by the end of 1930 America will have counted 100,000 deaths by accident for the year—each one contributing to the dependency and handicap of a child.

Of this number, he said, 23,000 deaths, mostly women, would be due to perils of the home, a like number in industry, and 54,000 in public places. The majority of the latter was placed on the auto.

"Cars should not be sold on the score of speed," Dublin said. "That is an anti-social act and should be subject to penalty."

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

know we mean business. A great many think that so long as they are getting along all fine and good that there is nothing in the world matters, but don't fool yourselves, brothers. It is your duty as a loyal member to at all times support and assist any organization and by so doing we not only show a real true union spirit, but we are helping our own organization as well.

"So read your journal, your Labor World and any other educational medium that pertains to the labor movement. Nothing in the world would stop the barbers' progress if we ourselves would get familiar with any and all things that pertain to our business.

"Our cause is a real clean-cut issue and we cannot expect other organizations to come to our assistance unless we show a likewise disposition. So after all reciprocity is the only real method of securing co-operation from other organizations. Do unto others as you would have others do unto you. Patronize the label of others, and by so doing you are bound to have the patronage of theirs.

"We as workers have much to be thankful for. Our organization has brought better days to ourselves and to our loved ones. We must look back on the dark past, when the conditions in our craft were most deplorable; when men following the trade worked on an average of one hundred hours per week for a small pittance—terrible conditions that brought about much sickness.

"Through organization we have reduced the long hours, increased the return and eliminated much sickness among our members, until today we find the barber a part of fraternal, political, civic and social life in his community. The pathways of history are strewn with those pioneers who made the sacrifice, that we might benefit and prosper.

"God's gracious gift to man is life. Though we endure hardships and suffering as we search for a better day, it is these sacrifices that have brought us our present economic condition that we should be thankful for.

"Working men and women know the value of organization and are thankful for the sunshine and happiness that we enjoy.

"The Journeymen Barbers' union today is an institution that we can be thankful for. It is an essential part of American life and a synonym of modern civilization."

Plan to Construct More Postoffices

Washington.—Legislation to provide a 20-year program for the construction of postoffices, with an immediate authorization of $10,000,000 for the first year to aid unemployment, will be proposed by Representative Kelly at this session of congress.

The Pennsylvania lawmaker declared that the federal government should abandon the practice of leasing postoffice quarters. The building program, he said, could be financed out of the $17,500,000 for annual rentals.

CENTRAL BODY HOLDS ANOTHER BUSY MEETING

Delegates Dispose of Many Important Matters.

HOME STORES AGAIN ON "UNFAIR LIST"

Clothing Co. "Row" Settled. A. F. of L. Representative Addresses Body.

BUILDING TRADES CALLED TO MEET WEDNESDAY, 17TH

Representattives of all building trades crafts in the city are asked to attend a meeting on Wednesday night, Dec. 17, at 11½ East Seventh street, 6:30 p.m., for the purpose of perfecting a 100 per cent organization of these crafts.

E. E. McDaniels, former president of the building trades, Monday night asked for co-operation of all trades in the movement, and outlined a proposed program for action which will present a solid front to employers of these crafts in matters which concern them directly.

Mr. McDaniels stated any craftsman is welcome to attend the meeting on the 17th, and urged that all be represented.

Central Body Monday night held another unusually busy and interesting meeting. Of particular interest, and importance, was the report of the executive board, which indicated that these gentlemen had had their hands exceedingly full during the two previous weeks.

Of the items contained in the report which permit of publication, final action on complaint against the "Home Stores," operating a number of grocery stores throughout the city and county, occasioned considerable oratory," with the final result that these stores were formally declared unfair to organized labor."

The executive board reported efforts to adjust the complaint had been unavailing, management of the stores giving the impression that they were not greatly interested in the friendship of organized labor, and evincing slight if any consolation in the position of the Central Body's representatives that co-operation and friendly relations are desirable at all times.

It was recalled that this was not the first time a break had occurred with the company which operates this chain of stores, former disagreement having been adjusted and friendly relations restored, only to be again broken by action of the management in employing non-union craftsmen.

Report was also made that disagreement with the Star Clothing Company, 242 East Main street, which had been declared "unfair" at a previous session of the body, had been settled to the satisfaction of all parties concerned, and the clothing company was again placed on the list of firms considered fair to working people of the community.

A. L. Topping, representing the American Federation of Labor, was guest of the body, and delivered a brief address. Mr. Topping congratulated the delegates on their handling of various matters disposed of, and discussed general conditions in various localities where his work has called him recently.

A resolution pledging co-operation of advertisers in The Labor World, and patronage of trades unionists and their families wherever consistent and possible, was adopted unanimously following a general discussion. The motion for adoption included the suggestion that every delegate present urge upon the members of his local to carry out its provisions. A courtesy to patrons of this paper, the resolution refers particularly to the spending of Christmas money, and is as follows:

Whereas, members of organized labor in Chattanooga will spend, during the next few weeks, thousands of dollars for Christmas gifts for their families and friends; and,

Whereas, the most substantial merchants and business houses are soliciting Christmas trade through the columns of our paper, The Labor World; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we should, in all fairness, give every consideration to our paper's advertisers; and,

That we urge upon each and every member of our affiliated organizations to spend their Christmas money, where consistent and possible, with those who patronize our paper.

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or card on service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

UNIQUE INVITATION ISSUED TO WEDDING ANNIVERSARY BY MR. AND MRS. GEO. FORBES

You are invited to view the remains of the wreck of a weak man and a poor unfortunate girl caused by Twenty Five Years of married life at the home of
Mr. and Mrs. George Forbes
Sunday, December 14 at 5 P. M.
207 Liberty Street
North Chattanooga, Tennessee

Above unique invitation has been received by members of Circle club, with the penned notation, "This will be the regular Christmas session of Circle club." At the last meeting the clubmembers voted to accept the invitation of Mr. Forbes and hold forth at the wedding anniversary of a charter member and one of its first presidents.

Mr. and Mrs. Forbes were married in Chattanooga by the Rev. McClain, who was pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, at the home of the bride's parents on East Eighth street. Mrs. Forbes was Miss Dora Childers. They have resided in Chattanooga continuously since. Misses Ruth, 19; Olga Frank, 16, and Mary Jane, 10, have enlivened the Forbes home for the respective number of years given.

Indications are that practically every member of Circle club will be present Sunday evening to wish the popular couple "many happy returns."

An interesting sidelight on the coming occasion was purloined by The Labor World, in the form of an acceptance to the characteristic invitation printed above. Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Cuthbert, who have enjoyed a comparatively short term of married bliss, indited the following poetic reply:

Thanks!
With delight (and trepidation)
We accept your invitation,
For we dread
To see upon your faces
Those sad and mournful traces
Of five and twenty years of woe,
To look ahead
And think that we, perhaps,
Shall grow
Sad like you.
But then—
We have this consolation:
Surely, when dealing out our share
Nature made a better pair.
So, may we send Congratulation?

—Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Cuthbert.

Danville Textile Barons Begin Wholesale Evictions of Workers From Company-Owned Houses

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Dec. 9.—Wholesale evictions of striking union mill workers from the company owned houses of the Dan River and Riverside Cotton mills here has started. This is one of the last cards to be played by the mill autocrats, inspired and carried on by one Malcolm K. Harris, attorney for the mill corporation, and well known locally as a union hater.

Thus far approximately 100 families have received notice to vacate the property they occupy no later than Dec. 24—Christmas Eve—the time of peace on earth and good will to men.

It is recalled that Harry R. Fitzgerald, president of the mill corporation, made the statement a few weeks ago, published in local newspapers and carried by the press associations, that he did not intend to evict any of his workers from their homes during the winter months, but if "the strike lasted until spring he would have to have his houses then."

Malcolm K. Harris, the mill attorney, who it is said has aspirations to become president of the corporation to succeed Mr. Fitzgerald, threw a monkey wrench into the Fitzgerald plans and issued an order that the evictions be carried out without delay—and it is being done. It is generally reported that the Harris edict is one of the final thrusts to break the strike and incidentally play in favor with the stockholders.

The news of the eviction plans, however, was no surprise to the mill workers. They had been warned weeks ago of the impending action. The union is making preparation to care for all evicted workers by some means or other.

Since the presence of the military in Danville as strike deputies, the mill management under the generalship of Malcolm K. Harris has showed its fangs on more than one occasion. The winning of the point by the union to restore the strike pickets was a bitter pill for the management to swallow, especially Mr. Harris, and since that time there has been feverish haste among the powers that be to head off any further advantages the workers might gain.

From an assemblage of about 1,000 soldiers the quota has been cut until now about 400 bayonets are on the job around Dan River mill gates. The pickets, however, hold their vantage points as they did previously to the coming of the troops.

A Danville newspaper came out with a story to the effect that it, through the use of "paid informers" sent into the mills, had found that the count of strikebreakers in both mills totaled 1,664. The number does not conform to the count made by strike pickets. The rules of the mill absolutely prevent workers from one department "visiting" with workers of another department, or even holding converse with workers in the same sections, under penalty of discharge. So the newspaper yarn is generally discounted as propaganda inspired by the mill management. When it is known that Attorney Harris is directing the strike for the mill management a number of things are as plain as a pikestaff.

The strike situation on the surface is as quiet as a mill-pond, and nothing has occurred to give the soldiers even the slightest thrill. Gov. Pollard has been roundly criticized for sending in troops to Danville, although the soldiers have had nothing to do. There are at the present time five separate peace enforcement units stumbling over one another's feet in Schoolfield, the mill village. Schoolfield is out of the corporate limits of Danville, in Pittsylvania county. To police this area there are the soldiers, special county police, special deputy sheriffs, state highway patrolmen and the city police of Danville, who have jurisdiction into Schoolfield. None of them have made an arrest and no disturbances have occurred to keep the "law" awake.

The strike management committee in an open letter to the citizens of the county and local peace authorities offered to take over the policing of the Schoolfield strike area by using the strike pickets, at no cost whatever to the county authorities—not even for the board of the pickets—The cost of maintenance of the soldiers and the various other peace contingents is costing Pittsylvania county several thousand dollars a day and the taxpayers are wondering what the end will be.

No strike in the history of industry has been as unusual as the Danville textile strike. Defections from union ranks to strikebreakers have been virtually negligible. The union membership stands like a rock, even with all the persecutions directed against it. The eviction scheme is largely directed against the officers of the union and all those known to be taking an active part in the strike, with the intention of driving them not only out of the mills but away from Danville, thus leaving the rest of the membership to the tender (?) mercies of the mill management, after forcing them back again into the plants.

As it is, the morale of the strikers was never better. Food and other supplies are coming in and the workers are existing at least as well as they did while working. They may have to live in tents and shacks and be without the simple joys of Christmastide, with their children wondering what it all means, but they intend to stick, win, lose or draw.

Miss Korb Again Selected to Head Beauty Workers

Miss Roselyn Korb, first president of Local 415-A, Beauticians, Chattanooga's youngest trade union, was again named head of that organization at an election held at the regular meeting Monday night. Miss Korb is at Jolly's.

Other officers of the local are: Miss Johnnie Bell Borin, Read House, vice-president; Mrs. R. L. Morgan, Taylor's, secretary; Miss Patricia Suddeth, Jolly's, recorder; Miss Thelma Hill, Taylor's, guide; Mrs. W. V. Bluhm, Loveman's, and Mrs. Myrtle Love, Jolly's, finance committee. The by-laws committee is composed of Miss Korb, Miss Borin, Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. D. C. Darwin, Reaves Shoppe.

WARN AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF LABOR RULES

Department Quotes Law on Working Hours.

CHRISTMAS SEASON BRINGS GOOD ADVICE

Statutes Regulating Employment Women, Children Are Impressed.

Local merchants and others who find it necessary during the holiday rush to work employes longer hours are warned by the state department of labor that the Tennessee statutes having to do with employment of females and minors must be obeyed.

It is pointed out that no female shall be required to work more than ten and one-half hours in one day, nor more than fifty-seven hours in a week, and section 3 of the statute is quoted in full that no misunderstanding be possible.

Section 6 of the act relating to employment of minors is quoted to describe the penalties imposed for violation.

The labor department's statement follows:

Owing to the rush season in the various stores and manufacturing plants the department of labor wishes to call the attention of the merchants and manufacturers arranging to keep their establishments open to the female labor laws of Tennessee which prohibits any employer from working a female over ten and one-half hours in any one day or fifty-seven hours in any one week.

If merchants find it necessary to keep their store open longer than usual, the department of labor suggests that they arrange the hours of their employes in shifts, so that no one female employe will be required to work more than ten and one-half hours. If employes are required to work ten and one-half hours each day it will be necessary to have a short day to prevent exceeding fifty-seven hours in any one week.

"Section 3. Be it further enacted, That any proprietor, foreman, owner or other person who shall require, permit or suffer to work, in, about, or in connection with any industry or establishment named in the foregoing section, any female or child under the age of 16 years, more than the number of hours prescribed in sections 1 and 2 of this act, or any person mentioned in sections 1 and 2 violating any of the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be fined not less than twenty-five ($25.00) dollars nor more than one hundred ($100) dollars for each offense."

Attention is also called to the child labor laws which prohibits the working of any one under 14 years of age in any kind of establishment.

Minors between the ages of 14 and 16 must furnish their employer an employment certificate, and cannot work over eight hours a day and not later than 7 p.m. or over forty-eight hours per week.

"Section 6. Be it further enacted, That whoever employs any child, and whoever having under his control as parent, guardian or otherwise, any child, permits or suffers such child to be employed or to work in violation of any of the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than two hundred and fifty dollars, in the discretion of the court."

Rail Machinists In Lively Session Name New Officers

At an unusually interesting session Thursday night at Central Labor hall, Lodge 1450, Machinists (railroad branch), transacted routine business and elected officers for 1931. The list, as given The Labor World, contains a well-balanced mixture of "old-timers" and "youngsters." C. W. Pfeiffer was re-elected president, with Sam Higdon as vice-president; Bert Smith, recorder; J. C. "Jimmie" Rogers, financial secretary; Floyd Parks, treasurer; C. R. "Nifty" Posey, conductor, and Johnny Titmarsh, trustee.

Among the items of interest reported from the meeting were: Reece Davis, Clyde McDonald and O. C. Hancock delivered their annual speeches on "good of the order;" W. H. Rhea made a detailed report from Central Body, with recommendations; a cash donation was made to the Danville strikers.

Committee was appointed to prepare resolutions on the death of William Cureton, member of the lodge, who died last Thursday, and on the passing of A. G. Linn, secretary of the Typos and father of Ward Linn, member of Lodge 1450.

McGRADY DECLARES ORGANIZED LABOR MUST END DEPRSSION AND DISTRESS IN SOUTHLAND

Chairman Southern Organizing Committee Holds "Cesspool" Conditions Call Urgently for Broadening Scope of Activities—Importance of Section as Manufacturing Center Stressed in Vivid Manner by Trades Union Official.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 11.—Declaring that the southern organizing campaign must be enlarged and intensified, Edward F. McGrady, chairman, has made a careful survey of the whole situation and has presented his conclusions officially. McGrady presents a new picture of conditions among the wage-earners of the south in a series of sensational statements based on actual observation. Thousands have no underwear and other thousands go through the winter without socks, he declares, illustrating the exploited and workless condition of multitudes. Oppression he calls "prevalent everywhere" and he cites specific cases in a dramatic presentation of the situation. McGrady's report is here offered in full.

By EDWARD F. McGRADY
Chairman, American Federation of Labor Southern Organizing Committee.

The question has been asked recently—Should our southern organizing campaign be continued on as broad a scale as we have been operating during the past year?

After serving several months as chairman, directing this work, I say most emphatically "Yes." We must continue at our present rate, and we should increase our activities along all industrial lines in every state.

Here is a great potential industrial empire that, in my opinion, will surpass the north in many indutrial lines. Let me give you both sides of the picture—the progress of the industries and the deplorable condition under which men and women who labor in these industries are compelled to work and live.

South Great Industrial Factor.

The latest government figures (1930 census are not ready) shows that the wealth of the south is estimated at more than $77,000,000,000. The yearly value of the south's manufactures are now worth over $10,-500,000,000.

More than one-half of the world's cotton supplies are produced in the south. Fifty-eight per cent of the country's active cotton spindles are in the south. More than 68 per cent of the domestic cotton goods are produced in the south. The southern mills consume 75 per cent of the raw raw cotton raised.

The south produces 60 per cent of the country's petroleum, 45 per cent of its coal. Forty-five per cent of the country's lumber is produced in the south. Thirty-eight per cent of the mineral output comes from the southern states.

Huge Cotton Investment.

The value of cotton industries in the south represents an investment of approximately $1,000,000,000. There are now operating 1,851 individual textile plants. One thousand and thirty-eight of these mills are devoted to the manufacture of cotton goods, 431 are knitting mills, 73 are woolen and worsted, 81 are silk mills and the others are dyeing, finishing, lace, flax and linen.

Construction contracts in the southern states in 1929 totaled $780,-000,000 (this does not include any buildings valued at less than $10,-000). Construction contracts awarded during the first ten months of 1930 are valued at $814,000,000. This is but a partial picture of the ever increasing, tremendous industrial strides in the south.

You have looked at the industrial side of the picture, now let us see the other side.

Making Tragic Mistake.

The tragic mistake that is being made in the south is that they imagine "prosperity" can be built on a foundation of "cheap labor." Today the southern people are unable to support their industries through their own purchases of the goods they manufacture. The "prosperity" of the south is due entirely to the fact that it exports to other states what it creates.

Untold numbers of working men and women are so poor they cannot afford to own even one suit of underwear. If they got decent wages and could afford two suits of underwear what a great spurt these mills would get. Tens of thousands of southern workers wear no stockings at all for many months in the year; their wages will not allow them to buy. If they received better wages, and all the workers could buy two pairs of stockings the hosiery mills would become still more prosperous.

Among the 1,500,000 men and women working in factories, the greater portion of them can only afford to buy one suit of clothes a year, thousands of them only one suit in three years. If they had decent wages, and all could buy one suit each year, how much more prosperous would the mills become.

Dire Poverty Prevalent.

Thirty-five per cent of the agricultural products of the nation are produced in the south, yet, here, hundreds of thousands of working men and women and children are suffering from malnutrition, pellagra and poverty degradation. They cannot buy sufficiently of the farm products they raise to keep them in decent health because of the miserable wages they receive.

Oppression of the workers is prevalent everywhere.

In the state of Virginia 4,000 men and women were compelled to suspend work due to their plea for the right to join the American trade union movement. The governor of that state answered their plea by sending in the soldiery with 800 bayonets, guns and bombs. The only question involved was the right of American men and women to join a union.

Marshall Field owns three big mills in North Carolina. When the workers in the Marshall Field Draper plant indicated they wanted to join the union they were discharged. The only reason given was "We cannot use you any more." A brutal deputy sheriff, known as "Pistol Pete," has been acting as a recruiting agent to bring in workers from the hills to take the places of those who have been kicked out upon the highway because of their expressed desire to join an American trade union.

Elaborate Spy System.

The Enka Corporation of Asheville, N. C., one of the largest rayon plants in the country, forbade its workers to join the American Federation of Labor. The managers have established an elaborate system of espionage. They search the lockers and clothing of their employes while they are at work. Men and women have been discharged because some member of their family belonged to a union, other than textile. They are spied upon in their homes. The corporation has not less than 50 undercover men and stool pigeons working in the mills as operators, who receive $60 per month as mill workers and $50 extra by the superintendent of police. The Enka village is not incorporated. Gov. Gardner, of North Carolina, has given commissions as special corporation guards to the mill gunmen.

In the city of Spartanburg, S. C., a few weeks ago a contract for $900,-000 for a new sewerage system was granted. Because of the terrific unemployment, it was decided to make this an "all white man's job," no negroes need apply. Their work day was ten hours. The contractor recruited most of their help from the unemployed hands of the mills, but they found the textile workers, who for years have been undernourished and overworked, in such anaemic conditions that they could not work ten hours a day, so they put them on two five-hour shifts, and the salary paid was 15 cents per hour. Can you imagine the father of a family trying to feed his wife and children on 75 cents per day?

Women Miserably Paid.

In Columbus, Ga., numbers of women came into the union office with three, four and five children clinging to their skirts. These mothers worked in the mills; they were on a three-day schedule, and for three days labor they received $5.40. Can you imagine a distracted mother trying to feed four or five people on $5.40 per week?

These are a few instances of labor degradation, oppression and poverty. They could be multiplied thousands of times.

If the south is to become an industrial empire, organized labor must see that it does not remain a "cesspool" of despair.

William Cureton Answers Last Call

William F. Cureton, veteran member of Lodge 1450, Railroad Machinists, passed away Thursday night, following a short illness, and was laid to rest Sunday afternoon at Hooker, Ga.

Mr. Cureton had been an employe of the Southern shops for years, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of all his fellow-employes.

GIVE POSITION OF WORKERS ON STATE TANGLE

Official Approval Given Activities of Reid.

COMMITTEE ISSUES PLAIN STATEMENT

Urges Trades Unionists to Join Any Movement for Investigation.

Activities of H. V. Reid, chairman, in the recent political campaigns in the state, were given the stamp of approval, and Mr. Reid was re-elected by the nonpartisan political committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods at a recent meeting of that body in Nashville, and in connection with the committee's action a statement has been prepared giving the position of the workers' representatives on the foregoing and on the present state financial-political tangle.

Recent developments, the statement declares, justify the opposition to Horton in the recent campaigns, and the opinion is expressed that "so long as he remains governor of Tennessee the best interests of the people will not be served."

Organized labor, it is contended, stands for honesty and efficiency in government, and joins the demand for an honest investigation to determine who is responsible for alleged manipulation of the people's money, and "if such investigation shows anyone guilty of criminal acts they demand that those indicted be brought before the bar of justice."

The committee urges members of organized labor to join with any group of citizens in a movement to examine into the state's affairs and correct alleged abuses. It follows, in part:

There appeared in newspapers on Nov. 5 a news story to the effect that H. V. Reid, chairman of this committee, was defeated for office in his lodge of the firemen because of his opposition to Gov. Horton. This story also stated that Gov. Horton was a friend of labor.

This news story was an injustice to Mr. Reid and a gross misrepresentation of the attitude of organized labor as to Gov. Horton. Chairman Reid, in opposing Gov. Horton, was acting according to the instructions of the committee. The nonpartisan policy of organized labor is to defeat its enemies and elect its friends. Gov. Horton had proven his enmity to labor by his illegal use of the state militia on two occasions at Elizabethton to coerce the workers in the foreign-owned rayon plants located in that city who had struck against the low wages and long hours at these plants. The Tennessee Federation of Labor in convention assembled, twice had condemned Gov. Horton for this action, and called upon the organized labor movement of this state to go to the polls and vote against him.

Because of his unfavorable record on labor legislation while speaker of the state senate in 1927, organized labor opposed him in 1928 and indorsed Hon. Hill McAlister for governor.

Recent developments relative to the handling of the state finances by the state funding board, of which Gov. Horton is chairman, justifies our opposition to him. It is our opinion that so long as he remains governor of Tennessee the best interests of the people will not be served.

The members of organized labor are citizens of Tennessee. They stand for law and order. They want the government of our state honestly and efficiently administered. They want an honest investigation by the coming legislature to determine who is responsible for the alleged manipulation of the moneys of the taxpayers of Tennessee. They want to know what influence caused the funds of the state to be placed in certain alleged favored banks for the alleged financial profit of certain individuals. If such investigation shows any one guilty of criminal acts, they demand that those indicted be brought before the bar of justice.

We urge the members of organized labor to join with any group of citizens in a movement to examine the state's affairs and correct the abuse of government that is alleged to exist.

The statement is signed by representatives of the federation, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The trade union movement, like all great armies, has camp followers. They are the ones who fail to demand union-made goods and service.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

John Garland Pollard seems to have just missed demonstrating what a real governor does in an emergency. But John Garland Pollard missed his chance and that's that.

Out of most crises come blunders on one side and vision and wisdom on the other. John Garland Pollard, as governor of Virginia, did the blundering when he sent state troops into Danville, Va. So, instead of recording himself as a great governor he became just another governor. And there is no very great distinction in that.

It is pretty clear that there are unpublished chapters behind the sending of troops into Danville and it may be a long time before they come to light, but in time they will come. And then we shall know more than we know now.

There seems to have been no single life lost and there seems to have been no property damaged, beyond some broken windows. The only person injured was a union member—a woman.

It seems that a local force that admits incapacity in the face of such a situation does more than confess weakness and stupidity. It seems to confess something much more important. Just what that was, in this instance, we do not yet know. But eventually all truth comes out.

So we wait.

But meanwhile what a situation! What a governor and what a sheriff. It does look as if a mill, standing inert, can exercise power and have its very important "say" about things. But that is only speculation and conjecture. Later we shall know many things, undoubtedly.

Meanwhile the strikers have shown wisdom and coolness. The state militia, fired with zeal and courage, tore down the picket shelter tents and disbanded the picket line. Thus, without martial law there was, nevertheless, martial law. Even the court injunction granted the right to picket.

The troops are not bad fellows. On the contrary. But in Danville they are not living under normal conditions. So they tore down crude shelter tents, the property of strikers. That ought to put a feather in the governor's cap, not entirely undone by the later decision restoring the right of limited picketing.

John Garland Pollard ought to feel very proud of what he has done thus far.

Boss Fitzgerald, mill president, surveying things, ought to feel satisfied. Perhaps he observed Thanksgiving with greater unction, with a nicer attention to the special graces and customs of the day.

Virginia has fine traditions. No other state contributed more to the creation of the American concept of liberty.

In no other state did pioneer voices ring with more sincerity or with truer understanding of the meaning of freedom than in Virginia.

We have not understood that Virginians in the founding days stood merely for the freedom of a class or a group. Perhaps, though, that is the way Gov. John Garland Pollard understands it.

The striking mill workers of Danville, however, are [illegible] with Patrick Henry and with Thomas Jefferson. They have earned the right to stand with the immortals of freedom's cause.

USUAL DESPERATE GAME.

Nearly 1,000 soldiers are in Danville, where 4,500 textile workers are striking for the right to organize and against wage cuts and speed-up systems.

The governor of Virginia was snubbed when he asked the mill management to arbitrate differences. "We have nothing to arbitrate," replied the industrial oligarchs.

The strike has been on for two months, with the workers as determined as ever. The usual has happened. A "riot" was staged by unknown parties. The unionists insist that the "rioters" were communists and strikebreakers. The sheriff called for troops and the governor rushed several hundred soldiers to the aid of mill managers who "have nothing to arbitrate."

The purpose of the militia was quickly evident. Their first move was to drive pickets from the streets and smash tents and wind shelters used by the pickets. The governor, later, modified the picket order, following angry protests by the workers.

There is one soldier in Danville for every four strikers. The soldiers are equipped with rifles, bayonets, gas bombs and machine guns. Opposing them are hungry strikers who plead that the dispute may be arbitrated, and who point to their nine weeks of law observance under the most trying circumstances. The soldiers are enforcing a "law and order" standard that is favored by those who placed them in Danville—industrial oligarchs and their political agents. This "law and order" means that the rights of strikers shall be ignored and that they must be driven back to wage cuts, speed-ups and the mill-controlled "union."

Mill managers, who "have nothing to arbitrate," only know this brand of "law and order." It is their ideal of government.

The militia invasion in Danville will be an additional cost to taxpayers, but industrial oligarchs and their political agents will consider this a good investment if their ideal of "law and order" prevails—if the Textile Workers' union is smashed and if wage cuts and speed-ups are enforced. This brand of "law and order" is the price a negligent society must pay.

Organized labor will eventually create a social consciousness that will not permit the state militia to be used as pawns by employers who refuse to arbitrate attempts to lower living standards and who deny workers the right to organize.

There will come a time when employers must publicly defend such unsocial acts. They will fail to conceal their purpose by fomenting riot and then have troops drive pickets off the streets to maintain their system of "law and order."

A. F. OF L. SPEAKS FOR WORKERS.

The A. F. of L. is spokesman for the nation's wage-earners. No other organization has even questioned its supremacy. It has supplied the leadership, the driving force, the militancy, in every advance workers have made the last fifty years.

We have a better nation because the A. F. of L. has lived. In great crises this is acknowledged by our opponent and critics. They then concede that the A. F. of L. is spokesman for American wage-earners. But in normal times we must not enlarge our intelligence and capacity by urging appointment of an A. F. of L. member to a high office that was created through the energy of the A. F. of L., and for the purpose of benefiting the workers of our land.

The A. F. of L. is not favored by [illegible] who grandiloquently talk of [illegible] for all persons to secure government positions, and who would create the impression that the A. F. of L. is merely interested in securing a job for some trade unionist.

[illegible] indictment charges President Green with attempting to "force" an A. F. of L. member as secretary of labor.

If by "force" is meant reasons why and A. F. of L. member should hold this position, President Green will have to plead guilty.

This "force"—this reasoning—is ignored by persons who infer that President Green has made threats, but who accept without question the secret and honey-worded commands of privilege.

Building Wrecked By Escaping Gas

Los Angeles, Cal.—Anti-unionists are forced to abandon their claim that "labor troubles" is responsible for the explosion of the Garment Capitol building, in which sixty persons were injured.

Chief Ralph Scott, of the fire department, reports that a leaking gas pipe is responsible, and other fire authorities take the same position. Organized cloakmakers are on strike against firms that were housed in the building, and hostile newspapers guardedly connected the strike with [illegible]tion, however, that more than 200 the explosion. They failed to men- union cloakmakers were employed in the building and that fourteen of these workers were seriously injured.

A committee appointed by the central body compiled these facts and made them a public document.

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

JESUS AND MONEY.
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part IV.

WHO IS THIS JESUS?

In answering the question "Who is this Jesus?" preparatory to our study of Jesus' teaching concerning money we will now take a look at both Nazareth, where Jesus grew to manhood, and Galilee, the province of which He was a legal resident.

WM. L. MOSS

The pleasant little modern town of En-Nasira is identified as built on the site of ancient Nazareth. Nazareth was located in a high valley at the foot and on the side of a hill (Luke 4:29) amid beautiful and fruitful surroundings. It early incurred the displeasure of the unspiritual legalists of southern Palestine. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" was the common expression of contempt with which the arrogant, supercilious Jews in and around Jerusalem referred to this prosperous Galilean city. The Nazarenes were an industrious people, their minds unfettered by the legalism that afflicted the Pharisees and the priestly element at Jerusalem. They were loyal Jews—many of them wrote their loyalty into the history of Israel with flaming letters of blood! But the odium attached to their little town by their southern brethren was never lived down, its offensiveness springing from the fact that those who claimed for it a bad reputation had never been able to enslave it with their Pharisaical pedantry, hence because of their inability to enslave it with blighting casuistry would never forgive—or forget!

Near to Syro-Phoenicia and wild Arabia, and separated from Judea proper by the territory of the detested Samaritans, "Galilee of the Gentiles" was known as a prosperous province. The fertility of ancient Galilee was remarkable for its richness; of its mountains it has been said that nowhere in the world are any more beautiful or more inspiring. The Galileans were energetic, brave and industrious, the entire province when under cultivation presenting an immense green and smiling district. Antipas (or Antipater), the Roman tetrarch, an idle and worthless prince, assumed control of Galilee about the time Jesus was born, and our Lord was legally his subject all His earthly life. Antipas ruled a fiery, independent-thinking people; from their ranks sprang Judas the Gaulonite, among them was first organized the Zelotes (or Sacarii, pious assassins), while the whole of Galilee became more and more a great seething cauldron the longer Rome ruled it. Here in Galilee the great thought of the day (the belief in the coming Messiah) inspired many with a contempt of death, or rather a longing for it, in their hatred of Rome. Here in Galilee was freely argued men were on the eve of a great religious upheaval. Here the writings of the Old Testament were twisted into a multitude of meanings to support these great expectations for the immediate future.

Summary: Jesus lived in a town inhabited by an industrious, independent-thinking folk, who were the target of the jealousy and spleen of the narrow-minded Jews of southern Palestine. He was the legal subject of a province seething with revolutionary thinking and the seat of many political-religious uprisings. He lived daily among a people possessed by a colossal hope—the coming of the Messiah to rule in person. He lived in an atmosphere surcharged with the thought that peace to the righteous was at hand and that God's work would soon be sealed forever!

What puzzles me is how you can figure a man's production by inches? The other night I set 324 inches of daily ads, with no base-ups, and didn't work hard at all. Recently a certain fellow checked up on the ad room force and commented on the fact that some set less than 100 inches of daily ads. The following night I set less than 50 inches of dailies, and worked harder than I did the night this week I set 324 inches. Some ads are hard to set, time killers; while others can be put together in a jiffy. Therefore inches can't possibly be the way to figure production.

Sinister Idle Figures Published by Green

Washington. — "Unemployment is already as high as in the worst month last winter," said William Green, president A. F. of L., in commenting on unemployment figures reported by trade unions in twenty-four cities.

"More union members were out of work in the first three weeks of November than in October, and the percentage rose from 21 per cent unemployed in October to 22 per cent in November," said Mr. Green. "Part time is also increasing," he said. "In October, 15 per cent of our membership were working part time, and in November 18 per cent.

"This year we enter the winter months with an unemployment crisis already on our hands. We should take this winter increase as warning that relief measures must be speeded and the utmost possible done to hasten the work of relief and prevention already begun.

"Unemployment increased as much as usual in November. If it continues to increase at the usual rate we shall have 50 per cent more out of work by February than we have.

"Our figures show that even now 40 per cent of our union membership are forced to lower standards of living because their incomes are reduced by unemployment and part-time work. This represents also a huge loss in buying power which might be stimulating production and helping business forward.

"Any concern which lost 40 per cent of its customers would consider the problem grave, indeed. Yet this is just what is happening on a wide scale the country over. These losses keep us in depression and delay business recovery.

"Our report for cities shows that increasing unemployment was general in November throughout the country."

President Green states that preliminary estimates for November show 4,860,000 unemployed. This is a gain from 4,500,000 in the previous month. These figures do not include farm laborers or office workers.

President Green said this estimate is based on trade union reports and all other available statistical information on employment from the department of labor and commerce, the interstate commerce commission and other authoritative sources.

Now, therefore, pursuant to the provisions contained in said deed of trust, the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, of Chattanooga, Trustee, will on within the legal hours of sale, at the west door of the court house in Chattanooga, Hamilton county, Tennessee, offer for sale and will sell to the highest and best bidder at public outcry for cash in hand, and in bar of all equities of redemption, dower and homestead as provided in said deed of trust, the following described real estate in Hamilton county, to-wit:

Being Lot No. 1, Block "F," Brainerd Park, being a subdivision land of the Belvoir Land Company, according to the plat thereof of record in the Register's Plat Book No. 3, Page No. 11, of the register's office of Hamilton county, Tennessee, being the same property conveyed by Nell Thurman to W. L. Stuart and wife, Irene D. Stuart, by deed registered in Book "N," Volume 23, Page [illegible] of the register's office of Hamilton county, Tennessee.

Said deed of trust warrants the title as clear, free and unencumbered, except a note due to the Hamilton Trust & Savings Bank for $4,000.00, but the Title Guaranty & Trust Company of Chattanooga, Trustee, conveys as trustee and not otherwise. Said sale will be made subject to all taxes and assessments that are a lien and unpaid, and subject to the above note.

Pale and Weak

"I THINK Cardui is a wonderful medicine, for I improved greatly after taking it," says Mrs. A. W. English, of R. F. D. 4, Roanoke, Va. "When I was just a girl of 13, my mother gave this medicine to me, and it did me a great deal of good. I was weak and run-down. After I had taken Cardui awhile, I felt much better.

"In 1924, my health was poor. I felt miserable, and hadn't enough strength to do my housework. It took all my willpower to keep up. I was pale and weak.

"I got Cardui again and took it. My improvement was wonderful. I can recommend Cardui to others, for my health was so much better after I had taken a course of the Cardui Home Treatment."

SENATE TO TAKE VOTE ON INJUNCTION MEASURE

Republican Steering Committee Agrees Not to Block Efforts of Norris to Bring Bill Up on Floor—Green Urges Speed in Unemployment Relief.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 10.—Action on the amended Shipstead anti-injunction bill in the present congress session seems assured by the agreement of the senate republican steering committee not to block the efforts of Senator Norris to bring the measure up on the floor. The committee at the same time denied the request of Senator Norris for a preferred place on the calendar for the measure.

In a conference with the committee, Senator Norris made it plain that he intended to bring the Shipstead bill up on the floor and would make a hard fight to pass it. The committee agreed to explain at the time that its refusal to give the bill a preferred place was without prejudice to consideration of the measure.

The committee agreed upon a policy of not letting any controversial measures get ahead of unemployment and other relief legislation arising out of the business depression and drought situation.

While the committee was meeting President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, issued a statement appealing for speeding up of relief measures. He said that the number of unemployed is constantly increasing and the country is entering the winter with a "crisis already on our hands." Even now, he added, 40 per cent of the trade union membership has been forced to adopt lower standards of living.

Unemployment has increased since October, according to reports from trade unions in twenty-four cities, Mr. Green reported.

"Unemployment is already as high as in the worst month last winter," he declared. "More union members were out of work in the first three weeks of November than in October, and the percentage rose from 21 per cent unemployed in October to 22 per cent in November. Part time is also increasing. In October, 15 per cent of our membership were working part time and in November, 18 per cent.

"An increase in unemployment from October to November is normal, and the change this year has been about the same as usual. But so many were already out of work in October, this fall, that any increase is cause for concern."

LABOR MEMBERSHIP GAINS DESPITE BUSINESS SLUMP

Increase Recorded in Three Fall Months, Secretary Morrison Reports—Urges Labor's Remedy for Unemployment and Sees Decided Trade Improvement Year from Now.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 10.—Despite unemployment and the business depression, membership of organizations affiliated to the American Federation of Labor has increased during September, October and November over the same months last year, Secretary Frank Morrison reports. The number of charters issued to new unions directly affiliated to the federation has also increased, he added.

Declaring that no man, woman or child should be permitted to suffer for lack of food, clothing and shelter, Mr. Morrison said that a great responsibility for the relief of the unemployed falls on the national and state governments.

"Congress and the legislatures of the different states will have to do their level best to inaugurate a building and road improvement program to give work to the unemployed," he said.

Points Out Labor's Remedy.

"Labor feels," he continued, "that the unemployment problem cannot only be solved, but that unemployment can be eliminated through the shortening of the work day and work week, higher wages and restriction of immigration. By these means the millions of unemployed in this country could be employed and have the money to purchase the products of other workers.

"There is no use in ten million persons working long hours while four million are idle. Reduce the working hours so all may be employed.

"Labor displacing machinery and new processes of production and the merging of big companies have been throwing so many workers out of jobs that great numbers are unable to secure employment. The solution is to so organize industry as to hours worked per week that all may have jobs. Unemployment such as exists all over the world today is the result of the machine age, and it will take the best minds of the workers, employers and legislators to solve the problem."

Gain Next Year.

Asked about the prospect for betterment of business, Mr. Morrison said that he thought there will be a decided improvement in business conditions by this time next year.

Mr. Morrison recently returned from a trip to Florida. He visited Miami and arranged for a meeting there on Jan. 13 of the executive council of the A. F. of L.

Unemployment Shows Steady Gain Since '21

Bank Figures Show Production in Gain, While Number of Employed Fell in Ten Consecutive Years.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 11.—Industrial production has increased every year since 1921, while every single year, without exception, has witnessed a decrease in the number of wage earners employed.

These are federal reserve board figures, backing up organized labor's contention officially and with statistics.

The federal reserve board offers no explanation of its figures—it does not explain how production increases while numbers of persons on pay rolls decrease. It sets forth the figures which tell more eloquently than oratory of the steady stream of workers thrown aside to make way for automatic machinery.

The figures, as analyzed by Ralph F. Couch, statistician and analyst, show that the present great wave of unemployment began as long ago as 1919, proceeding steadily and with growing volume up to the present.

Employment at Peak in 1920.

In his analysis of industrial conditions Couch says:

"Employment reached a peak in 1920 which, according to the index of the federal reserve board, has not yet been equaled despite the multiplication of production. One hundred and one persons were on factory pay rolls in 1920 for each 98 at work in 1929 and for each 97 at work in 1923. These are the years of greatest manufactory activity.

"Industrial activity rose to its highest peak in 1929 when output was 42 per cent greater than in 1919, according to the federal reserve index. The 1923 production rate was 22 per cent above that of 1919.

Greater Output, Fewer Men.

"Since 1919, industrial activity (output) has been decreasing, but with the exception of 1920 employment shows a decline. Greater output is and has been accomplished with a diminishing number of workers."

Need for Action Plain.

The appalling necessity for drastic action within industry is demonstrated by the figures, the two main requirements being for a shortening of the work-week and a general and sweeping increase in wages, wiping out finally the low wage standards of the great low-wage industries like textiles, tobacco and certain factories that fall in the low-wage category because of automatic machinery and the employment of what is known as "unskilled" labor.

The United States federal reserve board, having at its command perhaps more intimate information as to industry than any other institution, governmental or otherwise, has laid before the nation its dramatic showing of the growing efficiency of machinery and the sweeping wave of unemployment that can go hand in hand with increasing production because of machinery.

The federal reserve board's showing substantiates to the limit every showing made by organized labor regarding displacement of men by machinery.

The advances of the labor movement have always been up grade. A constant demand for union-made goods and service will remove some of the grade.

Material Costs, At Rock Bottom, Favor Building

Campaign for Construction and Repairs Stimulated by Low Prices—Delay for Further Drop Called Mistake.

By JOSEPH A. WISE
(By International Labor News Service.)

Chicago, Dec. 11.—Persons who are holding back the starting of building construction projects in the hope that costs will go still lower are making a mistake, said Frank Kasten, president of the United Brick and Clay Workers of America, in an interview with International Labor News Service.

Costs of materials are at the lowest point they have been in several years, he said, and he does not believe they can go much lower. There is no possibility that wages will come down, he asserted. This, then, is a propitious time to build or repair, he believes.

Prices at Bed Rock.

Speaking of face and common brick, on which he is an authority, Mr. Kasten said that the prices of these two materials cannot go lower without the members of his organization taking a cut in wages, which they cannot do, the wages being low enough as they are.

"The price of face brick has gone down about 25 per cent," said Mr. Kasten. "You can buy good face brick now at from $22 to $30 a thousand. Common brick here cost $12 a thousand. That has been the price in the Chicago territory for several years, which is much lower than the price in other districts where so-called 'open shop' conditions prevail.

Wages Can't Go Lower.

"Freight rates are the same and are likely to remain stationary, wages will not come down, and the cost of materials is at rock bottom in most lines," continued Mr. Kasten. "It seems to me, then, that no better time could be chosen by those who wish to build or reconstruct."

"How do you view the proposal of the American Construction council to launch a campaign to encourage property owners throughout the nation to make all necessary repairs on their buildings now rather than to wait until next spring?" Mr. Kasten was asked.

Approves Council's Program.

"It is a splendid idea and, if responded to in a substantial degree by the public, will lessen the necessity for relief work among the unemployed during the coming winter," he answered. "The labor press of America is to be commended for joining in this great construction effort."

Incidental to the main question, it was mentioned to President Kasten, who also is the mayor of Blue Island, Ill., that Jack Zamford, general organizer of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International union, had stated to International Labor News Service that of the 2,400 union bakers in Chicago 600 are without jobs and are dependent for work upon the one day a week which the 1,800 members having jobs lay off in order to care for the unemployment situation.

Children Are Underfed.

"Yes, I can understand that," said Mr. Kasten. "The people are eating less. You would be surprised at the number of children that go to school hungry. I do not mean to say that they are getting nothing at all to eat, but they are sent to school with insufficient breakfasts. The labor organizations, the Elks and other benevolent societies out at Blue Island are trying to take care of this situation by providing milk and other nourishing food for the school children."

HERE'S SOMETHING I CAN'T TELL MY HUSBAND

I HOPE he reads this ad. That's the only way he'll know I'd rather have a Tiffin Model Magic Chef Gas Range than anything else in the world. He thinks all I like are dainty things to wear and would never believe I actually prefer a stove for Christmas. But what a stove!

This Tiffin is the most enchanting thing I've seen for years. It is to the kitchen what a grand piano is to the living room—a real mark of distinction. So compact, so colorful, so unusual; every woman falls in love with it at first sight. And all my life friends who have them say they're perfect bakers.

I've always wanted a gas stove with an Oven Heat Regulator. I'm tired spending hours needlessly fretting in the kitchen. The Tiffin has a Red Wheel Oven Heat Regulator and every other modern improvement to make it easy to cook the kind fo meals people praise.

Like other women, I prefer a gift I can share with the family, and we'd all enjoy the advantages of this wonderful new gas range. The price of the Tiffin is almost unbelievable—it's so low. Maybe my husband will surprise me and have one installed. Here's hoping.

"YOU'RE NEXT!"

By "COMMODORE" GEORGE PERRY
Prsident, Local 415

Ex-Gov. Taylor might have been an expert in telling where the Walker hound originated, but it remains for our good old friend Clyde Garrett to tell us where the Canadian 'possum dog came from.

The nearest thing to work that we have been able to get our boss (H. E. Cochran) to do this week was to visit the municipal woodpile (not for help, however), but we wanted him to see what a working man looks like. He says it is impossible to get Fields, Briggs and Beavers to show him anything along that line.

Just picked up our international journal this week to see what our brothers were doing over the country and saw where our old friend Frank Troncalli was vice-president of Local 63, Dallas, Tex. Good luck, Frank. May your administration be a howling success.

Was sorry to get the news that Robert Wood, of Local 63, one of the old-timers who worked for H. E. Cochran, had passed on. Makes us wonder who will be the next of our bunch to answer the roll call.

* * *

I see where our good old friend George Forbes has sent out invitations to his silver wedding anniversary. Congratulations, George; I hope by the time you send out invitations to your golden wedding anniversary we will have our new postoffice building and that you are postmaster (and I'm president of our international).

* * *

Call Jim Ball up, some of you fellows, and see if he remembers what the Golden Text was in the Sunday school lesson for last Sunday.

Sure had a fine meeting of the Central Body last Monday night. Local 415 had three delegates present. That's fine, boys, let's go every meeting night. Maybe we won't have to listen to Col. Cooke in so many speeches next time.

It takes Joe Harper to tell you what might have been and the rest of us fellows to tell you what really is happening.

Boys, if you are not getting your Labor World just call 6-7562 and tell the editor to send it to your home address, so that you may be able to know what your labor movement is doing in Chattanooga.

Saw a sign over the editor's desk in The Labor World office, "The world will stand aside to let any man pass who knows where he's going," which causes me to wonder if, at the present time, there is any man who knows where he is going.

Branch No. 62, N. A. L. C., held their December meeting (which was the last for this year) at the Central Y. M. C. A., with a good attendance, as it was election of officers for the coming year, and the following were the lucky ones: President, W. A. Myers; vice-president, S. S. McMahon; recording secretary, F. W. Brooks; financial secretary, J. T. McPherson; treasurer, H. M. Oehlson; trustees, J. H. Reneau, F. W. Oehlson, Clyde Hamil; representatives to Service Relation council, M. A. Lichtenstetter, M. M. Echols, S. S. McMahon; delegates to trades and labor council, J. T. McPherson, L. W. Lyons, R. B. Lane, W. A. Myers; correspondent to Postal Record, R. B. Lane.

Henry Oehlson made report on the band, saying that they were making good progress and are planning an entertainment in the spring.

W. A. Myers has a couple of setter puppies which he is trying to raise. If successful we will have some sport, eh. Bill!

Another checker tournament was held in the swing room Thursday evening.

Fred Oehlson says that his baby sleeps all day and stays awake all night. He is contemplating asking Mr. Walker to change his schedule so he can make his rounds at night and sleep in the daytime.

W. D. Leverick makes this suggestion to help the unemployed—use them to enforce the eighteenth amendment.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

The Girls' Cotillion club certainly put on their beach party in a big way last Wednesday night at the Golf and Country club. They assured the success of the dance by bringing to Chattanooga one of the best of national name orchestras, Coon Sanders' Night Hawks. It was the band in person and they went over with a bang. Joe Sanders' sore throat kept him from singing the blues in his usual fashion, but this didn't hold down the rest of the boys one bit. We hope their stay was a pleasant one and that they'll return soon.

They tell us that Commissioner Bryan is becoming worried about the over-crowded condition of the flop house at the city hall. We did not realize the seriousness of the situation until we saw how close home it was hitting. Who should we see there last Monday night but some of our illustrious brothers, Jimmy Cox, Mom O'Neal and J. T. Holdam.

When someone asked Frank Worthy at the dance the other night just what he thought of Coon Sanders, Frank calmly answered that they were good, too.

We are pleased to note that Bill Lancaster, popular saxophone player of our local, will soon take up tenor duties with Johnny Mahoney's band. We hope that the associating with Liner, Pryor et al will not have any bad effects on William.

* * *

John Patty gave us quite a scare last week when he decided to leave Chattanooga and take up his residence in Florida. However, John will not leave until after Christmas and his many friends and creditors can breathe a sigh of relief.

The election came and departed. There is an unusually fine board elected and if they really try, we are sure to have a good administration. Let's everybody get behind Sandy and his associates and have a big year. Whoopee!

* * *

Business should increase generally with the coming of Christmas and we hope that the musicians will come in for their share of the profits.

At the end of Wednesday afternoon's poker game at Sandy's store, the score was Alex 25, with Ellis, John, Jimmy, Greek and Dick 5 in the hole.

Hosiery Union to Spend $10,000 Aiding Members During Holidays

(By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelphia, Dec. 11.—Ten thousand dollars has been appropriated by Branch One of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers to relieve distress among its unemployed workers during the Christmas season.

At the same time a complete census of the present employment status of the almost 9,000 members of the Philadelphia union will be made.

Alex McKeown, president of the Philadelphia organization, makes public for the first time the fact that the relief committees and trustees of Branch One of the hosiery workers' union have been making systematic disbursements to out-of-work union workers for several months. "A sum in excess of $15,000 has been already donated from our treasury to the members in distress, outside of strike relief since the crisis became acute and the savings of the membership exhausted," President McKeown said.

"The funds now being set aside to aid our brother and sister members will probably not be distributed in the form of cash. We have a committee at work investigating all cases of need that are brought to our attention and as a rule the committee itself will purchase coal, groceries or medicine or whatever is found to be needed in various homes. It is the intention of our union to see to it, if that is humanly possible, that none of our members suffer for want of the elementary necessities of life through the holiday season, which will be a particularly difficult one for us owing to the complete shutdown of a group of our union shops, including the largest mill in the city, and the increased curtailment of operations at many of the other organized plants throughout the Philadelphia district.

"It is possible sometimes to enable a family or individual to meet a crisis by some method other than giving money or goods. Some of our people have small investments which are frozen and others have savings in some form which they cannot get at under present circumstances. In such instances it is possible to get expert advice in many cases. Wives of our members do and will visit the sick and we will arrange to help out in those homes where there are child-care or health problems.

"Our organization is happy to be in a position where it can still aid its members and it proposes to continue this effort for just as long as this can be done. Mutual aid is the basis of trade unionism and we can help our members without any suggestion of charity entering into the matter."

Foreign War Vets Add Many Names To Bonus Petition

Alexander Speer, commander of Lookout post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, announces that the campaign for immediate payment of adjusted compensation, or "bonus," is succeeding even beyond the expectations of those sponsoring the movement, and this applies both locally and generally. Headquarters at 925 Market street, said Mr. Speer, are daily visited by veterans who come to affix their signatures to the petition to congress.

Under an act passed by congress, it was explained, world war veterans were granted a bonus, to be paid in 1945, or at the death of the soldier. Present industrial conditions, with unemployment prevailing generally, constitute a strong argument for immediate action, it is contended, and Commander Speer expressed confidence that the campaign will prove successful.

"Unrest Is Mental"; Patience Urged

New York.—The United States is fundamentally sound, our unrest is mental and "there is nothing to worry about because things will right themselves in time," was the advice of Otto H. Kahn, New York banker, to 300 guests who were entertained at his Long Island estate.

Mr. Kahn, who recently returned from Europe, said unrest in the United States is largely mental. He drew the comparison of a man who was physically fit but who imagined he was sick.

Mr. Kahn said conditions in Europe are much worse than here.

Standard Oils Set New Dividend Mark

New York.—Standard Oil stockholders are not affected by the business depression, as this year they will receive $286,66,728 in cash dividends. This is an increase of $17,020,801 over 1929.

Dividends by Standard Oil of New Jersey this year will exceed $50,000,000. This is the largest ever paid from earnings by any unit of the group in a single year.

When Standard Oil Company of New Jersey (original trust) was dissolved by the United States supreme court, several years ago, the stock of that concern had a market value of $400,000,000. The old Standard was divided into state organizations, and total dividends this year come within approximately $114,000,000 of the total stock market value of all these companies when they were in one organization.

"It has been estimated," says the Wall Street Journal, "that Standard Oil of New Jersey shares en bloc are selling at prices equal to around $4,000 a share on the old stock, just 900 per cent more than the old was selling for at the time of dissolution."

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

LETTERS TO SANTA DULY FORWARDED

Postal Clerk, as Usual, Reads Old Saint's Mail, and Talks Out of School for Labor World Readers.

(By GEORGE FORBES)

Christmas is the happiest time and the saddest time of the year. I know, for I have experienced both kinds on various occasions. Red top boots, toys and candy one year, the next year nothing in my little stocking but holes and cold feet—and a memory.

After getting too big to look for Santa Claus, I have had happy days with plenty of sox, neckties "Tom and"—(what was that other fellow's name?), turkey, etc. Also sad days at the Christmas season when I had no sox, no turkey, no necktie, just a two weeks beard—and a memory. I was thinking about all this last night after supper (or dinner) while seated in the old arm chair.

I had been overfed on backbone and ribs, turnips, etc. No wonder I dreamed.

I dreamed that I was Santa Claus, and that I was opening my mail—some of the letters were very appealing, and I will try to quote all I can remember of them. The first one went like this:

Dear Santa: We are just a few million people that have grown cold and hungry in the midst of plenty. We know we have not been good or even careful, but please put a job in our stockings as we are getting tired of charity and mercy, and would like to try our hand with a little self-respect and justice.—The Unemployed.

Dear Santa: I am a nice little state in Dixie, the birthplace of brave soldiers and great statesmen, but it seems that we have been hijacked by men in high places—we know our legislature has been making a monkey out of us, but when they turned the taxes over to the "Unholy Three" they only left us $20.55, and we are hurt, sore mad; just hurt—please send us MEN and brains enough to vote for them. Also please send us an investigating committee that will investigate.—Little Tennessee.

Dear Old Santa Claus: We are three good little boys, always been good little boys, build lots of nice wide highways and lots and lots of schools. We have done more for our state (and it) than any other boys anywhere, and feel that we have something coming to us. Send us some new records for our phonograph, including the "Prisoner's Song" and the "Workhouse Blues." Yours for better and higher taxes on cigarettes and gas.—Luke, Roger and Hank.

Dear Old Santa: I am a good little town called "The Dynamo of Dixie." Please send me a new postoffice and a place to put it, not in the civic center or North Chattanooga. I also would like to have a few more streets opened if it won't increase my taxes. Thanks for the tunnels you sent me, but I have enough now. Yours—Chattanooga.

Dear Santa: I am a struggling labor paper that needs both readers and advertisers, but if you will send me some readers that will tell the advertiser where they saw their ad, I'll get the advertisers myself. Also a few new "dreams" from a famous writer who sometimes condescends to write for us, I'll get the readers, too. Yours for co-operation—The Labor World.

Dear Old St. Nick: You needn't send me a d—n thing, but I do hope that the various locals in this city will send men as delegates that will attend meetings and co-operate after they get there. Thanks for the new hall (not Tom Hall) and everything. Don't forget my little brother, the Manufacturers' Assassination, over on Broad Street; he wants a jail to put the "reds" in.—The Central Body.

Dear Santa: We are two little junior boys somewhere between the ages of 40 and up, and we are lonesome—please send us some one to cheer us up when we're feeling blue and to make us blue when we are full of cheer. We are willing, Santa, but we are bashful and timid. If you can't send us a nice, clean old maid, or a widower, give us nerve, for we are bashful and have cold feet. We both prefer blondes.—Walter Gardner and Marria Hix.

P. S.—Don't forget our little brother in the bachelor club, little Matt, from central Chattanooga.

Dear Santa Claus: I am a good little boy with only a few parks to play with. Please send me more sickening for soup to feed the unemployed on. Yours for bigger and better soup houses.—Chas. Ziegler.

* * *

Dear Old St. Nick: I am a sweet little boy with a sunny disposition. Please bring me a "mamma doll" with dimples in her knees and a new pair of pink pajamas to wear to the convention at Jackson in the spring. I know you are hard up, so I won't ask for much this time. Don't forget my little brother, "Travelin' Milt"; he is a good boy, too, now.

Your little boy—Dimples Cooke.

Dear St. Nicholas: A horse! a horse! My portable radio for a horse! Please send one named "Pegasus." Also a book of verses from that famous author, Anonymous. Also slip me a bobbed-haired bandit. Yours for poetry and matrimony.—H. F. Brown.

Dear Santa: We are two good little boys that go home early every night and always attend meetings. Please send us a pool table that we can play on without having to pay for it so we can buy some groceries to take to the widows and orphans (our own). Don't forget our little brother, Roy Lee, he likes to play pool, too.—Eckenrod and Forbes.

Dear Santa: A bottle of hair tonic will suit me fine.—Tom Hall.

* * *

Dear Old Santa Claus: Please send me a grindstone to sharpen my store bought teeth on, as the steak at the ——— restaurant is getting worse all the time. Also some per capita tax.—Matt Gerlach.

House Approves Measure Cutting Postal Hours

Bill Provides Saturday Half Holiday for 160,000 Employes —Passage in Senate Predicted by Supporters.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 16.—The house has given unanimous approval to a bill providing a 44-hour week for 160,000 employes of the postal service.

The bill, if passed by the senate and signed by the president, will give clerks, letter carriers, railway mail clerks, laborers and others a Saturday half holiday.

The bill was introduced in the house by Representative William Kendell, of Pennsylvania. Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, has introduced a similar bill in the senate and supporters of the legislation are confident that the senate will follow the house lead soon.

If the bill becomes a law, it will mean the creation of between 8,000 and 10,000 new jobs in the postal service, according to estimates by Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks. He added that it will also mean, in addition to additional leisure for postal workers, "more than $1,000,000 monthly in circulation throughout 5,000 cities and towns in the purchase of necessities by 10,000 wage earners."

"It is a practical application, as I see it, of the Hoover idea for unemployment relief and business stimulation," Flaherty said.

Here's a Thought For Christmas

E. L. Blair, local representative of the John Weisert Tobacco company, of St. Louis, announces that local retailers have been supplied with attractive Christmas covers for each carton of union-labeled Carmen cigarettes.

Carmens are now sold fairly generally on the local market, and Mr. Blair suggests a carton as an ideal Christmas gift for trades unionists.

Mrs. Frank Teague Dies in New York

Word was received in this city last Friday of the death of Mrs. Frank Teague, former Chattanooga lady and wife of a former member of Chattanooga Typographical union. Mrs. Teague died in New York city, where they had made their home for several years.

Augustus Doyal, of the Chattanooga Printing and Engraving company, brother of Mrs. Teague, left Saturday morning to attend the funeral of his sister.

British Labor Party Favors Reform Voting

London, England.—Premier MacDonald favors electoral reforms that will increase the voting strength of the liberal party in the house of commons.

This move is considered a proffer for liberal support, as the labor party can be turned out of office if the liberals line up with conservatives.

Under present election laws the nation's industrial centers are more widely representated in the house of commons than is agriculture. As agricultural sections is the source of liberal strength, Lloyd George and his liberal associates are demanding an equalization of representation.

The inequalities are shown in the election last year when labor won 286 seats by casting 8,416,557 votes. The conservatives got 260 seats with 8,669,469 votes, and the liberals won but 59 seats with 5,260,000 votes.

Dramatic Story of Danville Strike Recalls Spirit of Early Christians On Eve Season "Peace on Earth"

Thousands of Workers and Their Families, Holding Line Against Autocracy, Sing and Pray as They Suffer for Perpetuation of Human Rights—Hungry and Cold, They Hurl Defiance at Oppressors as Holy Hours of "Good Will to Men" Approach.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT.

Danville, Va., Dec. 15.—After an absence of some three weeks I came back to Danville to find the big textile strike stronger than ever. This, in truth, is one of the most remarkable strikes in American labor history.

Seven thousand children, many of them organized in a junior union, play their part, stand their share of suffering, and by their youthful courage heap shame upon the heads of the pious President Fitzgerald, of the Dan River and Riverside mills.

Let me try to picture the strike situation, aside from its purely news aspect. Every day brings its big strike news, but back of the daily developments there is something that goes on, strong and steady, day in and day out.

Bayonets Bristle Like Cactus Plants.

Monday morning the mills made their crowning effort to open with a big force. Sunday night the air was full of reports that "something will happen in the morning." Plenty happened.

With Vice-President Gorman of the U. T. W., Organizer Bolick and Tillie Lindsay, that general in charge of almost everything, I made the rounds of all mill gates twice. Down the city's main street, at 6 o'clock in the morning, automobiles loaded with police rolled in august escort of strikebreakers.

Often a carload of strikebreakers was guarded by a carload of police in front and another bringing up the rear. And these police were armed. They had rifles and bayonets, and shotguns. Some of the automobiles looked like rolling cactus plants, because of the bayonets that protruded from the doors and through tilted windshields.

Disciplined Pickets; Troops Not So Good.

Out in Schoolfield the troops were on duty, marching, in squads, around and around the vast mill property. Mostly the troops were disciplined and the officers cool. But that wasn't true of all. One group of women pickets didn't move fast enough to suit one officer, rank unknown. He ordered his men to get busy. In unprintable language he gave an order which, stripped of its obscene adornment was, "Give 'em the steel."

The pickets kept their heads and avoided trouble except where trouble was forced upon them.

Troops did, however, force strikers and disinterested citizens to turn back and take other streets and they did go upon private property, make arrests and destroy a picket shack.

Danville Militiamen Give Money.

Queer about these soldiers. Some of the chaps on duty look like high school boys, and it's said that's what they are.

Two pretty pickets walked back and forth across the street from two shave-tails guarding a gate. Girls looked over shoulders, smiling, as girls will. Boys slipped from "port arms" to "at ease," looking girlward. One so'jer left his post and walked half a block, smiling. Whereupon girls gave merry ha-ha and walked on. Those two boys didn't have their minds on their work for half an hour.

But here's another one—good. There's a Danville company, the Danville Grays. Captain lined them up and told 'em they all had to contribute to the strikers' Christmas party for the children. "All," he said, "except you five scabs and you don't have to give anything."

Every man in the outfit—except those five—is a union man.

And there are plenty of union cards in khaki coat pockets among the men on duty, too. Some of them seem almost nearsighted at times. Queer about these soldiers. But there's nothing queer about the fact that as an army they have got to obey orders and there's no union card in the colonel's coat pocket!

Rookie Police Nervous, Menacing.

The disgraceful spectacle was furnished by the police. I know something about police and policing. Here was an exhibition of rookie nervousness that was appalling. The rookie police are the most dangerous element in this whole situation. They are as nervous as a novice out after his first deer.

Confronted by nothing worse than a half hundred unarmed and perfectly peaceful pickets acting within their rights, a half hundred police rampaged around, back and forth, like a lot of nervous nimrods. And the chief of police himself, who has not been a bad fellow at all, seemed as nervous as his newest redheaded recruit.

Gas bombs and clubbing with rifle butts were as needless in this situation as they would have been in a tea in Mr. Fitzgerald's home.

Children Baffle School Teachers.

Union discipline is remarkable. Lots of things are remarkable here. The junior union is remarkable. These youngsters sing union songs and in school they refuse to sing anything else. The teachers don't know what to do about it.

Many children are being kept out of school for lack of clothes, especially shoes. They don't complain.

One 10-year-old boy came to the union commissary and said:

"If you want to know where my father is, he sleeps in the barn. He's gone back to work in the mill. I've had two whippings because I won't carry his lunch. I want you-all to know my mother and I ain't scabs."

Gorman's Astonishing Grip on People.

Francis J. Gorman, U. T. W. vice-president, has an amazing grip on the whole organization.

GENERAL

MISS MATILDA LINDSAY

In the accompanying article, Chester Wright declares she's in charge of most everything connected with the workers' side of the Danville strike. Which goes a long way with her local friends in explaining why that affair is 100 per cent effective.

When he enters a meeting hall the roof almost leaves its moorings.

"Listen, you housebreakers, I want to tell you something," he says. They know what he means and they roar. He alternates with wit, cold advice and sarcasm.

Four babies have been named after Gorman since the strike began.

Babies keep on being born, strike or no strike, and they need clothes as well as names. The strike is full of problems.

Annabelle Glenn, Song Leader.

Annabelle Lee Glenn came here from A. F. of L. headquarters, and she's turned out to be another regiment. She has organized a choir, song-writing contests, union cheer brigades and goodness knows what.

The children have adopted her and the grown-ups look to her as a bringer of joy. She puts mass meetings through singing and whistling paces that are wonders. There are songs before every speech and cheers after every speech. Perched high on a chair, Annabelle Glenn gets 'em warmed up so that they have to open all the windows. I've heard the cheers a block away from the hall.

The Big Mills' Christmas Message!

But there's plenty to be concerned about. Mostly it's food. Nobody knows what the rations will be next day, if any. There has been genuine hunger.

Pellagra is showing its ugly head. Pneumonia has gripped a good many. There are some hospital cases—and the hospital doors are closed!

Now comes the eviction notices. Get out on Christmas eve, some of them say. Others order strikers out on Christmas day. What a Christmas present!

All over town folks who have a spare room or two are offering them to those who must get out of their homes.

If the mill thought the blow would strike terror the mill didn't know the union members.

Marvel of Thorough Organization.

There are 15,000 men, women and children involved in this strike. To care for their needs and wants requires much detail of organization. The job that has been done is remarkable.

A sick committee makes the round every day. There is accurate check on every case of illness. The union has paid as high as $300 in a week for drugs.

A committee on wood runs a gang of wood choppers, trucks and the whole personnel needed for cutting and delivering.

Union members own 125 cows. These have been herded together, each owner caring for his cow and delivering the milk to a list of families who are checked daily at union headquarters.

Another committee checks up on clothes and another on food. It has been found that some members have gone hungry rather than ask for food at the commissary.

I saw a woman proudly entering her home this morning bearing one sweet potato for her family's dinner. She had cause to rejoice.

Automobiles Worked Overtime.

A few strikers own automobiles and those cars have been worked to the limit since the strike began. Herman Barrow told me he had driven his Chevvy 12,000 miles since the strike began. He is everywhere.

Picket Captain Anderson is everywhere. But everywhere there is system. Here are enough people to make a small city, and the union is their grocer, their butcher, their clothier, their milk man, their wood and coal man, their druggist and their doctor. Also it is their adviser in every conceivable kind of trouble, or fancied trouble.

Matilda Lindsay is one of those "everywhere" persons. "Tillie" is one of those "whole regiment" persons, doing more jobs than most could do and doing them well.

Strike Is a Sacred Cause.

Strike meetings are wonderful meetings. The hall is packed. Sunday a thousand couldn't get in. In spite of hunger, privation, lack of clothes, uncertainty as to when it will end, and in spite of what illness there is, most of the faces look happy and healthy.

"I've gained 13 pounds since the strike began," one woman said.

There is a fervor, an intonsity, a conviction, a faith and a determination about these people that literally lifts newcomers out of themselves. In the best sense, the union is a religion with them, the strike a sacred cause. ....

Railroad Unions Agree on Program For Fewer Hours

Executives to Push Drive for Six-Hour Day in Train Service and Five-Day Week for Shop Employes.

Washington, Dec. 16.—Representatives of the Railway Labor Executives' association, consisting of twenty-one railroad unions, approved here the shorter hours program for the 1,000,000 men in the industry, directed their executive committee to arrange for meetings with the railroad executives and adjourned, subject to call by President David B. Robertson, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

The program indorsed provides for the immediate starting of a movement for a six-hour day for men in the transportation service and a five-day week for most of the men in shop service and in maintenance work. The six-hour day will also be sought for those men in the shop and switching service whose working conditions permit such a demand to be made.

Seek Bus Regulation.

In addition, the conference decided on joint action to seek regulation of interstate buses and trucks, of transportation of pipe lines and waterways and the elimination of "unfair competition in the railroad industry." Announcing their decision, the executives said in part:

"The Railway Labor Executives' association, composed of th etwenty-one labor organizations, has adjourned after unanimously adopting a joint program which includes a shorter workday, shorter work week, relief of unemployment and other matters of interest to the railway employes and the industry as a whole; such as proper regulation of highway transportation by pipe lines and waterways, so as to eliminate unfair competition in the railroad industry.

Prompt Action Necessary.

"The conferences were marked by unanimity of opinion as to necessity for prompt action in the matter of shortening the work day and work-week as a means of affording immediate unemployment relief in the railroad industry, which has largely arisen out of the technological changes and through subsidized and unfair competition by buses, trucks, pipe lines and waterways."

Robertson said that acceptance of the plan by the railroads would mean employment of perhaps 50,000 additional trainmen and from 50,000 to 100,000 additional men in other lines of railroad work.

Walsh Five-Day Week Will Relieve Workless

Washington.—A nation-wide public opinion should be created for a five-day bill, applicable to federal employes, that has been introduced by Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, declared President Green in a public statement.

Senator Walsh also proposes appropriation of government funds to relieve hunger and distress.

"It is refreshing to know that there are members of congress who appreciate the seriousness of the unemployment situation and who offer remedies for national economic ills," said Mr. Green.

"The A. F. of L. supports these Walsh proposals. If increasing distress, hunger and suffering are to be relieved, funds must be available. Reports of widespread unemployment with aggravated distress call for heroic action and practical treatment.

"The five-day week is not an untried experiment. It has been accepted in a very large way and has proven an economic and industrial success.

"The federal government should lead, instead of follow, in this economic reform. An emergency exists and it must be met by emergency legislation."

BRITISH MINERS VETO NATIONAL STRIKE PLAN

London, England.—A nation-wide coal strike was sidetracked at a conference of the Miners' Federation by the narrow vote of 230,000 to 209,000. The result was expected, but the large strike vote was surprising.

The conference ordered submission of the "spread over" question to local districts. Under the "spread over" 90 hours' work in two weeks is provided, instead of a 7½-hour day.

The anti-"spread over" strike of 85,000 miners in Scotland has been called off while mediation methods are applied.

RELIEF BILLS GIVEN BOOST

President Green Approves Walsh Proposals.

DISTRESS DEMANDS IMMEDIATE ACTION

Labor's Chief Declares Government Should Lead in Quick Action Necessary to Aid Unemployed.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 16.—President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, has pledged the hearty and unqualified support of the federation to two unemployment relief bills introduced by Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts. One bill provides for more liberal appropriations for the relief of the unemployed, and the other proposes a five-day week for all branches of the government service.

"It is most refreshing to know that there are members of the congress who possess a deep sense of appreciation of the seriousness of the unemployment situation and who offer real remedies for the acute economic ills from which the nation is suffering," Mr. Green said, in expressing approval of the Walsh bills. He continued:

"Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts proposed two remedies that call for immediate application and acceptance. One provides for a liberal appropriation of governmental funds to be used in relieving hunger, suffering and distress. The other measure provides for the inauguration of the five-day work week throughout the government employment service as an emergency measure designed to open up increasing opportunities for employment.

Heroic Action Needed.

"The American Federation of Labor gives its most hearty and unqualified support to these measures. If increasing distress, intense hunger and social sufferings are to be relieved, funds must be made available. The reports which show widespread unemployment with aggravated distress call for heroic action and practical treatment.

"No one can deny that the situation is serious and that it will become more serious during the winter period now approaching.

"The five-day work week is practical and necessary, if the opportunities for employment are to be enlarged and increased. It is not an untried experiment. It has been accepted in a very large way and has proven to be an economic and industrial success. The time has arrived when the five-day work week should be wellnigh universally accepted and established. With our increased and perfected facilities of production it is impossible to find employment, except during peak periods, for all those who make up our laboring population.

Government Should Lead.

"The federal government should lead, instead of follow, in the inauguration of this economic reform. Senator Walsh has sounded a most constructive legislative note. His measures should be given the support of all classes of people who are actually seeking for a remedy for our acute unemployment situation. Let all those who are deeply touched by the serious situation which prevails throughout the land rally to the support of these constructive measures by petitioning congress to enact them into law without unnecessary delay. An emergency exists and it must be met through the enactment of emergency legislation."

Senator Walsh's five-day week proposal would be effective for one year and would authorize the president to continue it for another, in his discretion.

Advocating passing of his bill, Senator Walsh said that the proposal of the administration for speeding up public works was "all very well as far as it goes."

"White-Collar" Men Not Aided.

"At best, however," he added, "such a program reaches only laborers, artisans and building material industries and is of no help in furnishing employment for the so-called white-collar worker, who belongs to a class which is in the aggregate a very large element of the unemployed."

Walsh asserted the government "has a magnificent opportunity to set an example to private business to put into practice its own preachings."

"By putting the government service in the present emergency on a five-day week basis, without any reduction in existing rates of pay," he said, "it will create more jobs at a time when jobs are sorely needed."

JOHN MANGAN DEAD.

Chicago.—John Mangan, trade union veteran, died in this city. He opposed unification of plumbers and steamfitters two decades ago. After a bitter contest the two pipe callings were united by the A. F. of L. convention in 1912.

President Coefield, of the plumbers, later appointed Mangan an official of the international. The departed unionist was a man of strong convictions and was held in high esteem.

GREETINGS!

May the spirit of brotherly love so consume those who are blessed at this season with plenty that they be led to share with their unfortunate fellows a measure of the material things given to them and denied to so many at this time; and

May the new year to come bring peace and happiness again to those who have been temporarily deprived of those blessings by which humanity is made content.

This is the sincerest wish of The Labor World to all who read these lines.

The Labor World joins scores of local friends in extending sincerest sympathy to Lester Cohn, of the local musicians, in the death of his father, who passed away last Friday.

CENTERING ON CONGRESS.

The great temptation just now is to look to congress for relief from unemployment. Congress can do much—and should.

But there are things to remember, even in distress. Congress did not create our unemployment. President Hoover did not create it. Unemployment is not a natural phenomenon. Unemployment is an industrial phenomenon.

In asking congress to provide relief or remedy we are asking congress to repair the damage done within industry by industry.

We go to congress because we can get at congress and because, having the suffrage, we can, to a degree, induce or browbeat congress into doing what we think it ought to do. Congress has done many unwise things because a determined effort was made to secure action. And, naturally, it has done wise things for the same reason. Congress ought to help relieve unemployment distress. But congress represents "we the people" and whatever it does is paid for by "we the people."

To whatever extent congress provides relief "we the people" are paying the bill for our own rescue from the mismanagement inflicted upon industry by those who finance, control and manage industry, including commerce. Congress takes charge as physician, the real culprit gets "out from under," passes the buck and goes on in much the same old way toward another crisis just like this one, except that it probably will be worse.

Congress must act now because we cannot induce or compel industry to pay for its own mistakes and crimes. There is no way to induce or compel industry to act, because the machinery for that kind of business has never been created, except to a limited degree. The fact that it has been created to some degree, by trade union action, is what prevents this depression from growing hourly more worse through the wage reductions that a great many frightened, greedy or short-sighted employers would enforce if they could.

Congress ought to and probably will take action in the direction of relief and we shall all rejoice. It is a justification of democracy that congress can be made to be responsive to a great public need. But let us remember ever-lastingly and in the future that congress is the responsible party; that congress through its makes, admits, its blunders, its greed, its ignorance, its crimes and its lack of proper organization brought this thing to pass and must stand the blame.

"We the people," through our government, must pay the bill for the industrial spree that brought about this ruin, but let there be no passing the buck as to where the blame belongs. And let us strive mightily to see to it that industry does not again run wild toward such another tragic climax. Let us organize the power of democratic influence in industry, so that the wisdom of the wage-earners may have its chance to function.

People can walk up to a congress and say "come across" and they can get results. They cannot walk up to a king that way and even when they walk out on a king they have to be mighty careful how they do it. The unlimited monarchy idea is no better in workshops than it is in national capitals. Trade unions are the instruments of democratic influence and participation in industry. Build them by the thousand and there will never be another unemployment crisis.

Meanwhile don't let industry pass the buck and get out from under while congress carries the load. If "we the people" have got to cure the case it is time we began to take part in prescribing preventive treatment.

Stick to the main road and to the main issue.

THIS GROWS TIRESOME.

Daily newspapers, either careless, ignorant or malignant, continue to talk about "labor racketeers" with great freedom and on the slightest pretext.

A metropolitan newspaper a few days ago wrote a "labor racketeer" headline over a story from Chicago. The story itself dealt solely with an organization of employers!

Another ace in the hand of the headline writer is "loyal employes." A newspaper, within the last ten days, wrote of the "loyal employes" in Danville, meaning the strikebreakers. If ever the word "loyal" was misused it was then.

These things are inexcusable, but they will persist as long as newspapers respond to influences now dominant. Trade unionists who pay for and read daily newspapers can exercise a correcting influence by writing floods of "letters to the editor." Meanwhile trade union newspapers serve valiantly in bringing to wage-earners the truth that is elsewhere distorted or suppressed.

ECONOMISTS AGAIN VEER.

Economic necessity removes many fear of slogans and forces him to think. He begins to face facts, as

Christmas

The Miracle Season

Florence Harris Wells

Let us go back over the centuries that we may see the soft Judean hills flooded with heavenly light; that we may behold the flaming star of the East guiding the three wise men, Melchior with flowing white hair and sweeping, snowy beard; Caspar, a beautiful boy, and Balthasar in the prime of life, symbolizing age, youth and middle age, bowing at the cradle in the manger.

THEY bring from afar their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh to the King of Kings, as the song of the heavenly chorus of angels on the plains of Bethlehem floods the air. The Master's touch worked strange miracles long ago. But let us now turn a simple dial and again a miracle has been wrought—even here as it was there so long ago.

THE room is full of sound. The air is charged with Christmas—always Christmas. Even the word is radiant with holiness. With the voices of the present are mingled those of the past. At Christmas man is at his best. It is the blest season of the year. The season of giving and receiving. The season of love reborn. It is the miracle season.

HAPPINESS is in the air. Laughter reigns. In the tongues of all nations voices are raised in greeting. The angels sang out their glad tidings of great joy above the plains of Bethlehem and as often as Christmas comes, the carols, music, bells, voices—all unite in a great singing circle sounding o'er all the world the glad words: A Merry Christmas!

Widow Millie Filled the Stocking

By Wm. L. Gaston

WIDOW MILLIE lived on a western farm and with the help of a hired man—a slow-going man named Mike—nobody ever heard his last name—managed to grow good crops and maintain the appearance of thrift.

Five years before her husband, Wilson Macy, had died and she had been left alone to carry on the work of the ranch. Mrs. Macy was an attractive young woman whose age would have been guessed somewhere in the thirties. She was plump, good-natured and generally liked in the community. Somehow she came to be called Widow Millie by the neighbors, who used the name as much to express their kindly feelings as to distinguish her from other people.

Bob Ramsay and Jim Walden were both eligible widowers and each owned a quarter section of good land adjoining Widow Millie's land, one on the north and one on the east. Each seemed a trifle more than anxious to have everything go right on the widow's ranch and neither was backward in the proffer of advice or offers to help. To do this properly required a call and neither was averse to calling.

Tom Moulton was a bachelor—a timid, bashful bachelor who could blush better than he could talk, in the presence of ladies. He owned a good ranch and was one of the most thrifty farmers in the community. He was good looking and very obliging. He was well liked but no one believed that he could ever muster the courage to propose marriage to any woman. He often slipped over to the widow's farm, to see Mike, of course. He gave his farm advice to Mike. Sometimes he exchanged work with Mike and on these occasions there was an extra white cloth on the table and the biscuits had an extra flakiness. Tom liked the biscuits. Tom ate the biscuits but he could not think of a word to say when the conversation was directed to him.

On the night before Christmas both Bob and Jim called and Widow Millie proceeded to entertain both in the parlor. She managed conversation and kept it going in the general direction while the visitors fidgeted and squirmed, each hoping that the other would soon leave. Millie was sure that Tom was in the kitchen. She could hear the muffled conversation of two slow-speaking men. Millie extended an invitation to both her visitors to come over the next day and have Christmas dinner with her. This was the signal for both to leave.

After their departure Millie went to the kitchen, but Tom had gone and Mike had retired. But hanging on the kitchen wall just over the stove was a pair of ladies' silk stockings. She looked at them in amazement. They were not hers and how could they have gotten there. Going closer she observed a piece of note paper protruding from one of them. She pulled it out hastily and excitedly read:

"Widow Millie: I have hung these stockings up here for you. I want you to fill them and wear them tomorrow. I have hung up a pair for myself at home. I will fill them and wear them over here tomorrow noon. The preacher and his wife will be with me. I fixed up everything else at the courthouse this afternoon. I can farm better if I do not have to cook. You can cook better if you do not have to farm. This is an honest offer, from Tom."

It would be hard to describe the thoughts that raced through Millie's mind. At first she was indignant. She resented it as an impertinence. "He had his nerve," she said almost aloud a dozen times, but she smiled when she thought that nerve was the very thing that Tom was supposed not to have. She liked Tom, and if he had come out boldly and proposed in the usual way she did not know what she would have done. She took up the note again, but she could only see the last line—"this is an honest offer, from Tom." It smote her with its straightforwardness and simplicity. "He is honest," she said to herself. She resolved first one thing, then another, but always came back to that last line—the honest offer. The last line won.

When Tom, the preacher and his wife arrived, Widow Millie had the stockings filled and dinner was well on the way. The minister's wife finished it. Bob and Jim were in time for the ceremony, and of course they stayed for their Christmas dinner.

Charm of Christmas.

The chief charm of Christmas is its simplicity. It is a festival that appeals to every one, because every one can understand it. A genuine fellowship pervades our common life—a fellowship whose source is our common share in the gift of the world's greatest Life which was given to the whole world.—Arthur Reed Kimball.

A Beautiful Christmas

BY

Florence Harris Wells

IT WAS Christmas morning. Two elderly persons stood at the front window of their big farm house and gazed at the snow blanketed world about them.

"Not a chance for Sam and his family to get through these drifts, Mother, not a ghost of a chance. No car on earth could make it."

"I guess you're right, Pa," Mrs. Clark answered, solemnly shaking her head with its beautiful wavy white hair. "And our dinner's well on the way. I'll have to tell Annie not to cook so many potatoes and perhaps we can manage to keep most of the turkey a day or so until the children can come. I suppose there's no chance for the snow plows to get through today either, William?"

"No. They'll clear the main highways first. But it's beautiful, isn't it, mother? with the ice and sleet on the trees and now the snow for trimming. It's as beautiful a Christmas morning as I have ever seen. And we're both well and strong and able to enjoy it together. It's great, isn't it?" Grandfather Clark slipped his arm about his wife's waist and drew her close beside him.

Meanwhile Sam and his family, seated about their breakfast table, were much more concerned about missing Christmas at Grandmother's and the good dinner than they were at the beauty of the world about them.

"Oh, grandfather and grandmother will understand," Marion, the daughter, was speaking. "We're the goats in this case. Ham and eggs for Christmas!"

"Gee! Can't we do anything 'cept sit here and talk about it?" Sam, Jr., aged fourteen, puckered his brows in evident great concentration. Suddenly he threw down his napkin and dashed for his sweater and cap.

"Where're you going?" Marion shouted.

The banging of the front door was the only reply.

In less than a half hour Sam, Jr., came bursting back again, all excited:

"Get ready! We're going! We're going!"

"Going — fiddle sticks!" Marion scoffed.

"Please explain, young man," Sam, Sr., quizzically demanded, a gleam of understanding coming into his eyes as he caught sight of tall, handsome Dick Roberts who had entered quietly after Sam, Jr., and stood just outside the door. Now he stepped forward.

"Merry Christmas, everybody!"

Marion's face was as rosy as Dick's as she grasped his extended hand. "I thought you were going to your sister's in the East," she stammered.

"I was," Dick laughed, "but business wouldn't let me. I don't mind now that I can be of service to you. Young Sam knew I hadn't gone, and he swooped down upon me and explained your predicament. And my plane is at your service."

"Your plane!" Marion gasped. "A plane in this snow?"

"Yes. My plane has skis, you know. I can take you one at a time and land you safely at your grandfather's."

Grandfather and Grandmother Clark were more excited than the others, if that could be possible, when Mrs. Sam arrived first and explained what was happening. Sam, Jr., came next; then Father Sam, and last of all Marion, all rosy and excited.

"Beautiful sight, wasn't it, gliding over the country?" Sam asked as he helped Dick off with his togs.

"Marvelous!" Then Dick added quickly, "But everything's wonderful to me today because it took a ride way up in the clouds to convince Marion that I could be her pilot for life. Congratulate me."

"You're a welcome new member of the family," Sam answered quietly and dropped his hand on Marion's shining hair.

"Mother and I thought this was the most beautiful Christmas we'd ever seen when we looked out of the window this morning," grandfather's eyes danced, "and we hadn't been riding in any airplane. When one feels right with the world it's easier to see the beauty of things we sometimes miss."

Sam, Jr., grinned at them all: "Some Christmas!"

What Roger Brought Home

A Christmas Story

by MYRTLE KOON CHERRYMAN

ROGER was always bringing home something! His twelve-year-old ideas of fun, household benefit and chivalry were sometimes embarrassing to the family. This time, it was a foreign looking woman, and luckily Mr. Damon was busy in the library, so he didn't have the shock of seeing her first.

Mrs. Damon, as she lay in bed, recovering from an attack of flu, had the news broken to her gently by Roger, who came in and closed the door after him.

"Mother, when I went down to the station to mail that letter on the train for Dad, I saw a woman sitting there crying, and I found out she'd come to work for some family, and they hadn't met her. She'd lost the address and could not remember their name—isn't that dumb? So I brought her home to have something to eat—she hadn't had any breakfast, and was afraid to go to a hotel."

"But, darling, did you tell her I was sick, and that our maid had to go home for a funeral?"

"Yes, I explained that we were in a pickle, too, and were trying to decide whether Dad and I should go to a hotel for our dinner."

"Well, you are going! It's foolish of you to stay home because the doctor won't let me get up yet. The turkey will keep, and if my fever doesn't return today, I can get up tomorrow; Mary will be back next day, and we can have our Christmas dinner then."

"Well, we'll see—but now I'm going to take her into the kitchen—she's Mrs. Schwartz—German, I guess—and get out the eggs and things for her. I told her I'd make her some toast, but that I wasn't very good on coffee. Dad could make it fine, but I was afraid he wouldn't be enthusiastic."

"Hardly!" exclaimed Mrs. Damon, remembering her husband's complex against doing anything not on the program. "Well, do the best you can, dear—but I hate to think of the way that kitchen must look after two days of male housekeeping."

She went back to her reading, and as the house was quiet, she finally fell asleep, making up for the hours lost worrying in the night about what her "boys" would do for holiday festivity in this bleak situation.

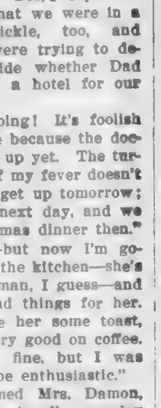
Two hours later she was roused by a gentle tap at her door, and in response to her "Come!" Roger entered, carrying a dainty tray, with a cup of steaming chocolate, and some attractive little cakes.

"She made it—the chocolate—and these are some kuchens, or whatever you call 'em—she had in her bag, like they make in the old country. And she's got all the dishes washed. I helped put 'em away—and now, what d'ye s'pose?"

"She has unfolded her wings and flown back to heaven!" guessed Mrs. Damon, sipping the most delicious cocoa she had ever tasted.

"No! She's got the turkey in the oven, and is getting the dinner! I'm going to the phone now to see if I can locate the folks that sent for her. She remembered the name—Martin. She told me half an hour ago, but I didn't want to hurry too much, because I wanted her to get the dinner cooked first."

"Oh, you scamp!" laughed his mother. "Go right to the phone and call up all the Martins. There are so many it may take until the turkey is done, anyway."



"Yes, it's pretty near ready now!"

Whether Roger artfully timed his search for lost employers or not, they were located just as dinner was ready, and were so jubilantly grateful that they told Mrs. Schwartz to serve the dinner and eat her own; they would send for her in an hour to cook their own evening meal. It seemed they had expected her at another station, and had worried all morning over what had happened to the poor woman, as well as what would happen to their own poor dinner.

When the angel-cook left at four o'clock, she would take no pay for her work, saying: "I hat a gut Christmus, und dis liddle boy vas my Kris Kringle."

Growing Old, and Christmas

by Noni Clack Bailey

MARTHA WHITESIDE had come from a family proud of its Pilgrim ancestry. The women had always been good-natured, well read, but prim.

Because of Dolly, Martha, who was widowed early, had drifted into journalism. Dolly grew up, married Fred Howard and moved away. Martha loved her, missed her; but was too busy to consider changed conditions or passing time.

Then on Christmas eve came a letter. Martha sat alone in her apartment reading it. The stork had come! She arose hastily and went to the mirror to see how she looked—being a grandmother. Reflected she saw youth and grace. But—she had hardly realized it—her hair was white!

A grandmother! Faintly there came a vision of her own grandmother. A dainty little woman she was, in black with a snow-white apron tied about her slender waist. Around her shoulders was a soft mull fichu. A little lace cap adorned her silver curls. It was a bit old-fashioned, she knew. Most other women, Martha remembered, had quit wearing caps and fichus; but somehow they seemed just right for the quaint little grandmother who seemed always giving one cookies.

Martha laughed, a rather startled laugh; for she suddenly realized—"Why, I'm as old as she was then!" A puzzled look came into her eyes. The puritan Martha was saying: "It's time to give up your work, don somber clothes and learn to bake cookies." The newspaper woman was answering: "Martha Whiteside, you'll do nothing of the sort. You'll go to the beauty parlor tomorrow morning and get a facial and have your hair bobbed!" The vision looked a little shocked, laughed and disappeared.

Decision and action were one with Martha. The hair was cut in the latest lines. The curls nestled into form like they were happy over her decision. It suited her active bearing, her youthful face and smart ensemble.

In the editorial room the sports editor was passing her desk as she removed her hat. "Hello, Bob-White," he cheerily greeted her, and the sobriquet stuck tight. That's where she got the pen-name for those clever articles she writes. Those who are near Then Comes the Dim Vision of Her Grandmother.

[illegible] business associates, friends [illegible] fondly call her "Bob-White."

It is Christmas, five years since [illegible] made her decision as to the role of grandmother she was going to be. Dolly and Fred with their Bobby and Jimmy are spending the day in Martha's apartment. A maid is converting a library table into a very proper one for dining, arranging a sumptuous Christmas dinner, just sent up from the caterer's.

The group is gathered about a tinseled tree in the bow window. There are remarkable toys—too many perhaps. Martha, fresh and pretty as ever, is sitting on the floor teaching Bobby how to bark at the miniature kennel and see the radio dog jump out at the sound of his voice. On the soft blanket before the fire Jimmy is gleefully chewing the toe off a rubber clown.

Suddenly Martha looks up at the panel mirror and sees the picture. Again comes the dim vision of her grandmother, smiling happily. Martha laughs back at the vision, then solemnly relates the story. Vividly she paints the word picture of the prim little grandmother and of her puzzled decision. "Was I right?" she asks.

Bobby kicks over his "structo" castle as he throws his arms about her and cries. "My Bob-White's tind o' dramma I want."

Dolly, half tearfully, replies: "It was a pretty picture, mother, but it needs an antique frame; doesn't fit into this apartment at all. Who could want you different? You're glorious!"

The maid announced dinner and Fred, raising a glass of sweet, sparkling cider, suggested a toast "to the most charming of charming grandmothers in memory, poem or song—to the one who laughs off her sorrows—shoulders her share of life and never has time to grow old. Long live our type, my dear, the adorable kind of grandma we can lovingly call 'Bob-White.'"

Sir Henry Cole, an English social and educational reformer, invented the first Christmas card. It was six inches long and four inches wide, and depicted in the panels formed by a leafy trellis two acts of charity—clothing the needy and feeding the hungry. Last year more than $100,000,000 worth of Christmas cards were sold in the United States.

The Christmas Candle Spelled Welcome Home

Following an old family custom, Katherine Blair placed a lighted candle in the window. Originally serving to guide lost travelers on Christmas eve, John Blair knew it had been placed there the last three years with Kenneth in mind—the son who was too busy to come home for Christmas.

The candle's bright light had brought cheer to many, so again Katherine placed one in the window. Perhaps this year it would be Kenneth it would guide home.

A whir of a motor overhead—the night mail was arriving. There might be a letter from Kenneth.

A car stopped before the house as John Blair started for the post office. A man rushed up the steps and through the open door shouting "Merry Christmas, Dad and Mother." Between embraces and handshakes he explained: "Found out late I could come home, so I flew down with the mail." The next words filled Katherine's heart with joy—"The old candle sure did spell 'welcome home' to me!" How glad she was the [illegible] was in the accustomed [illegible] Blanche Tanner Dillin.

The Extra Christmas Plate

By ROBERT J. C. STEAD

ON THE fourth Christmas in succession Nellie Martin set an extra plate. On past Christmases her husband and the two boys had pretended not to have noticed it. But this year Fred Martin, walking into the big dining room just as his wife was adding the finishing touches to her Christmas table, stopped when his eye fell on the extra plate.

"I think you shouldn't set it, Nellie," he said, gently. "It only reminds us of—things we would be better to forget."

Mrs. Martin brushed a capable, floury hand quickly across her eyes. Things would go blurry when she thought of Lucy.

"Let me leave it just once more," she almost pleaded. "It is more than four years now since Lucy went, and every day I am hoping for her back. Particularly at Christmas I like to think that her place is set and waiting for her. Oh, Fred, if we could let her know."

Fred's hand found hers, where it had rested a moment against the table for support. "I know," he said huskily. "I was wrong in turning her out as I did. I thought the honor of the family demanded it. I thought perhaps she would write; that is, if she is still . . ."

He left the sentence unfinished. Death might not have been unwelcome to Lucy, and four years of silence left them to draw their own conclusions.

"Lucy is too proud to write," his wife asserted. "And yet, I have always felt that sometime she would come back. Perhaps at Christmas.

That is the time of year when one just can't help thinking of home."

"If that Blake boy had been any good," Fred lamented. "She was just throwing herself away on him. That is why I gave her the choice of giving him up or getting out. I wanted to save her. And she got out."

"I know," his wife agreed. "You meant it for the best. Arthur Blake was said to be wild and useless, but the Blake's are a good family, and I've often noticed that boys of a good family generally straighten up again, even if they do go a little wild for a while. You know, Fred, when I married you there were people who said you were, well, just a little—"

"But I got a wife like you," her husband answered. "That makes all the difference."

"Yes, and Arthur got a wife like Lucy—if he married her," Nellie Martin insisted. "Let me leave the plate once more. I'm not giving up hope—"

At that moment the boys were heard coming in by the kitchen door. There were muffled voices, and a sound as though they were helping some one.

George, the elder, appeared in the dining room door, and his face summoned his mother.

"Some one here to see you, Mom," he said, in an awed voice.

In the kitchen Mrs. Martin found a woman sitting on a chair, her head turned away, her figure enclosed in a frayed cloth coat. Soberly she crossed the kitchen floor and turned the head to her eyes.

"Lucy!" she cried. "Lucy—"

The girl made as though she would speak, but seemed overcome. Her mother dropped to her knees beside her, chafing her hands, speaking words of endearment, crying for Fred and the boys.

"We found her in the snow, just between the barn and the house," the boys explained. "She seemed to have fallen there."

But right then Lucy seemed to come to life. She sprang to her feet.

"Mother—Dad—I can't keep it from you any longer. Please help me off with my coat."

Willing hands drew it from her shoulders. "Why, Lucy!" her mother exclaimed, "you are well dressed."

"Well enough, mother. You see, Arthur wanted to be sure how you would receive your erring daughter before he would agree to come in."

"Arthur!"

"Yes. He is in the cutter with little Nellie, just beyond the wind-break. Boys, will you run and tell him?"

The boys dashed off, but Fred Martin seemed the most excited of all. "Two extra plates, Mother!" he shouted. "Two extra plates—and a high chair!"

Christmas Still Means Same to Young and Old

Uncle Bill did not believe in Christmas. He thought it was just a scheme to make the merchants rich and the people poor. However, he loaded himself down with gifts for all the family and took the train to his sister's to spend Christmas with her and her numerous family. He had been so busy making money it was the first holiday he had taken in many years.

Christmas morning when they all gathered around the tree, and he saw the children's joy in that beautiful symbol of the spirit of giving, and in the toys which they received, he realized that in spite of the care-worn crowds of Christmas shoppers Christmas still meant to the children what it had meant to him when he was a boy. There was no commercialism in it.

And when he saw the older people's joy in the presents he had brought them, he resolved that in the future he would become a parents' Santa Claus, and make Christmas as happy for them as it is for children.—Harold L. Cook.

The Vagabond's Christmas

by HELEN GAISFORD

TRAINS scarcely slowed as they passed through Brayton, but the hobo was watching and dropped off in the snow. He picked himself up whistling, and approached the crossroads station. How well he remembered that station! Even the group of arguing old men seemed the same. Oh, but it was good to be home again, to spend Christmas where he had been so happy as a boy!

One of the men pointed a finger at him. "That," he said, "is what this country is coming to. Able-bodied men roaming the country in rags and tatters. Likely looking fellow, too. I tell you, it's high time congress—"

The vagabond chuckled and proceeded lightly down the road. Suddenly he checked himself. "George!" he said, "there's old Aunt Agatha's house. Why, Aunt Agatha was another mother to every boy in town. I wonder—?" He sprang up on the porch and knocked.

A sharp-faced woman opened the door. "Well!" she gasped; "no, I ain't giving victuals to tramps what can't come to the kitchen!" The door slammed, but he rapped again persistently.

Presently the woman reappeared. "I beg your pardon, ma'am, I'm looking for Miss Agatha Oberman. Do you know where I can find her?"

"She's been dead and buried these eight years. You an old friend of hers?"

"Yes, I'm Ben Martin—used to live in that house on the corner. I'm sure sorry she's gone." He moved down the steps. "Thank you anyway, ma'am, and a Merry Christmas."

A little of the zest had gone out of Ben Martin's return. He recognized the town drug store, just ahead, but now it carried a new sign—"Thompson's Pharmacy"—and in smaller letters, "W. J. Thompson, Prop." Inside

"No, Thanks; Too Used to Freedom," He Said.

—why, of course! "W. J. Thompson, Prop." was Bill!

"Bill," he called, "it's me—Ben Martin!"

"Ben!" Their hands clasped. "How well you look! But what on earth—let me give you a job."

"No, thanks; too used to freedom."

"Jove, Ben, you were a sickly kid—how did you do it?"

"Oh, it's careless sleep under the stars; going where adventure calls and doing what comes; eating plain food and—. But what of you and the rest of the boys?"

"Me? Oh, I'm married now and settled down. Tom's our doctor, but is away for the holidays. Bert and Pug have both married and moved away, and Fred is studying in New York. I say, I'd sure like to ask you out to Christmas dinner tomorrow, but, well, Martha's queer about some things."

"That's all right. I'll mosey around to the old homestead. My dear cousins still there?"

"Yes. Your uncle's gone, I suppose you know, but otherwise the family is the same as when the black-sheep nephew took off on his own. You'll surprise them."

"No doubt," Ben Martin replied, and made his farewells.

The old house on the corner was much the same. His knock brought a comely young woman to the door. "My dear Cousin Fanny," he said, "it's Ben. Give me a kiss, my dear, and announce to the family that the prodigal has returned."

The family had evidently already learned of his nearness and gathered in the hall. "I was wondering," he said at last, when the first greetings and questions had been exchanged, "whether you could put me up for a few days. I could, of course, sleep outside, if necessary."

"Unfortunately, Benjamin," his aunt replied, "every room is taken, as the family is all home for the holidays. Besides, there is the question of whether or not a—a wanderer—might have a proper effect on the younger members of the family, let alone the good name of us all. I think you'll understand—"

"I do." He drew himself up. "It was simply the sentiment. I felt I would like to spend Christmas here. But I shan't impose on you. Glad to have seen you all again."

He strode back up the road. "Hang sentiment," he decided, "I'm going south." That night's express bore an extra passenger.

Christmas and the Birds.

It is said that no peasant in Sweden will sit down with his children to Christmas dinner until he has provided food for the birds. The farmers erect poles in their dooryards to which sheafs of grain are bound, to provide for birds through the season when vegetation is covered with snow and ice.

In the Carpenter Shop Just Before Christmas

Long, long ago it was the day before Christmas; but the world was not celebrating Christmas then as we do now. In a little carpenter shop with crude tools and benches, an apprentice was quietly planing a sandalwood block to perfect smoothness. His tunic was drawn about his waist with a cord, his hair fell about his shoulders in dark silken curls, his boyish clear-cut features wore the expression of peace and love.

Suddenly a chisel slipped, a man cried out in pain. A carpenter had received a splinter full in the eye, piercing the eyeball. Others gathered about him to bind up the wound and sadly shook their heads. "He will be blind," they said.

The apprentice worked on calmly, almost smiling. A great physician came and removed the bandage. "The eye is sound," he said, "you must have been mistaken. It looks as if it had never been injured at all."

"I am sure it never was," said the man. But the other carpenters shook their heads and the apprentice went on smoothing the sandalwood.

'Twas Christmas eve.—Noni Clack Bailey.

May Enjoy Christmas Mansions in the Skies

It is not now the fashion to "keep both feet on the ground." In fact, it's hard to keep even one foot on the ground; the other one seems always to be up, getting into a car or an airplane; and pretty soon, there you are—both feet entirely, completely, distinctly off the ground!

What this condition may mean to future generations is hard to guess. Perhaps in a year or two people will make a date to celebrate Christmas three thousand feet up in the air. "Come on up!" friends may be urging. "We're going to shoot a party up over Mt. Washington. Dancing, charades and a fancy dress ball!"

And we shall be obliged to taxi in a small plane to the party and be whisked aboard, and worry whether we can get a taxi-plane home again.

And every cockpit will be trimmed in colored bulbs and the trade for Christmas trees will be literally going up! Plane trucks to deliver a fine spruce at the service entrance of a Flying Mansion in the Skies.

So don't stick to that old one about both feet on the ground. If you do, you'll find yourself frightfully low-down and left behind!—Martha Banning Thomas.

Youthful Employes Injured in Industry

Washington.—Machinery is responsible for more industrial accidents, proportionately, to boys and girls than to men and women, according to the United States women's bureau.

Many accidents to women happened to girls under 21, a much larger proportion of women than men being in this group. Young women were found to be permanently disabled more often than were elder women.

The bureau states that laws prohibiting employment of boys and girls under 16 in dangerous occupations should include all minors under 21, since young workers in general are likely to be more careless and venturesome than are adults.

is now doing in the case of automatic machinery. He has been told that while automatic, or labor displacing, machinery works temporary hardship, this will eventually be readjusted as prices drop and the demand for commodities increases. These, he is assured, will necessitate the re-employment of workers.

This consoling theory does not work—except to deaden man's will and to convince him of the futility of fooling with economic laws.

Observers are asking: If the economists' claim is true, will not profit-seeking employers install more automatic machines, rather than re-employ workers? Observers also note that the price of a commodity is of no interest to the worker who is jobless because of the machine's invasion.

Men are beginning to ask if it is "progress" to create huge armies of unemployed who must be cared for by the state while automatic machinery turns out goods that cannot be purchased by millions of workless.

The automatic machine and scientific processes are in their infancy. The cause of the present depression is low wages and displaced workers who are unable to purchase the machine's output that grows larger and larger. This position is held by organized labor and runs counter to the average economist, who holds that displacement of labor will be automatically solved.

Prof. Paul H. Douglas, of the University of Chicago, veered from the economists' position at the recent New York meeting of the Taylor society. He said:

"On every side the question is being raised whether technical and managerial improvements do not cause unemployment, after all."

The Douglas intimation that organized labor is correct is a reversal of the economists' machine-worshipping attitude.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Who said: "To the worker organization means bargaining power, security, self-respect. So long as he continues unorganized, he must accept terms of employment just as they are tendered"?

A.—Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, during the debate in the senate on the nomination of Judge Parker.

Q.—Is Wm. N. Doak the first secretary of labor to have been born in the United States?

A.—Yes. The other two secretaries were born abroad, William B. Wilson in Scotland, and James J. Davis in Wales.

Q.—Who is M. H. Hedges?

A.—Director of research, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

SEASON'S GREETINGS

CHRISTMAS!

Here's a Human Interest Story for Season of "Peace on Earth."

Out of work for the last three weeks, H. L. Griffis, Canadian war veteran, had the following advertisement inserted in a Baltimore, Md., paper:

"For Sale: A human being to the highest bidder. Am a strong, physically fit man. I offer myself to doctors, hospitals, etc., as a live specimen upon which to experiment. I will also go anywhere or do anything legitimate to earn a living for my wife and children."

Griffis is 44; he is a painter, and his wife and two children have been in Baltimore more than a year. He said he had never before been out of work.

What Next!

A new railroad coach driven by a propeller has been tested in Germany and seems to forecast railway travel at 100 miles an hour. The new car is cigar-shaped, 85 feet long, rests upon two trucks 65 feet apart, and weighs less than half than an ordinary railroad coach. It has a four-bladed airplane propeller and a 400-horsepower gasoline motor. The car, which has been described as a glorified bus with an airplane motor, has not been tried on curves—the reported 100 miles an hour was made on a straight track.

Not the Same Fate for Nice Christmas Cards

Mr. Christmas Card leaned heavily against the rack. The store was dark. The doors locked. "What a day! What a day!" he groaned.

Mrs. Christmas Card sighed loudly. "You have suffered no more than I have, my dear."

"What I object to are ladies who bend back my corners and peer at my picture, and rear my lines, and then lay me down again all askew," said Mr. Christmas Card.

"That's nothing! How would you like to have a little girl jam you back in your envelope so that she tore the red lining?"

Several other cards spoke up. They all complained of bad treatment.

"And we'll all be thrown in the waste basket, anyhow," finished Mr. Christmas Card. "Ho—hum . . . dear me!"

But next morning when both Mr. and Mrs. Christmas Card were bought by the same person, and later sent to the same family, and not thrown into the waste basket but set up on the mantel, they felt very proud.

"But we are very remarkable cards," they told each other, and waited for the next person to say, "How perfectly lovely these are!"—Martha Banning Thomas.

Disciple of St. Francis Had Christmas Spirit

"What in the world are you doing, Tommy?" asked Mrs. Rowland, hearing her little son on the cellar steps, the day before Christmas.

"Oh, sump'n," answered the lad, as he hurried into the kitchen.

As it was a time of Christmas secrets, Mrs. Rowland refrained from pressing the point and soon forgot it.

When the Christmas tree had been denuded of its fruit next morning, Tommy's older brother, Rupert, ran outdoors excitedly, returning soon, all aglow, and shouting:

"What do you think? You know I scattered those crumbs in the back yard, the way St. Francis of Assisi told folks to do for the birds' Christmas feast? Well, there were about a dozen sparrows there when I peeked around the corner of the house. I called 'Merry Christmas' softly so's not to disturb them, and they chirped back."

"Mine worked, too, I guess," said Tommy. "I went and looked on the cellar stairs first thing this morning, and every bit of cheese was gone that I'd put theme for the poor little mice!"—Myrtle Koon Cherryman.

Jim Arrives by Plane in Time for Christmas

It was Christmas eve. The Garner home radiated the spirit and happiness of Christmas. Soft lights filled the rooms; holly wreaths hung in the windows, and a great fire was blazing on the hearth. There was a family reunion; the children were all there now except Jim, and they were looking for him at any moment.

Then the telephone rang and Jim's voice came over long distance. He had taken a later train and had missed connections at Chicago—there was no way of getting there tonight. He expressed the deepest regrets; he had thought there was plenty of time to pick up a few last-minute gifts between trains.

Why, they just would be lost without Jim, they were all saying presently; sunny, careless Jim, who always was the life of the crowd. And he would miss the very best part of Christmas with them. It was just too bad this had to happen. But Jim, dear old Jim, always would be careless.

Then the telephone rang again, and they found he would be with them after all. A passenger plane was leaving Chicago and he would be home in two hours. The new mode of travel would bring Jim in plenty of time to make their Christmas reunion complete.—Katherine Edelman.

BUS ACT SIDETRACKED.

Washington.—The senate recommitted the long-pending Parker-Couzens bill for federal regulation of interstate passenger travel by motor bus. The 51 to 59 vote indicates opposition to the measure as now drawn.

The bill makes it illegal for bus lines and railroads to unite, and it is this feature of the bill that brought railroad lobbyists into the fight, according to Senator Couzens.

Let Me Walk With the Men in the Road

'Tis only a half truth the poet has sung
Of the "house by the side of the way."
Our Master had neither a house nor a home,
But He walked with the crowd day by day.
And I think, when I read of the poet's desire,
That a house by the road would be good;
But service is found in its tenderest form
When we walk with the crowd in the road.

So I say, let me walk with the men in the road,
Let me seek out the burdens that crush,
Let me speak a kind word of cheer to the weak
Who are falling behind in the rush,
There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend,
There's a cup of cold water to give;
And the man in the road by the side of his friend
Is the man who has learned to live.

Then tell me no more of the house by the road—
There is only one place I can live—
It's there with the men who are toiling along,
Who are needing the cheer I can give.
It is pleasant to live in the house by the way
And be a friend, as the poet has said;
But the Master is bidding us, "Bear ye their load,
For your rest waiteth yonder ahead."

I could not remain in the house by the road
And watch as the toilers go on,
Their faces beclouded with pain and with sin,
So burdened, their strength nearly gone.
I'll go to their side, I'll speak in good cheer,
I'll help them to carry their load;
And I'll smile at the man in the house by the way
As I walk with the crowd in the road.

Out there in the road that goes by the house
Where the poet is singing his song,
I'll walk and I'll work midst the heat of the day,
And I'll help falling brothers along—
Too busy to live in the house by the way,
Too busy for such an abode.
And my heart sings it praise to the Master of all,
Who is helping me serve in the road.

—Walter J. Gresham.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part V.
WHO IS THIS JESUS?

In our study of the question, "Who is this Jesus?" (before we take up Jesus' teaching concerning money) we will glance at the Palestine of His day.

WM. L. MOSS

The Jewish nation had known more than one foreign despotism, among them that of Cyrus, Antiochus Epiphanes and Herod the Great. From the rule of all such despots the nation had eventually emerged, but the imperialistic power of Rome was a tyrannical yoke that seemed destined to stay. Deliverance by natural means appeared impossible and belief in Israel's supernatural rescue from the power of her oppressor increased with each succeeding generation. In spite of their plight, the Jews felt they were still the Chosen Children of God and in His own good time He would deliver them. In fact, they argued that the very intensity of their suffering was an indisputable omen that presaged the immediacy of the kingdom of God.

Now the Jews did not possess the spiritual doctrine which allots to man a body and a soul, so their life and hopes were quite naturally centered largely in this world. Hence, in Jewish theology God was God of Israel only and the kingdom meant only one thing: Judaism itself. By Judaism the Jew meant the true religion, monotheistic worship and piety (to give them in the order of their historical development). As a consequence of this national piety, which reached its zenith by the era we are discussing, every fiber of the Jew's whole being was fired with political resentment against Rome. He could not tolerate the thought of political domination. It was abhorrent to his very soul. It was, moreover, contradictory to his religion—there was only one Ruler of Israel and He was the Most High God! The deeper the Jew's resentment burned Rome the higher mounted the ardor with which he cherished the hopes of a coming Messiah. Whenever one wanted eager listeners all he had to do was to declare the kingdom of God imminent! From every side would go up the cry, "When shall these things be?" The life of the Jewish nation for generations, therefore, was one sustained, terrified drama. Wars, massacres, uprisings, oppression make the reading of this period of Israel's history dark and unpleasant. Under intense national suffering the solidarity of the Jewish nation became as firmly fixed as a stone wall for all time. Though differing intellectually in their belief, the Sadducees, Pharisees, Herodians and Essenes were one in their worship of the same God and went as brothers into the Temple to Worship Him. Thus the whole nation, though broken up into a number of sects, prayed with one voice for the downfall of Rome and the restoration of Jewish national independence.

We shall now summarize: The era into which Jesus was born, we have seen from the above, was a prolonged drama of intense suffering—political, physical and mental—due to the Jews stubbornly identifying national politics with a national monotheistic religion. Messianic belief and expectancy was at a high pitch. Only God could save them, the Jews believed. Gradually throughout the land the cry arose that the Messiah's day was at hand! But he did not come—he did not come! Then . . . something happened . . . !

(To Be Continued.)

MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BOOKS TWO OUTSTANDING ATTRACTIONS

"Strictly Dishonorable," one of the most sensational stage hits of the past decade, and George White's "Flying High," no less an outstanding attraction, have been booked for early showing at the Memorial auditorium, the first named being scheduled for one performance on Christmas day, and the latter for January 2.

The great seating capacity of the auditorium, together with the new amplifying system in the city playhouse, provides keen enjoyment of the modern stage plays at a price within reach of all playgoers, and large audiences are expected to greet the two attractions booked.

One of the season's greatest delights will be provided by the clever and sophisticated comedy "Strictly Dishonorable."

An adroitly written comedy with shrewd character drawing and genuinely true atmospheric touches, this great smash hit is certain to convulse local play-goers as it has others throughout the country during the past two seasons.

The cast of the company has been specially chosen from the leading players of New York. Advance notices declare the comedy never lags, laugh following upon laugh until, at the final curtain and the inevitable happy ending, the audience is saturated with mirth.

"Flying High" is a scenic experiment for this type entertainment. In two acts and fourteen scenes it has the continuity of a musical comedy book, but the color, scenic change and speed of a revue.

"My first adventure along this line," declares Mr. White, "was in 'Manhattan Mary,' which worked out so well that I decided to go a step further with 'Flying High.' In my estimation, musical comedies have been several steps behind our present day revues. That they have not kept pace with the times either from a scenic or costume standpoint is regrettable, but that they have failed to live up to the fast pace of the modern revue is almost deadly.

"'Flying High,' therefore, represents what I think is a new standard in musical comedies, and will result in more glorious and peppier musical comedies for the future than have obtained in the past."

Guests Out of the Sky, Mother Cary's Xmas

"Mother" Carey was the little woman who lived all alone on the prairie raising bees. This year the snow was deep and hard-crusted. She was lucky to do the essential chores about the place, and it surely seemed she would spend Christmas alone.

Cheerful soul that she was, she decided to pretend she was going to have a guest. At noon a good dinner was ready, a cheerful fire was burning in her fireplace when suddenly she heard the whirr of an airplane motor—then it missed, sputtered and stopped. She ran to the window in time to see a forced landing almost at her very door.

The man and woman in the plane were safe, and when they came to the door, she knew them at once from pictures in the papers. "It's lucky for you to land safely and lucky I was childish enough to pretend. Come in, your Christmas dinner's ready."

A grateful pair they were, and Mother Cary a happy little old lady. She has never tired telling the story of how she expected a guest and two came out of the sky—for Christmas. —Noni Clack Bailey.

PRESIDENT

J. F. ANDERSON

The gentleman pictured above just can't seem to keep away from the office of president, Local 14, Boilermakers, having again named him to that office at their annual election this week. Mr. Anderson was the first president of the local lodge, and has served in some capacity almost continuously for the past forty years.

Painful Condition

"When I was just a girl at home," writes Mrs. B. F. Riggan, of Baird, Texas, "I took Cardui for cramping and pains in my side and back, and it helped me at that time.

"After I was married, I found myself in a weak, run-down condition. I suffered a great deal with my back, which was so weak it hurt me to get up or when I would stand on my feet. I fell off in weight.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

Who would think it? Christmas is almost here. Everyone hurrying about, doing their shopping. More business, more parties, more dances, more everything. The New Year just around the corner to be welcomed in various ways by our local musicians. At the Tivoli Miss Nell Brenizer, her orchestra and about ten entertainers will stage an elaborate prologue. The Bijou also will have a midnight matinee, followed by a dance. Jimmy Cox will collect his Collegians and trek to Dalton. Frank Worthy returns to his summer playground, the Signal Mountain Hotel. Johnny Mahoney and his band will play at the Hotel Patten. Miss Tommye Lasater will furnish music for the Shriners, and Wally Weber has the contract with the Golf and Country Club. The Auditorium will bring up an Atlanta orchestra. From all viewpoints, the New Year will be welcomed with a bang. Goodbye, 1930; your days are numbered.

Sandy tells us about Alex getting into family difficulties over the report carried in this column last week relative to a poker game held at the store between our secretary and members of Cox's orchestra. Jimmy's boys hastened to assure us that they were not gambling, as everyone has a chance in poker.

Sad to relate, all efforts to interest the local in miniature golf has met with little success. Sandy is so downhearted that he has about decided to give up the game and present his clubs to John Washburn. Along this line the writer is proud to say that the orchestra of which he is a member has unquestionably the best miniature players in the city. We hope that this statement is read by members of Worthy's or Cox's brigade, and that they have the strength and courage to doubt our word. Yes, it's a challenge!

Of special interest to the Society is the announcement of the Chamber of Commerce that they will bring the state band and orchestra contest for high schools to this city in the spring. Shelly Sands, popular local musician, is general chairman of the entire affair.

They say that Joe Leland, pianist, is going strong for the dancing game. He will show his wares in two numbers at the Bijou New Year's eve.

Monday evening the Christmas festivites will begin for Chattanooga society when the men's cotillion will entertain with a dance at the country club. Zez Confrey and his orchestra the second out-of-town band to show here this month, will play. It is regrettable that no local orchestra is thought to be capable.

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

Hurrah! the site for our new postoffice has been selected—Georgia avenue, Ninth to Tenth streets. It's a good location, but, I think they are making a mistake in not taking the Market and Broad street site with a whole block where nothing could crowd them and with four streets around it. I don't think there is any comparison in the two sites, but there is no use discussing it now.

They are hiring additional help at the office every day now for the Christmas rush.

The parcel post will be handled from the Chattanooga Transfer company building, corner Georgia and Tenth streets. With the Scotchman, J. T. McPherson, in charge, he will get them out.

On the 16th of December Mr. Walker, the superintendent, gave us two cards to register our time on, to be used on alternate days, and he was the first to make the mistake of registering on the wrong card. So Brooks, Miller, Echols, Massey, Connor, Long, got a demerit slip and had it filled out, giving him ten demerits. When presented to him he just okehed it and as an excuse he wrote on the back of it, "Please be lenient, as I have been associated so long with the bunch whose names appear on the other side that I am both a derelict and a liar."

With the old man (George) wearing his best soup-and-fish smile, and the good lady (Mrs. Forbes) nervous to the point of distraction for fear the former would commit some atrocious social error, this well-known couple last Sunday afternoon entertained almost a hundred friends from all walks of life at their North Chattanooga home, the occasion marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding.

The guests included practically all members of Circle club, and the following signed the register:

Sad is the day in any man's life when he becomes contented with the life he is living and the progress he is making.

If we had our life to live over again we would make many changes. As to the future, our life can be so that our friends will be glad we passed this way.

In our profession we come in contact with every kind of man; we come in contact with some really big men, and then we come in contact with some men who really think they are big but who haven't got to first base. The most pathetic thing I know of is to see a man who thinks he is too big to even talk to a man who perhaps has not had the same opportunity in life that he has had, a man like that may by scheme or trick get to the top, but he won't and can't stay there, for the law of averages is against him. The man for whom I have the profoundest respect is the man who has walked with the crowd in the road and who has really learned to live, and by his personality and the knowledge of things of this life has climbed all the way to the top.

Birds' Christmas Tree and a Cardinal Visitor

"Mother, can't we do something for the birds?" David, all snowy and rosy cheeked, came dashing into the bedroom where his mother was doing up Christmas gifts.

Jack, home from college, was close behind small David.

"Davie thinks the birds ought to have somethink special for Christmas, mater. How about fixing the fir tree on the lawn for them?"

"Splendid! We always put colored lights in it, and we can tie apples on it and little crusts of suet and those small branches of berries in the garage are really nature's provision for birds—"

"And we'll put crusts of bread on the limbs just like packages," David interrupted, eyes dancing.

After the birds were asleep Jack and David trimmed the tree.

"Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas!" the birds were chirping on Christmas morning and the neighbors as well as the family were watching with interest.

"But what's that bright red on the topmost branch?" David pointed excitedly. "Look! Look!"

"Can you beat that?" Jack exclaimed. "That's the cardinal that's been hanging around the last two years. He's come to the birds' Christmas tree."—Florence Harris Wells.

There would be fewer divorces if there were more laughter and less censure in homes.

STRIKERS TAKE SOLEMN VOW TO WIN UNION RECOGNITION

With Upraised Hands, Thousands of Danville Workers Pledge Faith to Continue Fight to Victory — Dramatic Meeting Effective Answer to Reports Walkout Is Weakening.

"I'd Picket Nickel If I Had One," She Says

(International Labor News Service)

Danville, Va., Dec. 16.—Some one here asked a girl striker if she had a nickel. Said the girl, quick as a wink:

"Lordy, if I had a nickel I'd put a picket line around it."

Strike repartee is of a brand all its own.

"You'll soon have to chop up your bed slats for fuel," Tillie Lindsay said to one man, half joking. He seriously replied:

"Goodness, Miss Tillie, we've done that. Just ain't a bed slat left in my house."

The other day feed for the cattle ran short. But Rufus Moseley reported that one of them found a mattress and started eating it. Even the cows are game.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 25.—President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, will speak in Danville, Va., to a meeting of the full membership of the striking textile union the evening of Dec. 30.

Announcement was made simultaneously in Washington and in Danville.

In Danville, according to an International Labor News Service staff representative, the union meeting greeted the announcement with a roar "that could have been heard two blocks away."

"President Green," said Vice-President Francis J. Gorman, of the U. T. W., making the announcement, "is to make a declaration of the utmost importance, which only he, as president of the American Federation of Labor, can make."

President Green in Washington informed International Labor News Service for The Labor World, that he intends to go to Danville to make a most important statement.

It is expected that President Green will make one of the most emphatic addresses he has ever made. Efforts are being made in Danville to find a hall large enough to accommodate the entire membership of the striking union.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Danville, Va., Dec. 25.—With upraised hands—the hands that ran the Dan River mills until tyranny drove them out on one of America's most heroic strikes—the members of the striking Textile Workers' union here stood and repeated a pledge to stay out until union recognition is achieved.

Vice-President Francis J. Gorman, of the United Textile Workers, led in repeating the impressive pledge, a pledge of loyalty, of determination, of the will to win, regardless of how long it takes.

The intoned pledge, recited phrase by phrase, "on my sacred honor," and on through the declaration, was said by men and women whose faces could been seen only through the sea of hands. From the stage, where Gorman stood, with solemn face reciting the sternly-worded bond, there seemed only an endless sea of the palms of hands. It was a picture of strength, a token of the impotence of mills without hands.

Consecration to Unity Voiced.

The chorus came back, phrase by phrase, in a rising crescendo of sound, pitched in the solemn key of consecration to unity in defense of a sacred principle.

It was the impressive answer to those who say the strike is weakening. It was a pledge to those throughout the land who are sending help. The words surged forth like a great poem, setting to music, in cadence after cadence, the courage of a people, the promise of a people and the hope of a people.

The solemnity and the sheer beauty of this dramatic ceremony was followed in executive meeting by reports of hard, cold facts, showing how tightly the lines have held. This correspondent heard the reports to that meeting. By actual count, it can be revealed, only eight out of 229 loom fixers, the former total working force, have gone back to work and of these eight only five have remained in the mills as strikebreakers.

Strike Grows in Strength.

The strike has grown in strength as the weeks have turned into months. These descendants of fighting men and heroic women grow in their conviction to fight until victory is won. They do not think about giving up. They merely wonder how long it will take the mill owners to discover that the union cannot be smashed.

"If there are representatives of Harry Fitzgerald in this hall," the meeting was told, "let them tell Fitzgerald that the American trade union movement will support this strike until you go back to work as a union," and the meeting roared its appreciative cheers.

It is a grim, hard fight, but each week sees its great flash of humor.

Cops and Soldiers Clash.

A little while ago it was the coming of the troops and the helter-skelter performance of the rookie police. Not long before that it was the incident about the little black and white animal that crept through a mill gate to be welcomed by a strikebreaker who thought a kitten had come to join them. The strikers said it was merely a little animal seeking its kind.

This week it is the incident of a policeman's broken nose.

The soldiers and the police don't get along together. Two groups of them came to blows and the police suffered heavily. Sergeant Baker's nose, broken in three places, probably never will be the same again.

Resentment is growing among the troops. They hate their assignment and in many ways they show their bitterness. They had hoped to go home for Christmas, but that didn't happen.

Union Not Concerned.

The union long since ceased to care whether they stay or go home. When a rumor was afloat that they might be recalled the union promptly wired the governor, saying in effect that the union wasn't concerned. President Buford Nash said that if the strikers had any notion of going back to work they'd be doing it now, while the soldiers are here to protect them. "Troops or no troops," he said, "they won't go back until the union is recognized."

Meatcutters "Given Air" By A. & P. Co.

Another chain store concern operating in Chattanooga has "given the air" to members of Meatcutters' Local 600, the A. & P. company, which operates four meat markets as well as a large number of groceries, emulating the example of the H. G. Hill concern which last year gave a "Christmas present" to its loyal employes by locking them out from their jobs.

The local A. & P. stores have been "on the ragged edge" of going non-union for many months, it was said, members of the union doing everything in their power to prevent a break.

However, doubtless after the fashion of many large corporations of this character, the management decided to "hold on" until Christmas season, and it is said the former loyal employes were locked out and replaced by men imported from Macon, Ga.

The Hill stores, at the end of one year's non-union operation, are said to operate now only three markets, and it is reported even these will be closed after the first of the year.

LOCAL 157 STARTS "BALL TO ROLLING"

Central Body Approves Resolution Calling for Probe of State Finances.

By way of supporting the position taken by the non-partisan committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night unanimously passed a resolution originating in Local 157, Operative Plasterers, and presented by delegates from that local, approving the activities of the recently-organized public emergency committee and urging these public-spirited citizens to probe conditions resulting from the political-financial tangle in the state government.

Attention is called to the fact that the alleged manipulation of public funds has interfered with the proper functioning of certain departments of the state government, and has "added greatly to an already serious condition of unemployment."

"It now appears," says the resolution, "that apologists for the state administration are determined upon a 'hush-hush' campaign to 'whitewash' all connected with the alleged conspiracy, with particular reference to the man who is now occupying the governor's chair," and the committee of 100 is offered every co-operation in demanding a searching inquiry into the financial affairs of the state.

The resolution also calls upon members of the legislature to co-operate in the efforts to place responsibility where it should be, and suggests that institution of impeachment proceedings against the present governor would meet with the approval of a majority of citizens.

Adopted by unanimous vote following its introduction by the plasterers' delegation and the reading of a communication from local 157 which accompanied it, the resolution follows:

Whereas, the state of Tennessee has been thrown into turmoil by alleged manipulation of public monies by a financial-political alliance, proper functioning of certain departments having been interfered with because of the apparent loss of millions of dollars due to unprecedented and unlawful use of the taxpayers' money, thus adding greatly to an already serious condition of unemployment; and,

Whereas, it now appears that apologists for the state administration are determined upon a "hush-hush" campaign to "whitewash" all connected with the alleged conspiracy, with particular reference to the man who is now occupying the governor's chair; and

Whereas, a committee of 100 patriotic citizens of Tennessee

PLUMBERS AND STEAMFITTERS ORGANIZE NEW STATE BODY

McKeehan and Stacy Assist in Formation of Tennessee Association—Latter Named Vice-President. Next Meeting in April.

E. S. STACY
Named Vice-President of New State Plumbers' Organization.

The Tennessee State Association of Plumbers and Steamfitters was formally launched at a meeting of representatives from eight locals throughout the state on Sunday morning, Dec. 7, at Nashville.

J. R. McKeehan and E. S. Stacy, representing Chattanooga local, No. 43, took a prominent part in the proceedings, and the latter was named vice-president of the new organization.

Representative Walsh, of the national association, assisted in the formation of the state body.

An executive committee, composed of Gerald Foley, Nashville, president; vice-president, E. M. Norment, Memphis; E. S. Stacy, Chattanooga; W. J. Kallock, Nashville; W. F. Horn, Jackson; G. W. O'Connor, Knoxville; W. S. Breeden, Johnson City, and J. E. Simpson, secretary, of Memphis, was named by the delegates.

One purpose of the organization, according to Mr. Stacy, will be to prevent the letting of contracts for state and municipal jobs to out of state firms. The adoption of a statute similar to the one in Texas regulating the public contracts will be urged, Mr. Stacy asserted.

The next state meeting of the executive board will be held in Nashville on the first Sunday in April.

The delegates from Chattanooga reported they were royally received by the locals in Nashville, and were entertained through their entire visit in the capital city.

Building Trades Form Organization

Preliminary steps toward the formation of a new Building Trades council were taken at a meeting of representatives of several of these crafts called recently by E. E. McDaniels, who organized the original council in this city more than a year ago.

Temporary organization was effected, and temporary officers named, and Mr. McDaniels announces that at a special meeting to be held Wednesday evening, Dec. 30, a permanent list of officers will be chosen and plans made for co-operation of these crafts in future. It is hoped that all building trades unions will be represented Wednesday night at the session which will be held at 11½ East Seventh street.

Temporary officers were reported by Mr. McDaniels as follows:

President—W. J. Davidson, Sheet Metal Workers.
Vice-President—J. A. Bowman, Carpenters.
Financial Secretary—Z. B. Bender, Carpenters.
Recording Secretary—T. G. Lieb, Sheet Metal Workers.
Business Manager—E. E. McDaniels, Electrical Workers.
Trustees—Ed Carroll, Electrical Workers, T. G. Lieb and Z. B. Bender.

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

Printers Lose Another Member

Chattanooga Typographical union, No. 89, lost another valued member Tuesday afternoon, when J. A. Medlock, member of the Times chapel, passed away at a local hospital following a short illness.

Mr. Medlock had been a member of the International Typographical union for many years, and had spent a considerable time in Chattanooga printing offices. He was an unusually proficient craftsman, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of his fellow workers to an unusual degree.

Funeral services were held from Chapman's Friday afternoon, with interment in Chattanooga Memorial park and the following members of No. 89 serving as pallbearers: Bryan Bush, W. A. Brooks, J. Wade Smith, Claude Springfield, Vernon Timmons and Joe Espy.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO SUPERVISE WAGES

Washington.—The first bill introduced by former Secretary of Labor Davis, after he was sworn in as United States senator from Pennsylvania, provides for federal control of wages paid employes on public buildings. The government would write into the specifications and contracts the various wages to be paid.

Such a law would end the practice of importing foreign labor at whatever wages contractors offer, said Senator Davis.

MILLER BROS. CO. ON 'UNFAIR LIST' OF LOCAL LABOR

Central Body Backs Barbers, Beauticians.

DEPARTMENT STORE HAS NON-UNION SHOP

Efforts of Weeks Fail to Bring Results in Unionizing Beauty Parlor.

After several weeks of efforts to unionize the barber shop and beauty parlor operated as a department in Miller Bros' store, delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night gave up all hope of inducing the department store management to join with its principal competitors in recognizing union labor in that department and declared the store "unfair to organized labor."

It was hoped throughout the negotiations that the Miller company would see its way clear to employ union operatives, particularly in view of the fact that agreement is said to have been blocked by only one point—and that a more or less minor one so far as it affected the operation of the Miller Bros. shop, but impossible for the unions to concede in fairness to those shops which have for months been operating with union craftsmen. However, management of the store stood firmly against this small concession, and executive board of Central Body reported Monday night it had, in conjunction with representatives of the two unions directly involved, exhausted every effort to compose the differences, and the vote to declare the store "unfair to organized labor" was unanimous.

The Miller Bros. company has in the past numbered many hundreds of friends among the working people of the Chattanooga territory, and necessity for the action taken Monday night was a matter for regret.

A campaign is being planned by which it is proposed to inform all members of organized labor and their friends of the fact that the Miller barber and beauty shop is operated non-union, and at the same time to give all possible favorable publicity to those concerns which have signed agreements and are operating strictly 100 per cent union.

Soddy Coal Mined By Non-Union Men

According to a letter from officials of the Soddy local of United Mine Workers, the works at that place are now being operated by non-union labor. The letter, read at Monday night's meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, asks that body to assist in informing trades unionists and their friends of the anti-union attitude of the new operators. Horace Humphreys, former sheriff, is named as local manager of the retail department, and it is said a yard has been opened on Main street. The letter from the Soddy local follows:

Soddy, Tenn.,
Dec. 15, 1930.

Mr. Matt Gerlach, Secretary Central Labor Union, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Sir—At a regular meeting of Local Union No. 890, U. M. W. of A., located at Soddy, I was instructed to write you and tell you that the coal being mined at Soddy at this time is being mined by unorganized labor, and the people that are having this coal mined refused to meet with our committee. We understand they have opened a coal yard on Main street, Chattanooga, with Horace Humphreys as sales manager. Now what we want you to do is to give this thing all the publicity you can. Hoping you can be of some assistance to us in this way, I beg to remain as ever,

Yours truly,
P. P. LYNCH,
Secretary L. U. 890, Soddy.

Boilermakers Send List of Officers

Following notation in these columns last week that Local 14, Boilermakers, had again named J. F. Anderson as president, officials of the local this week sent in a full list of those elected at the session which honored Brother Anderson, as follows:

President—J. F. Anderson.
Vice-President—J. L. Eckert.
Financial Secretary—Sam Hartman.
Recording Secretary—Robert Obar.

Races for treasurer and chairman of shop committee were both tied, and, according to the rules, the deciding vote was left to the district representative, who has not yet announced his decision.

THE CLIQUE

What is the clique? It is a body of men, who attend every meeting, not just now and then, who don't miss a meeting unless they are sick. These are the men the grumbler call the clique; who don't make a farce of that sacred word "Brother," who believe in the motto, "Help one another;" who never resort to a dishonest trick; these are the men some call the clique. The men who are seldom in arrears in their dues and who from the meeting never carry news; who attend to their duties and visit the sick; these are the men the cranks call the clique. We all should be proud of members like these. You may call them the clique or whatever you please; they never attempt any duties to dodge; these are the clique that run most every lodge. But there are some people who always find fault and most of this kind are not worth their salt. They like to start trouble, but seldom will stick. They like to put all the work on the clique.—Ex.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Where has a law recently been passed forbidding the eviction of unemployed persons from their homes?

A.—In South Australia, a state of Australia, where a new law prevents landlords from evicting or taking legal proceedings against unemployed tenants. The tenant has only to satisfy a magistrate that by reason of his unemployment, he is unable to pay his rent and that he is making every reasonable endeavor to obtain work.

Q.—Have pocket knife workers a union?

A.—They were formerly organized as the Pocket Knife Blade Grinders and Finishers' National union. The organization disbanded in 1917 and many of its members were absorbed in the Metal Polishers' International union.

Q.—What labor organization has its national headquarters in East Liverpool, Ohio?

A.—The National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, whose trade jurisdiction is the pottery industry.

MISSES PEACE CHANCE.

Four thousand striking textile workers in Danville are willing to submit their wrongs to any group of fair-minded citizens. They have been rebuffed by the mill management.

The governor of Virginia made a similar request and he received the same reply. After this snub to the chief executive of a great commonwealth, the governor placed troops in Danville at the request of those who spurned his peace offer. The usual plea for soldiers was advanced—threats and disorders that can easily be staged by private detectives who prosper in days of turmoil.

The conduct of these Danville strikers does not support charges that are placed at their door.

Men who plead for conciliation and mediation to end a strike do not need to be held to law and order by rifles, bayonets, gas bombs and machine guns. The governor of Virginia is within his legal right when he orders troops to Danville, but a courageous state executive would declare he has a higher obligation to fulfill. Such a man is interested in human rights and social justice, not in the triumph of autocratic mill barons, who declare, as Louis XIV of France, "I am the state."

The governor should refuse to be a party to the mill barons' policy. When they asked for troops, he should reply: "You must accept conciliation and arbitration. These bring harmony and concord. Soldiers bring an outward peace, but not the tranquility that is the basis for understanding between men."

The nation would applaud such sentiments, but only brave men express. By such action Gov. Pollard would become a national figure and the grand old state of Virginia would step into her place among the first of the commonwealths in the settlement of industrial disputes. Instead of this policy, the mill barons depend on troops to smash the strike.

Organized labor can defeat this program by supporting strikers who are battling for the right of voluntary association—the first elemental of Americanism.

THE UNION IS ALSO HUMAN.

Five union bricklayers were killed a few days ago when a scaffold collapsed at the tenth floor. It was one of the recurring tragedies of industry.

Because these men were union members mortuary benefit checks went immediately to the bereaved families. Moreover, the international union of which they were members dispatched representatives to see to it that all immediate needs were cared for.

There were helping hands, sympathetic hands, for these bereaved families. Had the victims of the accident been nonunion workers there would have been no organization to step in at once with help and sympathy. It would have been just a case of five deaths and five grief-torn families.

The union is a great human institution as well as a great economic organization. No wage earner has any business being anywhere except in the union of his trade or calling.

One Merry Christmas, One Happy New Year

"Mother, mother, Mrs. Thimble is going to give Miss Jenny a wonderful Christmas present—the thing she wants most in all the world—do you know what it is?"

"Why, no, Johnnie, I'm afraid I don't. What is it?"

"Why, it's two children; it's twins."

"What do you mean, Johnnie? Miss Jenny isn't married. She can't have any children. I know she has always wanted some, but she wouldn't adopt any, and now she is so old and all—"

"Oh, mother, Johnnie; don't talk nonsense."

"That isn't nonsense, mother. Of course, Mrs. Thimble didn't say she was going to give Miss Jenny any children, but she did say she was going to get her a lot of presents and nice things, such as a sweater, and a lot of things she can't afford for herself, and that she will have at least one Merry Christmas and one Happy New Year in her life, and I just figured out that that was the best kind of twins an old woman like her could possibly have."—Harold L. Cook.

Christmas Day Dreams of the Long, Long Ago

The old man sat nodding by his dying fire. Outside the wind howled and rattled the windows, but within—he smiled. Here was Tom, dear boy, blowing up the fire while his mother trimmed the Christmas tree. And then their friends came trooping in, all their friends of the dead long ago. And Alice, his baby, Alice, as well as Alice again in pigtails, and Alice again quite grown up and in love with the man who broke her heart. All of them trooped about, now fanning the fire, now hanging the walls with greenery, and all the time laughing and talking. Such talk, and such laughter!

The door opened and his landlady entered. "I've brought you a bit more wood, sir. I thought you might be cold, sitting here all alone."

"I haven't been alone. I've had a lot of company—lot of company—"

"Well, now," she said, "that's nice," but once outside his door she shook her head. "Poor dear! Quite childish!"

Yet who shall say the dream is not reality, and reality a dream?—Helen Gaisford.

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part VI.
JESUS, THE ANOINTED OF GOD (Part 1).
WHO IS THIS JESUS?

In the conquered province of Palestine, groaning under the iron military rule of Rome—to a pious-minded woman and hard-working carpenter, people of lowly yet respectable station in life, hailing from Nazareth in Galilee (a city of ill-repute in the most despised subdivision of that conquered province)—in an outbuilding attached to an unpretentious inn in the little city of Bethlehem — to the Virgin Mary and Joseph, her husband—in the days of Herod the Great and Augustus Caesar—there was born unto all mankind a Child, and they called His name JESUS.

* * *

As the years went on this Child grew in stature and in favor with God and man. His life was short, but thirty-three years from the lowly Manger to the Cross, and for the most part obscure, the world having only actual records covering about fifty-one days of it. Born an exile, He lived to be enshrined in the hearts of unnumbered millions. The exact day and hour of His birth is unknown, yet men reckon the course of their history as either before or after His birth. The mighty empire of the imperial Caesars has been obliterated, but His Kingdom survives and has grown infinitely greater in extent than their ever was. Forced to associate with harlots, publicans and sinners while He lived, finally suffering an ignominous execution on the Cross between two common thieves, by the quality of His mind and soul He has become the Light of Life of mankind. Charged by the self-appointed religious teachers of His day with perverting the very Word of God, it remained for Him to reveal to men the infinite mercy and protecting fatherhood of God. Cast out of the ordinary circles of social respectability by the bigoted religious devotees of His day, with nowhere to lay His head, He has been welcomed joyously for over nineteen hundred years into the lives of untold multitudes. When He died, His sole estate was a single seamless garment, which was taken from Him at the foot of His Cross, yet He still possessed that of which no man could rob Him—purity, goodness, gentleness, self-abnegation and "the peace that passeth understanding." Branded by His enemies as One defeated in His life's purpose, He has made it possible for men to triumphantly shout in the hour of their death:

"O grave, where is thy victory;
O death, where is thy sting?"

Despised, rejected, traduced by the high and mighty dispensers of religious "truth" in His day and time, at last Crucified at their instigation, He has lifted His nail-pierced hands aloft for over nineteen centuries, and kings and emperors, queens and empresses, the rich and the poor, the educated and the illiterate, the whole and the maimed, the sick and the dying, the froward and the meek have fallen at His feet in adoration and cried out in intense joy:

"MY LORD AND MY SAVIOR, JESUS CHRIST!"

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Employers who haven't the nerve to reduce wages openly are trying mean and insiduous methods of cutting pay scales. One method is that of firing and rehiring at lower rates. This scheme is easily worked where there is a range in pay. The workers receiving the highest pay in a particular range are laid off and others are taken on at the minimum for beginners. Another scheme is to replace men with women workers, paying the women less than the men.

As between employers who frankly cut wages and those who do it indirectly, the frank ones are to be admired. At least they have the courage to do their dirty work openly, where all the world may see and pass judgment.

"It is preposterous to demand of the accused that he place his finger on the real culprit in order to exculpate himself," Justice Langdon, of the California supreme court, said, in dissenting from the majority opinion of the court denying Warren K. Billings' application for a pardon.

Yet that is exactly the attitude of the court in the Mooney-Billings case. The court says in effect that because Mooney and Billings can't name the man who were actually guilty of the Preparedness day parade bombing they must stay in prison for life, in the face of overwhelming doubt as to their guilt. As the Baltimore Sun remarks, after quoting from Justice Langdon's opinion, "Further comment on the present state of California judicial thought would be superfluous."

Reading, Pa., whose city government is composed of trade unionists, has set an example that other cities might follow with benefit to themselves.

Despite the business depression, which has hit Reading hard, the city has done much to increase its recreation facilities since the slump began. The school board built seven wading pools and eleven tennis courts and developed two school playgrounds, while the city built one wading pool and constructed, beautified and fenced a new $100,000 play area. The budget of the department of public playgrounds was almost doubled and $25,000 was appropriated to the department of parks and public property for the improvement of old playground sites. The city also spent $4,000 to build a miniature golf course and turned it over to the recreation department for operation.

GOMPERS MEMORIAL APPROVED

Arrangements have been completed for the erection of a memorial to the late Samuel Gompers, who served so many years as president of the American Federation of Labor.

The model for the memorial submitted by Robert I. Aitken, the sculptor, has been approved by the fine arts commission and the Samuel Gompers memorial committee, and the place where it is to be erected has been selected.

It will be in a triangle, a block from the American Federation of Labor building. Just across the street there is another triangle in which a statue of that famous fighter for liberty, Robert Burke, will face that of Gompers. One of the most traveled streets in Washington passes between the two triangles.

Above the seated figure of Mr. Gompers is the altar of justice, at which he persistently pleaded for justice to the wage earners during his long lifetime. To the right as we look at the picture stands the figure of Liberty and behind her that of Justice.

Across the altar of Justice two figures symbolic of labor are clasping hands with Justice. The mother holding her child to her breast symbolizes the protection of the home. The child at the right with head bowed illustrates the appeal being made for protection of children from industrial exploitation and for which Mr. Gompers led the battle of labor.

Many artists have praised the model of the memorial which will forever stand to remind the people who are now living and those who will come hereafter of the work of Samuel Gompers in the interest of liberty, justice, the home and the children.

It will require between two and three years to complete the memorial.

The labor movement of the country has taken a deep interest in providing for the memorial.

High Buying Power Could Avert Recurring Idle Crises, Say Clerics

Washington, Dec. 4.—"The workless must be cared for, but more than temporary alms is necessary; justice should be done," said Archbishop Hanna, of San Francisco, who has issued a statement on the "present grave situation of unemployment" that was discussed at the recent general meeting of cardinals, archbishops and bishops of the United States, held at the Catholic university, this city.

The clergymen agreed that charity is insufficient. These sentiments were expressed by Archbishop Hanna:

"This unemployment returning again to plague us after so many repetitions during the century past is a sign of deep failure in our country. Unemployment is the great peace-time physical tragedy of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and both in its cause and in the imprint it leaves upon those who inflict it, those who permit it and those who are its victims, it is one of the great moral tragedies of our time.

"People are suffering and we are obliged to help them. But our country needs, now and permanently, such a change of heart as will, intelligently and with determination, so organize and distribute our work and wealth that no one need lack for any long time the security of being able to earn an adequate living for himself and those dependent upon him."

The archbishop calls attention to the joint pastoral letter issued by Catholic bishops at the close of the World war, in which it was declared that a living wage "is only the minimum of justice," and that high wages is the most effective instrument of prosperity.

"Had this passage been heeded during the dozen years since it was written," asserts Archbishop Hanna, "it would in itself have gone far to prevent the calamity we now undergo.

"'The human and Christian, in contrast to the purely commercial and pagan, ethics of industry,' to quote again, will both cure our country of our present malady and prevent its cruel recurrence."

Ballots Will Drive Pollard Out Of Public Life, McGrady Declares

Danville, Va., Dec. 10.—Blistering criticism of Gov. Pollard for sending troops to Danville was made by Edward F. McGrady, acting chairman of the southern organizing committee of the American Federation of Labor, in addressing a big meeting of textile strikers here.

Pointing out that 12,000 human beings—blood descendants of the Revolutionary and Confederate soldiers—were fighting in Danville for industrial justice and a little better living, McGrady declared that the governor of Virginia had answered their prayer by sending 800 bayonets, guns and bombs in the hands of soldiery.

"The action of the governor," McGrady said, "was unwarranted, un-Christian, un-American and unforgiveable. There will come a day when this governor will come to the people in search of a higher office and we will meet his 800 bayonets with 50,000 ballots and drive him out of public life permanently."

In the course of his talk, McGrady praised the heroism of the Confederate troops who fought for a principle that they held dear and said that he could understand why the men and women before him, blood of their blood and flesh of their flesh, were in their day willing to fight for the greatest principle that a human being can have, the right to liberty, which means industrial liberty.

McGrady's words brought the "rebel yell" from the enthusiastic audience, which repeated the yell three times.

"The answer of the working men and women to the governor's military threat is the rebel yell heard in the streets of Danville," McGrady said in closing. "Our brothers in every city, town and hamlet of the south will hear this vell and re-echo it and the south will stand by its own."

This called forth another yell, which was heard for blocks.

Santa Will Provide an Up-to-Date Christmas

Santa Claus is a decidedly progressive old chap. He keeps strictly abreast of the times, and in his work employs only modern-day methods. Once he went plodding over the fields in a sleigh no faster than reindeers could gallop. It took him a long time but he managed to make the rounds.

Then came the automobile. Santa got a big red one and hitched trailers on behind. He could get around faster. He carried bigger loads, got to more homes and made more children happy. When airplanes flew over the North Pole Santa got another idea. He believed that planes would be better for his long trips and for skipping from housetop to housetop. He is hardly built for an air pilot, but nobody flies faster nor farther than plump, old Santa.

He does not fancy zeppelins, but he is sure that in another year or two he may be able to broadcast Christmas to the children by radio. As soon as carriers are invented to fly through the air, directed and landed by radio energy, old Santa will sit on his mountain of northern ice and broadcast an up-to-date Christmas to all the world. —William L. Gaston.

Led by the Christmas Spirit, They Rejoiced

Sitting before the blazing fire and listening to the merry carolers without, Martha Barrons felt all the joy of the Christmas season. What a wonderful time it was! She smiled happily at her husband and son. Then her thoughts went back to that memorable Christmas years ago when something had led her steps to the Beacon Baby home. Again she looked into the eyes of a blue-eyed baby and felt that sudden desire to have him for their own. George had readily agreed to the adoption. Bless his heart, he would have agreed to anything to make her happy. But the baby had brought him happiness, too. He was now one of the ablest lawyers in town and had recently attracted nationwide attention in winning a complicated case. And the love and comradeship he had given them through the years was as deep and fine as if he had been their very own.

Truly, Martha Barrons thought, as the voices of the carolers faded into the night, it was the spirit of Christmas that had directed her steps on that long-ago Christmas.—Katherine Edelman.

MUNICIPAL PLANT DONATES CURRENT

Penn Yan, N. Y.—This village, which operates a municipal electric plant, gave consumers a Christmas present in the form of a receipted bill for December electricity.

The gift follows a substantial reduction in rates the first of the month. Profits from the municipal plant are so large that the village can easily afford to send receipted bills to its 1,700 customers.

MORE ABOUT GOV. HORTON

has been organized to enforce a thorough and complete investigation of the financial affairs of the state, and demand for the people an accounting from those who have been entrusted with the administration of public monies and affairs; therefore, be it

Resolved, that this body, representing a considerable group of taxpayers and citizens, hereby offers its full co-operation and sympathy with the purposes and activities of the voluntary committee of 100; that while we hope a searching inquiry into the conditions leading up to the present state of affairs will develop nothing worse than the already well-known and pitiful incompetency of our present governor, should criminal conspiracy be shown, we pledge to the committee of 100 every resource at our command to insure that the guilty be brought to the bar of justice and properly punished for their misdeeds; be it further

Resolved, that we call upon our representatives in the state legislature to co-operate in the effort to place responsibility for the shameful conditions which have been forced upon the people; and we suggest to our lawmakers that institution of impeachment proceedings against the man now occupying the governor's chair would in our opinion be heartily approved by a vast majority of the citizens of Tennessee.

SODDY MINERS ALSO TAKE ACTION.

We, the members of Local Union No. 890, U. M. W. of A., Soddy, Tenn., urge an investigation of state rule. Recent developments relative to the handling of the state finances by the state funding board, of which Gov. Horton is chairman, justifies our opposition to him. It is our opinion that so long as he remains governor of Tennessee the best interest of the people will not be served. The members of this organization are citizens of Tennessee. We stand for law and order. We want the government of our state honestly and efficiently administered. We want an honest investigation by the coming legislature to determine who is responsible for alleged manipulation of the moneys of the taxpayers of Tennessee. We want to know what influence caused the funds of the state to be placed in certain allegedly favored banks for the alleged financial profit of certain individuals. If such investigation shows anyone guilty of criminal acts we demand that the guilty ones be brought before the bar of justice.

CHILDREN'S SAVINGS DRAWN OUT BY PARENTS

New York.—Unemployed fathers are forced to reach for the pennies and dimes of their children that are deposited in savings banks.

The American Bankers' association states that children's savings declined $2,849,400 during the year ending June 30 last, despite increased enrollment of children in public schools.

"There can be scarcely any doubt of the necessity of parents to dip into the savings of their children," the bankers state. "Many banks, in forwarding their statement of results, have said that deposits are unsatisfactory because of the extent of unemployment in their respective areas."

Over 8 Billion Dividend Total For 12 Months

1930 Interest and Dividend Roll May Lead Previous Year's Total by 8.3 Per Cent, According to Commerce Department.

While unemployment mounts, dividends and interest also seems to mount, according to an alaysis made for International Labor News Service and The Labor World by Ralph F. Couch, statistician. Mr. Couch's findings follow:

By RALPH F. COUCH

Dividend and interest payments of 1930 will aggregate $8,200,000,000, or at least 8.3 per cent more than in 1929, according to reports received by the United States commerce department from private agencies. The total of such payments in 1929 was approximately $7,571,000,000.

These data cover dividends paid by principal corporations of the country on stocks plus interest on bonds of both private and governmental issues. The total given for 1930 includes all announcements thus far made of payments to be made during December, 1930. The December distribution may be increased by payments yet to be reported.

The increase in 1930 is believed to be due to the increasing amount of securities outstanding and to the fact that some corporations have paid dividends out of surpluses accumulated in previous years.

The record of payments by months in 1930 compared with 1929 is shown in the following table in millions of dollars:

Month	1930	1929
January	$1,120	$925
February	517	440
March	608	529
May	570	490
April	745	679
June	721	658
July	916	898
August	424	410
September	524	530
October	763	768
November	579	553
December	713	691
Totals	$8,200	$7,571

From these data it will be seen that disbursements of 1930 exceeded those of 1929 in all months except September and October.

Business Men Fail To Hide Low Wages

Minneapolis.—A questionnaire filled out by 20,000 jobless workers in this city reveals why the Citizens' Alliance opposed the city council's plan to have former wages of the unemployed listed.

"These brief biographies explain why the mayor appointed a committee of forty-four anti-unionists to gum up the registration," says the Minneapolis Labor Review.

"And most of all they show why the questions as to hours and wages and length of time employed in the past year were left off the blank of that committee."

The city council's regulation, however, exposed the low wage system of business men who maintain the Citizens' Alliance to war on trade unions.

A few of the cards from one ward show:

Ninety-one hours a week for 29 cents an hour to a former employe of the Osborne-McMullen Elevator.

George H. Lees, nonunion plumber, paid a worker $10 a week.

Former night watchman employed by the chamber of commerce paid $10 a week.

Worked 44 hours a week for Sears-Roebuck for $16 a week.

Worked 48 hours a week for National Biscuit company for $18 a week.

Worked 72 hours for National Biscuit company for $22.50 a week.

Worked 45 hours a week for $11 at Farnham Printing company.

Worked 70 hours a week for Trackage Oil company for $100 a month.

Worked as office employe of Street Railway company 54 hours a week for $20. President of this concern receives $70,000 a year.

Worked 54 hours a week for $17.50 for Northwestern Metalware company.

Millions Ready For Expenditure But Await Plans

Architects, in Plea for Immediate Building, Reveal Cause for Tie-up of "Endless" Sums of Public Funds.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 4.—Revealing the reason for inability to expend "endless millions" of public money at once, while it is needed as a spur to employment, the directors of the American Institute of Architects, meeting here, adopted the following statement on the building situation presented to it by its president, Robert D. Kohn, of New York. It says in part:

"The unemployment problem is a serious one in all parts of the country. An excellent committee, meeting in Washington under the chairmanship of Col. Woods, is trying to finds ways to meet the emergency. One of its recommendations is that we must speed up the public works programs of cities, states and the federal government. We can help in that direction, but in other ways as well.

"Building costs are low, lower than they have been for years. Labor is anxious to work, and efficient. This is surely an excellent time to go ahead with building wherever there is an immediate need for space or one that will exist within the next few years. Why not take advantage of the low prices? There are many hospitals, schools and other institutions which need new buildings or rebuilding or alteration. Private residental work and housing of other kinds are much needed in certain parts of the country. For all such work the present time is most propitious. It is variously estimated that costs are down from 12 per cent to 18 per cent on ordinary construction from the high of 1929 and in certain parts of the country on some types of work the cost is down 20 per cent.

"We have heard of a number of corporations that have acted promptly on this situation. An important educational institution in the middle west is starting its building program, paying interest on borrowed money (in advance by two years on the proceeds of a bond issue) because the interest charge of this borrowed money will be more than met by the saving in building costs. And this institution will have the use of its new building two years sooner to boot.

"One difficulty in the present situation is that arising from the absence of plans for many of the projects for which appropriations have been made. Endless millions of dollars are available for federal, state, county and municipal projects, but for many building projects there are no plans and specifications. They should be promptly taken in hand and the architects of the country can surely be of assistance in getting them started."

Low Business Honor In Textile Industry

New York.—Business men in the textile industry were classed without honor by Charles L. Bernheimer, of the Council of Textile Association Executives, at a meeting attended by 400 textile business men.

The indictment was extended to other industries by the speaker, who indicated that certain groups have little business honor.

"Lying and stealing, and not overproduction or the Sherman anti-trust law, are the bane of the textile world," said Mr. Bernheimer.

"We say misrepresenting, misinforming, misstating, pretending, when in reality we mean lying. We say copying, reproducing, cheapening other peoples' hard earned property in styles and ideas, when in reality we mean stealing.

"What I say of the textile industry applies to a great many other lines of business and adversely affects the consuming public. Only because of my long association with the textile industry do I refer to it. What I am certain applies to textile, I am very sure is true of other industries."

Mr. Bernheimer is confident that leaders in industry will condemn the unmoral practices and that they will refuse to have business relations with liars and thieves.

cGrady Shows How Wages Lag Behind Profits or Representative Declares Corporations Should Lay Aside Reserves to Protect Labor in Hard Times.

By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelphia, Dec. 31. — Strongly ing that corporations lay aside re- es from earnings to protect the kers during slack times, Edward McGrady, speaking at the Labor titute here, revealed figures which w in vivid fashion how far work- wages have lagged behind divi- ds.

McGrady, who is legislative com- eeman of the American Federa- of Labor and acting chairman of southern organization committee he federation, cited numerous in- ces of wealthy corporations which e ruthlessly cut wages, but main- ed or increased dividends.

Every corporation recognizes a re- nsibility for dividend payments to stockholders," McGrady said. He inued: "Knowing that business ression follows business prosperity rely as night follows day, corpo- ns lay aside reserves from sur- earnings to carry over the dull ds. Thus in 1927, according to United States income tax returns, corporations making profits unting to $8,982,000,000 paid out 6,000,000 in dividends. The other 6,000,000 was held in reserve, nothing was laid aside for the ter, who by his labor helped this endous reserve.

Pay Down, Dividends Up.

Wage payments in industry in the half of 1930 were below 1929 by 00,000, while dividend payments eased over 1929 by $350,000,000. e earners' incomes were cut 12 ent while stockholders' increased er cent. The same thing happened ilroads. The first half of 1930 payments to railroad employes below 1929 by $78,515,000 while idend payments increased over by $39,900,000. That is, the ers' incomes were cut 6 per cent e payments to stockholders in- ed 18 per cent. Thus while be- n 3,500,000 and 5,000,000 wage ers were out of work and those kept their jobs had their in- e cut by part-time work, stock- rs were receiving higher divi- s than ever.

Figures for dividend payments of rporations for the eleven months 30 were above 1929 by $846,- 00. Dividends paid in 1929 (11 months) amounted to $3,123,- 00 and in 1930 to $3,740,000,000. g interest payments to divi- s the figures are $7,287,000,000 leven months in 1930 as against 2,000,000 for the same period in an increase of $405,300,000. We te the decrease in wage pay- in all industries in the first r months of this year has been t $6,000,000,000.

Many Dividend Increases.

hile millions of working men omen were walking the streets ness in the past eleven months, ms increased dividends over 00 paid extra dividends; 932 tock dividends. In other words, were 2,128 firms paying in- dividends.

addition to men and women g no jobs at all, wage cuts have forced upon defenseless men and n workers in spite of the fact he industrialists of this nation ed the president of the United that during this depression would not be cut.

me read to you a few, a very acts as to wage cuts that were arranted.

International Harvester company ages from 20 cents to $1 a day but maintained the same divi- of $2.50 in 1930 as were paid . The usual quarterly divi- for January, 1931, has been de- and shows no reduction. In meantime, the company is offer- make loans to its employes at sonable' rate of interest.

lared employes of Chrysler ration were forced to take a 10 nt cut in the first part of July t the company paid the same nds for 1930 as for 1929—$8.

Rubber Wages Slashed.

Goodyear Tire and Rubber ny paid twice as much in divi- in 1930 as in 1929, but cut the of the sales and office em- 10 per cent the last of August. ion were $2.50 in 1929 and $5 0.

aconda Copper company did not dividends (87½ cents a quar- until November and then only 5, but in May the wage earners take a cut of 50 cents a day.

stern Rolling mills cut the of 700 workers 10 per cent in even though it maintained divi- rates throughout 1930.

sh Copper company paid divi- of $10 per share in 1930. Al- this is a reduction from the id in 1929, it is an unusually ividend. Both of these are the declared rate of $2 quar- and the same rate is continued . Dec. 31 payment. Nevertheless, wages were cut 40 to 50 cents a day in May.

Another Rubber Wage Cut.

"Firestone Tire and Rubber company cut wages at the end of August. Last year it paid the unusually high dividend of $8. At the end of 1929 there was a five for one split, but the company maintained the same high rate of $2 a quarter in 1930, or 40 cents per share quarterly on the new stock. In October the dividend was cut to 25 cents quarterly.

General Motors paid the customary $3 dividend in 1930, but several of its component companies, notably Fisher Body corporation, affected a general wage cut as early as July.

"National Cash Register company, at the Dayton and Newark, N. J., plants cut wages 10 per cent in August, but paid the same dividends in 1930 as in 1929—$3 and $1 extra.

"Union Pacific railroad cut wages in May, but paid the same very high dividend it did in 1929—$10.

What Must Be Done?

"What are we going to do about it?

"Some industries are adopting unemployment insurance, but all of these concerns, including the unemployment funds paid by the American Federation of Labor, amount to a protection of less than half of 1 per cent of all the workers. Despite all the agitation in favor of the curbing or abolition of unemployment, it is my impression that a very large percentage of the employers of the United States will continue to be unwilling and, in some cases perhaps, unable to attempt a solution of the unemployment problem."

CIRCLE CLUB TO NAME OFFICERS MONDAY NIGHT

Important Business Scheduled for First Meeting of the Year.

Officers for 1931 will be named by Circle club at the first meeting of the new year Monday night at 7 o'clock, at the regular meeting place, the Deuberry dining room, 11½ West Ninth street.

President W. L. Gardner has indicated he would like to turn over that office to some other member, and Secretary Cuthbert has also expressed himself as willing to allow another to tackle the more or less arduous task of keeping the minutes, looking after the correspondence and handling the funds of the club.

The 1930 program of Circle club was, due to numerous matters, lighter than perhaps any year's work since its organization, but with the economic depression promising to vanish during the coming months, members expect to return to normal and take their usual active part in civic affairs.

No entertainment program has been provided for Monday night's session, and the entire meeting will be given over to business matters.

"Cops" Are Enjoined From Checking Press

Los Angeles, Cal.—Judge Walter S. Gates of the superior court has joined police officials from interfering with the sale and distribution of the Los Angeles Citizen, published by the local labor movement.

The Citizen printed an account of a moving picture operators' strike. When the papers were sold in the vicinity of the unfair theater, policemen arrested newsboys on the charge of violating the picketing ordinance.

In ordering the police department to desist from interfering in any way with the labor paper, Judge Gates said:

"The power to prohibit the publication of or to suppress a newspaper is not within the compass of legislative action in this state, and any law enacted for that purpose, or police attempt in that direction, is clearly in derogation of the bill of rights. Nowhere do we find in any of the states of this Union any authority which sustains the doctrine that a municipal corporation is invested with the power to declare the sale of newspapers a nuisance. The power to suppress one concedes the power to suppress all.

"The doctrine of the constitution must prevail in this state, which clothes the citizen with liberty to speak, write or publish his opinion on any and all subjects, limited only by his responsibility for the abuse of such privilege."

Plasterers to Name Officers

All members of Local 157 are urged to be present at the regular meeting Wednesday, Jan. 7, at 7 o'clock, as election of officers and other important business will come up for discussion.

Green Proposes Arbitration Of Big Danville Textile Strike

Offers Choice Of Admiral or Ex-Governor

A. F. of L. Head Says Rejection by Mill Management Should Bring Forfeiture of Troops and Rights.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Danville, Va., Jan. 1.—William Green came to this strike center of America on Tuesday and laid down a platform of common fairness, decency, righteousness and honesty that left Harry R. Fitzgerald no place to go in good faith except to the conference table of settlement.

The president of the American Federation of Labor, in what was beyond dispute the greatest and most eloquent speech of his career in that high office, took the mill-owning Sunday school teachers' own platform and made it the platform of labor, with such utter and complete logic and conviction as to leave any further mill hostility standing alone, bereft of the slightest shadow of moral support.

Green's Striking Peace Proposal.

After a pronouncement of union aims that will live as a classic, President Green laid down this striking proposition:

> Every working man and woman now on strike to return to work at once, without prejudice and to remain members of the union. After the return to work, every question at issue to be submitted without reservation to a board of two representatives of the union and two of the committee, with either Admiral Byrd or former Gov. Byrd as umpire.

The proposal swept the vast audience into a wild acclaim of cheers. No inkling of the proposal was known before it was thundered from the flag-draped platform.

Peace or Fight Issue Up to Mill.

"If this proposal is accepted," said Mr. Green, "I pledge the full co-operation of the American Federation of Labor and we will let by-gones be bygones. We will forget the past."

Then, taking a phrase from the Roosevelt medal lately awarded to him, which says that as "between peace and righteousness he chose righteousness," he thundered: "But I say, if this offer is rejected we choose righteousness."

It was an amazing meeting. Held in a great tobacco warehouse whose dim lights stood out of the darkness of a beamed ceiling like stars from a murky sky, the meeting was one of men and women come together in a great cause. There were no seats. Every man and woman stood and, standing through two hours or more, were as quiet at the close as when first the words of the speaker began to fall upon their ears. Such audiences are seldom seen.

Rows Press Up Like Supplicants.

The first rows of men and women, pressing tight against a barrier rope that held them from the press table and the platform, leaned forward with a great tenseness, like supplicants come to seek justice, to seek solace for the heart, to seek to know the way to peace with justice. Back of them, back into the dim recesses of the vast barn, in a dense pack of humanity, stood thousands upon thousands, showing a sea of dimly outlined faces, earnest, serious, lined and leaned by toil and want, but filled with the look of men and women who keep their feet to the path, their mind to the principle upon which it has seized.

Less Than Victory Would Be Tragic.

President Green described what was in those faces when he told them he was made happy by their solidarity and impressed by their "dogged enthusiasm and determination." He said they had shown the spirit of crusaders and that there was about the battle they are fighting something akin to a religious purpose. "It seems to me it would be tragic," he said, "if there came to such a struggle anything short of complete victory. You deserve to win. And I want you to know that every trade unionist in the United States and far to the north in Canada is thinking about their striking friends in the city of Danville. It must be some consolation to you to know that this great army of more than five million trade unionists is linked to you in your cause so that you may win, not a dominating, autocratic victory, but a measure of justice."

Meeting Is Opened With Invocation.

An invocation by the Rev. M. T. Sorrell, of the Third Avenue Christian church, had opened the great meeting. A letter was read by Organizer C. W. Bollek. President Buford Nash presided, calling upon R. T. Bowden, personal representative of President Cherry, of the Virginia State Federation of Labor, to introduce President Green. And there had been a rousing selection by the band and the unforgettable cheering and singing of the great assemblage, led by Annabelle Lee Glenn. Finally the multitude sang "America" and President Green stepped forward to lay down the creed of labor in terms of patriotism, justice and the princely teachings of the Christian faith.

Garb and Banners In Picture of Words.

No longer were these men and women of the multitude mere men and women, garbed in faded clothes. No longer were they men and women who hungered and were cold. No longer were they tools in the great game of industry. No longer were they merely the makers of profits, the producers of 6 per cent. Somehow, in the language that came from the leader of the labor movement there came to clothe these humble folk the drapings of the knights errant of old, there came to lead them the proud colors of corps old in tradition, hallowed by the blood of honor and sacrifice, there came to stand over them the emblems of a great cause to symbolize their march and their goal. It was, under the magic of that translation, an epitome of that long, long struggle of heroism that has led the race up out of the dark, in the conquest of freedom and light for soul and body.

When Did Unions Become Wrong?

"Thousands of men and women, you are here," came the words of President Green, "not surpassed in any state in this Union." He told then of the glory of Virginia, "the great commonwealth of Virginia whose star is not outshone by any state in the constellation of the stars of states." He told then of the great leaders of state, of university, of the bar and of the pulpit, who have given their praise to trade unionism. "If these men were right," he challenged, "when did it become a crime to join a union?" He quoted the late Daniel Guggenheim, whose thousands of employes were union men, as having said, "I favor unions" and "labor has a perfect right to organize." Then another challenge: "I wish we had a man like Daniel Guggenheim at the head of this great textile industry in Danville."

Says Bible and People With Strike.

The constructive purpose of organized labor, the implacable force of the movement, the brilliant light of its ideals—these were poured forth as from the fountain of an age-old faith. "It is as impossible to keep the men and women of America from joining trade unions as to turn back the tides of the resistless seas," declared President Green. He said then that our lives must square with the Holy word and he swept bitter satire over those whose words are like "as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." Again the smashing drive of a conclusion built upon a well-built premise: "That means the responsibility for this situation rests somewhere and I am going to find out where tonight."

There was this terrific shaft: "If I had formed a corporation—a financial union—I could not square myself with God Almighty if I refused my employes the right to join a union. The Bible is with you, the public is with you and the trade unionists of America are with you."

Challenges Mill To Refuse Offer.

Swiftly the climatic proposal was developed—the proposal to declare peace with arbitration of disputed questions under the aegis of either of two Virginia luminaries, one a world hero, the other a great administrator. And this was followed by a challenge that will not soon be forgotten in Danville.

"I challenge this corporation to say that it will not accept either Admiral Byrd or Gov. Byrd as an arbitrator," thundered the president.

"And if I were the governor of this state, as soon as the papers carry this proposal in the morning I would notify the mill management that on its refusal to accept I would withdraw every soldier from Danville.

"I maintain that when a corporation has refused to arbitrate with such men it has forfeited every right to protection, legal, moral or otherwise!

"What do the citizens of Danville say to this—the business men, the preachers of the church, the bankers?

"I say if these terms are rejected a great indignation meeting ought to be held. If these terms are rejected, we choose righteousness."

DANVILLE CONSTABLE EVICTS FOURTEEN UNION FAMILIES

Victims of Warfare Waged by Mills Stand By in Silence As Officers of Law Carry Household Goods to Open Air—All Evicted Families Given Shelter By Nightfall.

(By Staff Correspondent)

Danville, Va., Jan. 1.—Fourteen union families were dispossessed on Monday by "due process of law" as one more of the multitude of phases through which this great textile strike has passed.

Deputy Constable Luther Lewis, hating his job, supervised the operations of four colored men as they set the meager belongings of the strike families out on the streets or in vacant lots.

The ground was frozen, but the morning sun warmed the surface to a slippery film of mud.

The whole proceeding in every case was carried out without the slightest hitch. Notice had been served on Friday that the houses would be emptied on Monday, unless there was rain. There was no rain. On the contrary it was what might be called good eviction weather—the sun not too bright, the air crisp, but not too cold.

Movers Work Carefully.

Families stood by in silence while the officers of the law moved beds, stoves, chairs and tables out to whatever space might offer a convenient resting place. The movers appeared to work carefully, so as to do no damage. Clearly they had no heart for their task. One officer "tipped off" victims to the name of a man who would cart their goods to new lodgings for half price.

While the deputy constable and his force of movers busied themselves with carting furniture into the streets the clerk ground out the final papers for twenty-nine additional evictions. In these newest cases the involuntary moving will take place Jan. 29, if it doesn't rain.

Two families scheduled for eviction were allowed to retain their little homes until sickness passes, on orders of doctors.

Prize Baby Evicted.

Among the evictees was Danville's prize baby, winner of a Danville baby contest held before the strike. The little blonde miss didn't seem to mind the experience, taking it with wonderment, but not with fear. For her it was just a moving.

One piece of stage play was rudely spoiled by the constable. The city police were all set to make a Roman holiday out of the misfortune of the workers. It had been planned to assign a big and showy detail of police to accompany the constable and his moving crew. But the constable put his foot down hard on that proposition. He issued an ultimatum to the effect that if the police went he wouldn't go. He declared he would carry out the court orders without any show of police—and he did, quietly, with no more show of authority than was necessary and with as much consideration as possible.

By night reports to union headquarters showed that all the evicted families had been housed, either in other dwellings by themselves, or with friends.

Evictions Living Tragedy.

No simple account of the evictions can tell the story of the living tragedy that marked another of its stages in this slow and mournful business of putting one family after another into the streets, homeless as far as the law or the mill owners knew or cared.

Mostly the houses are called houses only by a sort of poetic license. They are frame shelters that have been called houses. Not more than 5 per cent of them have bathrooms. When the company collected rent it was at the rate of 50 cents a month, checked out of the pay envelopes. Out of these miserable hovels the most active figures in the strike are being thrown on the pretext that the company needs the houses. The houses are mute evidences of the tragic degree of exploitation endured by these workers throughout their working lives, up to the protest registered by this strike.

Millions Can't Care For New York Idle

Washington, Dec. 31.—The millions of dollars raised in New York for unemployed is but a "drop in the bucket as compared to what is needed," said Senator Copeland, in discussing proposed relief on the floor of the senate.

"My city has been extremely generous," said Mr. Copeland. "It has raised $8,000,000 to take care of the immediate emergency, but $8,000,000 is only a drop in the bucket compared to what is needed to relieve human suffering in the section of the country where I live, and I believe that is true of every portion of our great country."

ACCIDENTS DROP.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Industrial accidents in November, this year, were the lowest since May, 1922.

BIG UNION GARMENT FIRMS PUT PLANTS ON 5-DAY WEEK

Three Thousand Garment Workers Are Beneficiaries

Leaders of Industry Introduce Shorter Week Voluntarily in Six American Cities—No Reduction in Pay.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, Dec. 31.—Two more union manufacturers, employing 3,000 members of the United Garment Workers of America, with factories in principal cities of the United States, have announced the forty-hour work week, with no reduction in the weekly pay of their employes, both to go into effect with the beginning of the new year.

To begin the year 1931 with this good news to the American labor movement, there had to be a trinity. In this case it happened to be the H. D. Lee Mercantile company, manufacturers of the Lee brand of overalls, unionalls, play suits and work shirts, with factories in Kansas City, Mo.; South Bend, Ind.; Trenton, N. J.; Minneapolis, Minn., and San Francisco, Cal., employing 2,500 members of the United Garment Workers of America; the R. L. McDonald Manufacturing company, St. Joseph, Mo., manufacturers of the McDonald brand of high grade dress shirts, pajamas, underwear, overalls and work shirts, employing 500 loyal trade unionists, and the United Garment Workers of America, ably represented by President T. A. Rickert and General Secretary J. L. Wines.

The story would not be complete if credit were not given to the 3,000 members of the union and their efficient officers who are affected by this agreement. Their loyalty to the United Garment Workers of America and their employers helped greatly to put into effect the forty-hour work week in the various cities in which the H. D. Lee Mercantile company and the R. L. McDonald Manufacturing company operate plants.

General President Rickert and General Secretary Wines, expressing the appreciation of the action taken by the H. D. Lee Mercantile company and the R. L. McDonald Manufacturing company, said that the forward step taken by the two firms would not only be appreciated by the members of the American trade union movement, but also by all fair-minded men and women in America.

A telegram from the R. L. McDonald Manufacturing company, St. Joseph. Mo., addressed to General President Rickert and General Secretary Wines, notifying them of the adoption of the forty-hour week with no reduction in the weekly pay, said:

"In accord with the forward looking policies that have guided successfully the affairs of this company over a period of more than fifty years of business activity, and believing now that industry as a whole and our industry in particular, should act to work out an equitable and permanent distribution of work that will assure the maintenance of present wage scales and standards of living, we are pleased to inform you that after long consideration of the subject in its relation to general economic conditions our board of directors has passed a resolution adopting the forty-hour, five-day week, starting Jan. 2, 1931. We believe this action will make for a more uniform production and steadier employment.

"R. L. McDONALD MFG. CO."

Companies Are Leaders.

The H. D. Lee Mercantile company and the R. L. McDonald Manufacturing company are leaders, and not followers, in the garment industry, and having once convinced themselves that the forty-hour week was economically sound, and humanely just, they did not hesitate to put it into effect.

GLASSBLOWERS PAY TRIBUTE TO LATE EMPLOYER

Love and Esteem for W. H. Meacham Expressed in Letter, Resolutions.

Splendid tribute to the life of W. H. Meacham, president of the Chattanooga Bottle and Glass company, who passed away recently, is paid in a letter from Secretary Jenkins, of the International union, and in resolutions passed by Branch 92, employes of the company, and sent The Labor World this week.

Mr. Meacham enjoyed the respect and esteem of every employe of the glass company, and that his unusually fine character and personality was appreciated by officers of the union with which he had always dealt is shown in the letter from Mr. Jenkins, addressed to Local Secretary William B. Bland, which contained this comment:

"We were all shocked on receipt of your letter of the 11th instant to hear of the death of our old friend Billy Meacham. Both Jim (James Maloney, president) and I were sorry indeed to hear that he is among us no more. He was one man in a million, and everybody who knew him liked and respected him. We are sorry you did not let us know in time to send a floral tribute in token of the affection and esteem in which he was held by our association."

Branch 92 expressed the tribute of its members in the following resolutions:

Whereas, the great and Supreme Ruler of the universe has in His infinite wisdom removed from among us our dearly beloved friend, brother and late employer, William H. Meacham, who died after a lingering illness on Dec. 10, 1930; and,

Whereas, the long and intimate relations held with him makes it eminently fitting that we record our appreciation of him; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which he exercised as a worker and employer to our organization by service, contributions and counsel will be held in grateful remembrance;

Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a life from our midst leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply realized by all the members of this organization, and will prove a serious loss to the community and the public;

Resolved, That we, the members of Branch No. 92, Glass Bottle Blowers' association, realizing the great loss sustained, extend to the bereaved wife and sons our sincere condolences and heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of sorrow and affliction and express our hope that even so great a loss to us all may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this organization; a copy printed in The Labor World, and a copy forwarded to the bereaved family.

No Property Right In Broadcasting

Washington.—No property right can exist in radio broadcasting, the medium of transmission of radio intelligence being "merely a scientific theory," the United States solicitor-general, Thomas D. Thatcher, declared to the supreme court, in defending radio regulatory legislation passed by congress.

Two owners of broadcast stations claim they have a property right in the air, and that the deprivation of this right, by reduction in power or being ordered "off the air" constitute an unlawful taking of property not in the public interest, but for the private use of others, they claim.

"It is absurd," said the solicitor-general, in answering this claim, "to argue that there is a property right in something that does not physically exist."

Mr. Justice Holmes stated he was unaware of any case which held that a property right might be asserted over something which could not be reduced to actual physical possession.

FREE MEDICAL AID.

Chicago.—Free medical aid for unemployed during the coming winter is being arranged by the Chicago Medical society. A staff of physicians is being organized for that purpose.

Applications for treatment will be investigated and patients will be assigned to physicians.

Chain Stores Fight Between Themselves

New York.—Where chain stores control from 50 to 75 per cent of the grocery business of a community, they are fighting between themselves, says the Standard Statistics company.

This statistical organization, following a review of the chains, points out that competition is no longer solely between grocery chain and independent, but between chain systems. This costly competition may result in mergers or agreements, it is predicted. Service, rather than price cutting, features the new competition.

"Competition in service rather than in price may require finer buildings, more attractive equipment and better grade and higher paid personnel. It leads to advertising of an institutional nature in the endeavor to build up good will toward the individual system. In this type of competition the personal factor will be of particular importance.

"These developments, in the long run, unless offset by further operating economies in other directions, will result in gradually rising costs of chain store operation. Friendly agreements, or mergers and consolidations, may check dangerous competition."

FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1931.

DANVILLE STOCKHOLDERS HAPPY.

Stockholders of the Riverside and Dan River Cotton mills are happy over the usual 3 per cent semi-annual dividend on their $7,500,000 preferred stock. This distribution of $225,000 also brings joy to Danville merchants and other anti-unionists who feared that failure to declare the dividend would encourage 4,500 striking textile workers. These small traders believe prosperity depends on low wages, and they bask in the smiles of industrial autocrats by serving as strikebreakers for the element who are putting them out of business through chain stores.

The dividend is the result of wage cuts and speed up schemes that forced these workers on strike. The wage reduction is in defiance of promises made last year to President Hoover at his notable conference in the White House. "Wages" of the dollar must be paid, though workers are sweated and women and children hunger. When these workers protest they are answered by soldiers, police, injunctions and evictions.

The strikers pleaded for arbitration, but their offer was spurned. The governor of Virginia made a similar plea, but autocracy contemptuously replied: "There is nothing to arbitrate." That official then meekly turned the state militia over to arrogant mill barons who hoped to break the strike.

Virginia's governor may well ask himself if he arose to the heights of a courageous public official who would refuse to bull-pen strikers at the request of mill autocrats who declined to submit their dispute to fellow citizens.

That $225,000 dividend is associated with hunger and tears. It is a denial of voluntary association—a fundamental right that every man and woman is supposed to possess.

FORD PLANTS SHUT DOWN.

Detroit, Mich.—Ford plants in this city ceased operations. The company said the suspension "is in line with the policy of closing at this season of the year in order that an inventory may be taken."

No one knows how long the plants will be closed. The year-end inventory has formerly been two weeks. The company has been operating on three days a week for three months.

DISCUSSING 1931

Happy New Year!

Some say it as a matter of course. Some say it for the purpose of conveying a sincere and fervent wish. They hope their friends will be happy—and prosperous.

Happy—and prosperous. It is not without reason that folks couple these two thoughts.

Talk about the happiness of poverty and the sorrow that goes with riches is well enough, but it covers a good deal of tripe.

It cannot be gainsaid that there is more of happiness where there is comfort and well-being than there is where poverty has placed its load of care and its specter of want.

The unemployed would be happier if they had jobs and still happier if they had good jobs.

* * * *

The Labor World wishes its friends and the labor movement happiness and economic safety and well-being for 1931.

Happy New Year—a New Year with work and good wages and decent conditions!

But we go deeper than that. We hope for a New Year in which American industry will awake to the need for bringing more of order and sanity and co-operation into its house.

Industry needs more organization, not less. It needs more organizations of workers and more of co-operation between organizations of workers and employers. It needs to broaden the field in which workers and employers can get together and deal with mutually interesting and important matters.

* * * *

In 1931 a lot of suspicions and hates, like those in the minds of the mill owners of Danville, ought to disappear.

Industries in which trade unions play a part, in genuine co-operation with employers, like the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, have best weathered the industrial storm.

Co-operation, on the basis of a full recognition of labor's inherent rights, is not merely a sentimental thing. It pays. Intelligence always pays.

Stupidity, rancor, jealousy, suspicion—these are relics of darker days and they do not pay. They are liabilities.

It is to be hoped that industry, in 1931, will get out of the witch doctor class, out of the fetish worshipingclass, out of the crystal gazing class.

And as for happiness—who is today the happier, as between Daniel Willard and Harry Fitzgerald?

* * * *

That nation which first turns consciously and purposefully toward a greater development of co-operation in industry along democratic lines, releasing the full energy of the workers and paying them fully and honestly for that energy, will outstrip the world, not only in material success, but in that mental, spiritual and intellectual ascension that makes great nations greater and that makes a people stand out in admitted, admired leadership among all the peoples of the world.

Let the United States be the nation to take the great step, to record for itself and its people that brilliant advance.

* * * *

Happy New Year! Let there be more of justice, more of helpfulness, more of health and of learning, more of leisure and of plenty, more of democracy, more of co-operation.

Every wage earner can help insure the bringing of that kind of a Happy New Year by being faithful to trade unionism and by getting into a trade union if he is not now enrolled. Ignorance and Greed will not abdicate, but they can be overthrown.

HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

Christmas—gone again.

A New Year comes—1931—mystery!

Always the future is mystery. Speculation upon the probabilities of the future has led men to write poetry—and hokum. More of hokum than poetry.

There cannot be any positive knowledge about any man's future, for no man is sure of any minute except the present minute.

Christmas—and New Year's day—and another 12-month of future stretching out into the unknowable hence. We go forward hoping, but never knowing.

The hopefulness of the human race is perhaps its most marvelous asset. All manner of men go forward hoping. There are the millionaires, with dollar safety and who knows what woes of mind. There are the human leeches, grafters, skinners, crooks, tyrants. For what do they hope? Maybe some hope for a chance to forsake their crooked game. Maybe some just hope for better pickings.

There are millions of workers, most of them hoping their jobs will continue, millions hoping a job will turn up. There are hungry men and women, shivering little children, hoping. What magnificence there is in a humanity that can stand at the bottom point of hopelessness and still hope!

Over the world there are men in bondage, men in chains, men in abject submission to cruel taskmasters, political and industrial. In the breasts of these hope is so battered in its struggle with defeat that it has become a pain—a pain out of which comes the cry that never ceases.

There are those that are doomed, whose days are certainly numbered, whose intelligence tells them hope is useless. Yet there probably is no normal human being that does not continue to hope, even in the face of hopelessness.

And at no time in the whole year does hope rise so high as at this great festival period—Christmas and New Year's day.

The world has been moved because battered hands have hammered against the hard walls of tradition and greed and avarice and ignorance.

The world has been moved because hearts have refused to give up their hope in the face of the teaching of the elders of the established order of things.

The race has come its way from the jungle hoping for better things and putting its strength behind its hope.

At times it has torn at the walls of injustice and bondage in a frenzy of despair that was never quite despair because the fight went on; and at times in the high elation of conquest and victory.

Hope has led the race to battle. Hope has led the brain to conjure up devices and methods of winning through to freedom.

And today—even with the great burden of misery that bears down upon so many—the race stands nearer the pinnacle than ever. Thus is hope justified. Thus does hope continue.

The past is history. For the future we hope—and so strive to make good the hope.

TOO MUCH---OF WHAT?

In all the tintinnabulation of the din attending the attack and defense of the federal farm board, one recurring little tune stands out regularly. Sometimes it is Alexander Legge, sometimes Mr. McKenzie, who takes up the refrain. The latest member of the chorus who now lifts his voice in the rondo is Mr. C. B. Denman, one of the members of the board.

And this is the tune: "In 1926 we got $140,000,000 more for the 40 million hogs marketed . . . than we received for 49 million hogs in 1928." And again, with a slight transposition of the melody: "In 1925, 321 million bushels of potatoes had a farm value of $530,000,000. In 1928, 463 million bushels were worth only $288,000,000."

Now, Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen, without impugning in any way the veracity of the eminent gentlemen of the federal farm board, it should be said by somebody that there is connected with the state of facts, alleged by these gentlemen, a heap lot of dam foolishness.

What Next!

Invention of a metal film by M. Louis Lumiere, French scientist, is reported by the British motion picture trade press. This film is said to be more durable and more resistant than ordinary celluloid film and to be of equal lightness and efficiency. The details of this invention are not known, and no reference to it has so far been made in the French trade press. It is also said that the metal used by Lumiere is the result of an entirely new process and is being kept secret.

A.—The Coopers' International Union of North America.

Sense From Congress

I repeat, it is folly, it is absurd, it is hypocritical to talk about doing anything for the relief of unemployment in this country unless we understand and appreciate that such relief will necessitate increased expenditures on the part of the government and increased income taxes upon the rich.—Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts.

Of course democracy failed in prohibition, because it overreached itself. It went beyond the real purview of temporal government. It essayed divinity and reached for the moon, and all it obtained was moonshine.—Representative Loring M. Black, of New York.

Rich Society Ladies Can Cut Unemployed

New York.—If wealthy society ladies are desirous of relieving the unemployed, let them notify fashionable Fifth Avenue dressing shops to end that strike.

This suggestion is made by Justice, official magazine International Ladies' Garment Workers' union.

Employers demand the right to arbitrarily discharge workers and deny review of their action by an impartial board. The employers also demand wage reductions and lower work standards. Every effort of the union to compose differences has been rejected.

"The object of the employers was none other than to abolish union conditions," says Justice, which suggests that the situation presents an opportunity for society women to make good their professed interest in the unemployed.

"If the wealthy ladies who patronize the Fifth avenue shops wish to do something praiseworthy, now is their opportunity," says the labor publication. "All they need to do is to have members of the Courtiers' association understand that they will not deal with persons who can be so brutally unfair to employes, and that they will not wear garments made by scabs."

A group of fifty prominent men and women organized the citizens' emergency committee to aid the striking tailors.

Condemning what they term "a policy of industrial ruthlessness at a time when every effort of the community is bent to prevent unemployment," the emergency committee called upon public-spirited citizens "to join us in giving the utmost possible support, moral and financial, to striking tailors and dressmakers in their effort to maintain an American standard of living, the right of collective bargaining and a system of orderly relations in the industry."

Job Hunting Alien Opposed by Davis

Washington.—Rigid exclusion of all immigrants is recommended by Secretary of Labor Davis in a report that closed ten years of service in that position.

The secretary urged that no new and unattached immigrants coming for the purpose of seeking employment should be admitted to the country unless it has been previously determined by the department of labor that there existed an actual need for the kind of service they are qualified to give.

"I would apply this rule to all immigration," said the secretary, "whether it is subject to quota limit control, as in the case of natives of European countries, or outside such control, as is the case with natives of New World countries.

"I would exempt from this plan of control immigrants coming to join near relatives already in the United States. I always have advocated liberality in the matter of reuniting families and my attitude has not changed in that respect."

BUILDING PROGRAM URGED.

Washington.—An appropriation of $400,000,000 for the purchase of sites and erection of postoffice buildings is provided in a bill introduced by Congressman Hare, of South Carolina.

The author of the bill said he has a twofold purpose—to relieve unemployment and to stop the government renting buildings for postoffices at an annual cost of $15,000,000.

WHEAT AT LOW COST.

New York.—Mechanical equipment will make it possible to produce wheat at 10 cents a bushel, declared Hickman Price, owner of a 30,000-acre farm in Texas, in an address to the American University club.

The successful farmer of the future will be the one who cultivates large acreage, he said. The effect on the small farmer was not discussed.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

TOO MUCH --- OF WHAT?

Except in the circles where kosher considerations control, hogs are most accurately measured in calories. May we not suggest that, as a standard of value, the caloric measurement is superior to the gold standard—for hogs? It is more permanent, unvarying, and dependable than the gold yard-stick. It relates directly to the chief utility of the hog product. It has to do with the fundamental significance of the pork chop, the ham and bacon, and the lard, which arises from the satisfaction of human hunger.

* * * *

A slice of bacon of a given size will possess so many calories—whether it is the lone, last slice in the miner's pack, or be ranked among millions of its kind in the cold storage of the packing house.

A pound of potato is so much starch, and the amount of food it contains is the principal secret of its interest to humanity.

And to count values of food, up or down, in terms of something which depends for its significance upon the shifting meaning of a gold dollar, is like trying to measure human heart-beats by the bushel.

"But all values are relative!" some say.

Of course they are! And the only relation in which you can put human food, so as to get its "real" value, is to relate it to the amount of human hunger.

"Too much wheat," they say. "Too many potatoes; too much pork!"

And the ignoramuses who have the impertinence to emit these ejaculations on a subject of which they have as much vital knowledge as a Kentucky coon has of Brazilian opals, would not even give second thought to the question of whether there remains any hunger to be satisfied. They may know how to buy and sell. But outside of that they live in utter darkness.

* * * *

Not until every last skinny kidlet has been brought to normal weight, not until every anxious mother knows there is enough in the pantry for every possible healthy appetite, not until every tired workman has quit worrying about enough to feed his family, should the pirates of profit be permitted to even think of the measurements of their markets as applied to the things which bring health and happiness instead of hunger.

This winter—of unemployment—will be giving to this custom of measuring potential provender by potential profits, instead of by hunger units, an added significance.

And a civilization which can speak so easily of a surplus of food supplies, while taking insufficient account of the surplus of human hunger, is marking itself for consignment to the same limbo that now holds the forgotten eras of Nineveh and Tyre.

What government is this—which assesses the hunger tax?

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part VII.
WHO IS THIS JESUS?
JESUS, THE ANOINTED OF GOD (Part 2).

The advent of Jesus as a Teacher dates from the hour of His baptism by John, a Nazarite and ascetic, who appeared unannounced in southern Transjordonia in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius. Jesus' baptism was the decisive event of His life, this marking His realization of the full approval of God of His fast approaching ministry, for we are told "He looked and beheld the heavens opened and the Spirit like a dove descending upon Him and a voice from heaven: Thou art my beloved Son in whom I shall be blessed" (a better translation than "in whom I am well pleased"). Thus was begun an eventful journey as a Teacher which ended with His crucifixion atop Golgotha.

WM. L. MOSS

What, you ask, drew the multitude around him and caused them to follow Him and listen with rapt attention to His every word for three years? The answer is in this: The religious thought of Jesus' day was controlled by the Pharisees and the Scribes. The Pharisees and their minions, the Scribes, expounded the Word of God with a "Thus saith the Lord," while Jesus, on the other hand, recognized the verity of what He expounded as coming from God but prefaced His teaching with "But I say unto you"—He could say this because, unlike the Pharisees, He lived what He taught. What the religious doctors of Jesus' day taught had, in fact, degenerated until it had become a mere jumble of meaningless casuistry. The great depth of spirit and the wonderful, God-inspired breadth of freedom Jesus breathed into His teaching differentiated it from the narrow pedantry of the religious doctors. He surveyed life from above, asking that men do likewise, teaching that this was looking at life from God's viewpoint. He approached social life from within, and taught that not environment but the fount of all social life, the human heart, must change, for if left uncleansed it is sure to infect the entire human frame—mind, body and soul. He knew that the solution of the life seeking at-one-ment with God lay in human beings casting from out their lives every vestige of the spirit of selfishness and the curse of commercialism, called in the New Testament "the love of this world," and this meant nothing less than the redemption of the soul itself and its reclamation for God's use.

In His earthly person Jesus showed forth a true manifestation of God—a figuration of the Godhead, consisting not of impressive truths concerning God but a far more personal revelation of the Heavenly Father through His own life and character. This revelation sprang from Jesus' own consciousness of oneness with the Father. Jesus exemplified His immeasurable devotion to the Father by His meek and unreserved submission to sacrificial suffering. Dante's moving lines sum up the inevitable sequel for us: "In His will is our peace!" Jesus went about doing good not through a sense of servile duty, but with a soul filled with a sense of complete peace that comes to every living creature in the fulfillment of its true being.

As children of God, Christians confess Jesus as the Word of the Father, that is, the one and only true expression of the Divine Creator, in the sense that Jesus is the final manifestation in earthly form of the Father's love and mercy as the Redeeming God. Therefore, it is through Jesus alone that men make the ideal contacts with that force which lifts human life to its highest levels and gives it possession of the highest earthly and heavenly values. That men might know these things, Jesus went about teaching the throngs daily, and for teaching these things His enemies crucified Him.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Henry Ford is not helping the situation in Detroit by his publicity stunts through interviews or ghost-written articles in which he is saying that in twenty years wages will be $35 a day.

Recently Mr. Ford gave his employes a long "vacation" without pay. It was a shut-down that stripped workers of their savings, plunged many of them into debt, some of them hopelessly. A correspondent writes he has worked in Ford's factory fifteen years and that his wages are now $25 a week and his family had to live during the period of the closed factory and as a consequence he is several hundred dollars in debt.

It would be difficult for this man to cash in some Ford predictions at his grocery store or to pay a doctor's bill with them. One wonders why some of these intelligent interviewers do not have on tap some concrete cases of this sort and put a real question to Ford in the course of an interview.

That is probably unlikely to happen. These interviews are largely framed and faked up and nothing so untoward as an embarrassing question is likely to confront a billionaire manufacturer whose products are so extensively advertised.

As Senator Norris points out, in a blistering criticism of the tactics of Robert H. Lucas in the Nebraska campaign, Lucas or anyone else has a perfect right to oppose him and contribute money toward his defeat. "But," the fighting Nebraska senator added, "the sin of Mr. Lucas is that he made his attack in the dark. He concealed his identity. He was too cowardly to fight in the open. The weapons he used were indefensible."

Senator Norris stated the case mildly. The tactics of Lucas, executive director of the republican national committee, deserve the severest condemnation. They constituted an attack in the dark almost without parallel in American politics for sneaking unfairness.

When an attempt was made to defeat Senator Norris in the primaries by the running of another candidate with the same name as his, it was suspected that an absolutely unscrupulous campaign to "get" Norris was under way. Recent revelations show that not half the story was known and that the opponents of Norris did not hesitate to stoop to anything.

Only by the strength of our unity can we maintain our working and living conditions secured by organization.

BY THEIR WISDOM ASSES ARE KNOWN

(With Apologies to the Unknown Author for Minor Changes)

The Labor World is indebted to J. A. ("Woodrow") Wilson, of the Broadway Barber shop, for discovering the following timely fable, which was issued in pamphlet form, with the imprint of the Eagle Soap corporation, Chicago:

At the Beginning of Things, when the World was young, the Donkey was esteemed by all the Tribes of Men as wisest of Animals. The good Sheik El-Sta-Shun-Air owned a great Herd of these sagacious Beasts, which was the Pride and Joy of his Life.

Other Sheiks from Miles around came to listen and marvel at the Wisdom of the Herd. At such a Time came even the Prophet himself—most learned and wise of all the Sons of the East. With much glowing of Pride, El-Sta-Shun-Air led him out to the Herd and said:

"Behold, O Prophet, the wise and talented Asses. Converse with them, test them and see if they are not verily wiser than forty Trees full of Owls."

Then the Prophet addressed the Asses. "Let us test your Wisdom," said he. "Answer me this Question: What would an Ass require for a three Days' journey?"

And they counseled among themselves and then made reply: "For a three Days' Journey, O Prophet, any Ass should require six Bundles of Hay and three Bags of Dates."

"Very good," quoth the Prophet: "that soundeth like a fair and proper Price." Whereupon El-Sta-Shun-Air broke into loud Chuckles and said: "Did I not tell you they are passing wise?"

The Prophet answered, "Wait!" and he again addressed the Asses. "I have for One of you," he said, "a three Days' Journey, but I will not give six Bundles of Hay and three Bags of Dates for making it. Let him who will go for less stand forth."

And behold, they all stood Forth and all began to talk at once. One would go for six Bundles of Hay and two Bags of Dates. Then another for three Bundles of Hay and one Bag of Dates, until finally one especially Long-Eared Ass agreed to go for one Bundle of Hay.

Theen spoke the Prophet. "Fool," quoth he, "you cannot even live for three Days on one Bundle of Hay, much less profit from the Journey."

"True," said the Long-Eared One, "but I wanted to get the job."

And from that far-off day to this, Asses have been known as Fools, and Labor Price Cutters known as Asses.

FASTER FREIGHT TRAINS.

Washington.—Freight trains during October attained the highest average speed for any corresponding period, 13.7 miles per hour, according to a report of the bureau of railway economics.

METAL WORKERS STRIKE.

Paterson, N. J.—A 10 per cent wage cut by the Wright Aero corporation resulted in a strike of 300 machinists and metal polishers.

Labor Statistics Urged by Stewart

Washington.—A plea for up-to-date industrial and social statistics is made by Ethelbert Stewart, commissioner of labor statistics, in his annual report.

The 1918 family budget survey is still used by the bureau of labor statistics. Its usefulness is impaired because of its age, said the commissioner, who renews his appeal for funds to make a new budget study.

The commissioner reported that industrial accidents are increasing "in spite of the splendid safety work which has been done in certain places." Here again is an important social work hampered by lack of funds.

"Everyone connected with safety work knows the importance of such statistics," said Commissioner Stewart, "and everyone concedes that this work should be done on a national scale and preferably by the national government. For twenty-five years the bureau of labor statistics has done the best it could to organize and compile and analyze the information, but it has never had the resources to do a thorough job.

"Industrial disease and poisoning resulting from new industrial processes are growing rapidly in number, as are, also, probably, the number of victims. As in the case of industrial accidents, we have no satisfactory information on these points."

Bosses Outsmarted In Short-Week Fight

Detroit, Mich.—Reactionary employers in control of the mayor's unemployment committee were outsmarted on the question of a shorter work week.

A subcommittee controlled by these employers has been toying with a five-day week resolution and the main committee passed a resolution for a 30-hour plan. The bosses are now in a position where they oppose the five-day week, but voted for 30 hours.

Trade unionists, however, have no illusions that the 30-hour plan means anything, unless backed by the workers' solidarity.

Unions Shown Guard Against Unemployment

Green Finds General Idleness Increases in December, But Organized Workers Hold Stronger Position.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Dec. 31.—Unemployment increased in the first two weeks of December, but in trade unions the increase was less than is usual at this time of year, according to reports received by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. In a statement he said:

"Unemployment in the first weeks of December increased as it usually does at this season and more are now out of work than at any time during the present depression. Our preliminary estimate of the total number unemployed in the United States in December, based on government employment figures, supplemented by our own, is 5,300,000. According to our revised estimate for November 5,000,000 were out of work in that month, showing an increase of 300,000 from November to December.

No Gain Until March.

"Suffering from unemployment is already intense and every effort is needed to relieve the unemployed. Many American citizens in the past month have shown the same spirit in meeting this emergency which carried us through the problems of war thirteen years ago. Only the same self-sacrificing effort can help us to meet the present great human emergency. Contributions for relief of the unemployed and efforts to provide work must continue even more vigorously through the next two months. We cannot hope for any general improvement before March.

"In spite of the tragedy of more than five million out of work, our figures for December give ground for encouragement. Unemployment did not increase as much from November to December this year as it usually does even in normal years. In 1928 the increase in the number of union members out of work was 17 per cent from November to December; in 1928, 28 per cent, while this year the increase was only 5 per cent. This indication that the rising trend of unemployment is slackening is encouraging news indeed. If January figures again show less than the normal increase we will be justified in the belief that a change for the better may be in the making. Better employment and increased buying power of wage earners is fundamental to business revival.

Unions Protect Members.

"It is not certain, however, that this slackening of the unemployment increase has yet extended to groups outside the labor movement. While our figures for trade union members showed no more than the usual seasonal increase in the number out of work from October to November, and less than usual from November to December, reports from the department of labor covering unorganized as well as union workers in manufacturing, showed much more than the usual seasonal increase. It appears that conditions are more serious for those without union protection.

"The following table gives our weighted unemployment percentage, adjusted to count building trades proportionately to the number of building tradesmen in the United States. This we feel gives a good representation of unemployment in the United States. The number out of work increased from 15.9 per cent in November to 16.5 per cent in December. It will be seen that unemployment has reached the highest figure thus far in the depression. The 16.5 per cent out of work in December this year compares with 10 per cent in the last two years, but the increase since November is less.

Per Cent Unemployed.

October	7.2	7.3	14.1
November	7.6	8.7	15.9

*Preliminary.

"Our December figures show that in metal trades conditions are no worse since November; but in printing and building trades unemployment is higher than ever before in the three years of our records. Forty-five per cent of the building tradesmen are out of work, and 9 per cent of those in printing.

Textiles Show Gain.

"In the other trades, only one group shows even a slight improvement and that is clothing and textiles, where the number out of work was 25 per cent in December compared to 27 per cent in November. In the following more were out of work in December: Theaters, manufacturing (the largest increase was in manufacturing), service and trade, railroads, water transports, street transport, musicians. Unemployment among musicians is as serious as in the building trades.

"Reports from cities show that in 19 of the 24 unemployment is still increasing. Five report no change or a slight improvement since November."

Hoover Plan Upset; More Money Voted

Washington. — Drought relief threatens peaceful relations between the senate and the president.

The latter, in his annual message, favored an appropriation of $25,000,000. The senate ignored this recommendation and approved an appropriation of $60,000,000. The administration does not favor purchase of food for human beings, on the ground that this savors of a "dole."

The president issued a statement in which he said some members of congress are "playing politics at the expense of human misery."

The statement aroused senators, who defied the White House by voting twice as much for drought relief as was called for by the president.

Senators attacked the president's position, and Senator La Follette capped the oratorical outburst by a resolution which declared, in effect, that humanity is of more importance than dollars. This resolution is considered a notice to the president that his fear of high taxes cannot be sustained when human beings suffer.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD FAVORS MEAT PACKERS

Washington.—Chairman Legge, of the federal farm board, is quoted that every member of his board favors a modification of the meat packers' consent decree.

The decree was signed several years ago by the department of justice and the Big Four packers, who now ask that the District of Columbia supreme court annul the agreement, which provides that the meat packers shall not enter the retail meat trade.

Organized labor opposes modification of the decree. The recent Boston A. F. of L. convention protested to President Hoover, the attorney-general and all administrative officers.

The packers have driven trade unions from their plants and would now monopolize retail merchandising of meat.

PREVAILING WAGE RATE IS U. S. POLICY, HOOVER SAYS

(International Labor News Service)

Washington, Dec. 31.—President Hoover this week announced that it will be the policy of the United States government to require contractors on government work to pay the rate of wages prevailing in their communities.

Trade union officials look with some hope to the future, in view of this announcement, while holding that in the past there have been breaches of this policy in notable instances.

The president pointed to the White House conference in which maintenance of wage rates was agreed upon. He said the example of industrial leaders in maintaining wages had been followed by the government, with what he termed minor exceptions, and these, he said, had been corrected.

LABOR DENOUNCES PRESS POLICY IN REPORTING DANVILLE STRIKE

North Carolina Unions Charge Persistent Editorializing of News to Detriment of Strikers—State and County Employment Agencies Hit for Aiding Attempt to Break Walkout.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Salisbury, N. C., Jan. 1.—Editorialized news stories on the Danville strike carried by the Greensboro Daily News and "other state newspapers" were denounced by the executive committee of the North Carolina Federation of Labor at a meeting held here as being directly responsible for the sending troops to the Virginia strike center. Another resolution attributed to the uneconomic leadership of the Asheville Citizen and the Asheville Times, which were recently merged, the very grave economic crisis that exists in the North Carolina mountain metropolis.

The meeting, which was in session nearly six hours, was the first to be held by the present official staff of the state labor organization since its election last August. Under the direction of R. R. Lawrence, of Winston-Salem, state president, the entire program of work for the year was gone into. Considerable time was devoted to plans for prosecuting the organization's extensive legislative program when the general assembly convenes in January.

Members of the executive body present were: President Lawrence, First Vice-President D. J. Butler, of Salisbury; Second Vice-President W. B. Plemmons, of Asheville; Third Vice-President Charles M. Gaskill, of Greensboro; Fourth Vice-President Claude Albea, of Charlotte, and Secretary-Treasurer Marcus Sauls, of Greensboro.

Job Agencies Scored.

Gaskill presented the urgent need of relief funds to aid the strikers in Danville. The group also voiced a rebuke to the functioning of state and county employment agencies as strike-breaking agencies for the Danville mills. This action followed discussion of information indicating that the recently established city and county employment bureau in Greensboro had been guilty of trying to send textile workers discharged for union membership last summer by the Cone mills to take jobs of striking workers in Danville.

The state organization voted unanimously to call upon Gov. O. Max Gardner to withdraw all prison labor from private corporations, all industries, and all public work as a means of reducing unemployment of honorable citizens of the state. The action also included a request that the state cease the leasing of convicts for use in competition with free labor.

The legislature will be asked to amend the workers' compensation law so as to include a clause covering occupational diseases. It would also like to see an amendment added that will permit a worker employing his family physician instead of being limited to the doctor of the insurance company.

For Stronger Banking Laws.

The committee went on record as favoring the material strengthening of state banking laws. It is also actively advocating the incorporation of all communities in the state that have 200 or more population. This is designed to bring all industrial communities under the supervision of state agencies and to eliminate the condition that exists in some localities where it is necessary for anyone wishing to spend the night in the community to first obtain a permit from the mill management.

Lawrence made a report of his efforts to secure the pardoning of three striking mill workers, and the executive committee adopted a resolution "thanking the citizens of the state who signed the petitions for the pardoning of Hogan, Lewis and Fowler, Marion strikers serving prison terms in Henderson county, and regretting to announce that the prison commission and the governor have not as yet seen fit to grant these pardons." Announcement of the paroling of the three men was made by state officials recently.

Attitude of Paper Hit.

In asking the executive committee to take action on "the persistent policy of the Greensboro Daily News and certain state newspapers to editorialize the news to the detriment of the cause of the Danville strikers," Gaskill reported that a committee of union representatives had appealed to the management of the Greensboro newspaper in protest without success. In taking action, the group pointed out that it was not opposing the publication of unbiased news, whether favorable or unfavorable, but that it raised serious objection to the editorializing of news items. Gaskill insisted that the attitude of the Greensboro paper is "helping to starve and put back into peonage 4,500 workers in Danville."

The resolution attacking the Asheville newspaper was another episode in the ancient feud between the union and the anti union papers of the mountain city. It charged the two publications, which are now under the control of Charles Webb, arch foe of unionism, with standing for long hours, low wages, and operation of a shop closed to union workers and thereby "creating unemployment and bad business." It also intimated that union officials are in possession of conclusive evidence that the Asheville dailies have been guilty of suppression of news regarding the development of the present economic crisis facing the city and county as a result of the closing of several Asheville banks.

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

"January 1, 1931." Don't forget to write it that way.

* * *

I wish every trade unionist a Happy New Year, with plenty of work.

* * *

The postoffice force came out of the Christmas rush all O. K., everything cleaned up with very few packages undelivered, and McPherson is still making an effort to deliver them. (The old Scotchman is sticking to it with bulldog tenacity.)

* * *

Earl Miller spent the first (Thursday) with his family in Dalton. W. A. Myers went bird hunting over near Winchester. J. L. Miller spent the day with homefolks at Cleveland. M. M. Echols stayed at home and ate grapefruit. Lawrence Reid went bird hunting one day this week, with fair luck, as birds are scarce. Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Lane had all of their children and grandchildren (except one) with them Christmas at their home in the Alberta, with a beautiful decorated and lighted Christmas tree. Many gifts were exchanged. Their son, T. H. Lane, left for Cincinnati Sunday night.

* * *

Well, January started out fine—a beautiful bright day. May it continue.

* * *

Saw a freak accident on Broad street the other day. A young fellow was riding a motorcycle with side car south on Broad, when a woman coming east on Fourth street collided with him tud turned him turtle. I looked to see where he had disappeared to, when some men ran out and turned the car over and there he was under the side car, like a cat under a box. He got up, shook himself and didn't seem any the worse off for his experience.

* * *

No work for the postoffice force the 1st, but plenty on the 2nd.

* * *

Now we will settle down to routine work for 1931. On Feb. 22 the Tennessee Association of Letter Carriers will meet in Knoxville.

* * *

From now on we look forward to July 1, when the vacation period starts. In the meantitme, what does the year have in store for us.

Convict Labor System Assailed as Slavery

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 6.—Testifying before Gov. Trumbull's prison investigating committee here, Miss Genevieve A. Cowles, of New York City, condemned conditions at the Connecticut state prison as "unwholesome" and denounced the prison contract labor system as no better than slavery. She charged the exploitation of men in the prison shops for the benefit of contractors and officials.

Miss Cowles, an artist, spoke from first-hand experience, as from 1911 to 1916 she worked in the prison on the chapel mural painting, "Christ's Charge to Peter," being subject to the same rules as the convicts while she worked on the mural.

The Hartford Council of Churches has filed a statement with the commission, recommending a number of prison reforms, including the abolishment of the contract labor system.

URGE COMPENSATION CHANGES IN KANSAS

Topeka, Kan.—Organized labor in this state urges changes in the workers' compensation law. These include better medical provisions, the right of an injured employe to select his own doctor and higher weekly compensation.

WANT STATE COSSACKS.

Helena, Mont.—The Montana crime commission recommends that a state Cossack system be established in this state. Pennsylvania Cossacks are held up as a model.

Organized labor will combat the plan, which is intended to centralize police power of the state into a few hands.

LABOR GETS 'BREAK' IN ORGANIZATION OF STATE LEGISLATURE

Speakers of Both Houses Are Friendly to Workers.

David Hanly Submits Review of First Week's Activities of Lawmakers --- Aymon, Reed and Others Watching Developments --- Labor Program to Be Presented Next Week.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Jan. 8.—The general assembly has organized. Senator Fitzhugh, of Shelby county, was elected speaker of the senate. He has a good record on labor legislation. No committees have been appointed by the speakers of either the senate or the house.

The principal question before this general assembly is the investigation of state affairs, particularly as to the manipulation of the money of the state that was deposited in certain favored banks that are now in the hands of receivers. Gov. Horton appeared before a joint session of the two houses and read a brief message, in which he recommended an investigation of the state's affairs. The opinion here is that there will be a thorough investigation.

Walter M. Haynes, of Franklin county, was elected speaker of the house of representatives. Labor will receive fair treatment from him.

No labor bills have been introduced as yet, but I will have all legislation of the federation introduced next week. The program is that the legislature will take a recess in about ten days to allow the special committee of investigation to start its work.

Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, has been here since Monday. All the members of the joint legislative committee of the Tennessee Federation and the Railroad Brotherhoods are here—H. V. Reid, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers; Perry E. Daly, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; W. E. Jacobs, of the Order of Railroad Conductors; John W. Blevins, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and myself. Mr. Blevins is acting for W. A. Chrisman, who is in Chicago attending a meeting of the general grievance committee of the Illinois Central.

NEW OFFICERS ARE NAMED BY CIRCLE CLUB

W. C. Smith, W. F. Storey, M. T. DeLong and J. Martin Peyer Honored.

W. C. "Billy" Smith, for more than a quarter-century a member of the Iron Molders' union, and at present city building inspector, was Monday night named president of Circle club at the annual election of officers by Chattanooga's civic luncheon club composed exclusively of members of organized labor.

Mr. Smith succeeds W. L. Gardner, of the Typos, who retired voluntarily after having served two terms in the office. The new president has been an active member of the organization practically since its formation in January, 1925, and was vice-president last year.

W. F. Storey, of the Meatcutters, was elected vice-president. While holding membership only a short time, Mr. Storey has evinced a keen interest in the work of the club, and his election was unanimous.

For secretary-treasurer, M. T. DeLong, Railroad Fireman and charter member of Circle club, was named. "Marshall" has served the organization in various capacities, and has put in every assignment the same energy and zeal which has characterized his work in other branches of the labor movement for lo these many years. In his nominating speech it was recalled that he has served as secretary-treasurer of his brotherhood for some quarter-century, and should be thoroughly capable of taking care of Circle club funds, if any.

J. Martin Peyer, former president, also a charter member of the club, was elected chaplain, succeeding Mr. DeLong in that position.

A board of directors will be named at next regular meeting.

Each of the new officers asked for co-operation of all members during the coming year, and promised the best possible service.

Among the items of interest at the meeting was a discussion of the radio talks of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, who has delivered some telling truths over a national hook-up each Sunday night recently regarding the present economic crisis, and who has thereby brought upon himself the disfavor of certain interests which apparently resent honest facts being brought to light. It was pointed out that these interests threatened to be the means of Rev. Coughlin being barred from the air, and a motion was unanimously passed that a strong protest be sent to the local radio station against any interference with the minister's lectures, and a letter sent to him commending him on his courage and ability to face conditions as they are.

Efforts of the city officials to care for the hundreds of jobless, homeless and hungry were noted, and the secretary was instructed to express formal approval in the name of the club.

Monday night's meeting marked the sixth anniversary of the organization, and a number of charter members present reviewed the work the club had accomplished and pledged continued co-operation in similar matters for the future.

Machinists, 56, to Install New Officers

Members of Lodge 56, Machinists, are urged by officers of the lodge to be present at the regular semi-monthly meeting at Central Labor hall next Tuesday evening, Jan. 13, when the installation of officers elected for 1931 at the last session will take place. Announcement is made that the meeting will be called to order promptly at 7:30, and the installation ceremonies will follow shortly thereafter.

ON GUARD AT A DANVILLE MILL GATE

Here are two Virginia state militiamen doing guard duty at one of the gates of the Fitzgerald mill at Schoolfield, just outside the Danville, Va., city limits. The youngsters seemed pleased to have their picture taken. Guards have been doing duty in this manner ever since Gov. Pollard ordered the troops to Danville. In addition squads constantly march around and around the entire mill property, in an endless parade of protection against something or other. Note the youthfulness of these two soldiers. Note also the fixed bayonets.

DANVILLE STRIKERS HOLD LINE; DECLARE BATTLE JUST BEGUN

FREY HOLDS DANVILLE WORKERS FIGHT FOR AMERICAN PRINCIPLES

Backing Green's Proposal for Settlement of Bix Textile Walkout, Labor Executive Denounces Autocracy in Industry and Declares Strike Is Just and Righteous.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Jan. 8.—Before a crowd of textile workers and citizens in general that overflowed Dansylvania hall, John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, backed up the proposal by President William Green for the settlement of the Danville textile strike, in a rousing speech Sunday afternoon.

He said the workers of Danville were not out on strike merely for the sake of "striking," but that they were standing for a principle of American liberty which the forefathers of the Virginians then listening to him had fought for when this government was established. He declared the workers did not want to "run" the business of the textile mills, or any other plant, but all they wanted was the same liberty in organization that the employers of the nation took—the right to join an organization of their own choosing.

Mr. Frey denounced what he termed "pig-sty prosperity," the kind that gives the employers all the advantages and all the profits and the workers hovels to live in and pauper wages; the kind, he said, that is indicated by poor business men who run shack stores and are one jump ahead of the sheriff.

Workers' Cause Righteous.

The speaker discussed organization in this day of organization, and declared the strike of the Danville workers as just and righteous. "No employer," he said, "should have the right to dictate what a worker should eat, how he should dress and how he should educate his children. No employer is so good and so infallible that we can trust him with such matters. We do not permit our mayors, our governors of states or the president of the United States to have this power. Why, then should certain employers arrogate this power to themselves? That is what the American Federation has been, and is, fighting. It is what you people in Danvalle are fighting. Such power is un-American, unrighteous and does not belong to these times."

Mr. Frey emphasized the fact that more democracy was needed in industry and no employer had the right to dictate the very principles of life to his workers. The speaker urged the workers to stand by their organization and pointed out the great benefit trade unionism brings to any community. "As wages rise the community is bettered," he pointed out. "The worker has a right to a voice in what industry does, inasmuch as labor produces."

Debt to Virginia Patriots.

The speaker emphasized the fact the people of the nation owe a great debt to the Virginia patriots who wrote liberty into the history of the country. He urged the workers to continue to write liberty in their lives by leaving something in industrial democracy for their children.

Speaking on the subject of industry itself, Mr. Frey declared that no employer was entitled to carry on a business if his enterprise is not of benefit to the workers he employs. "Yet, there are men, employers, in industry who not only want to dictate all the terms, but they want it so their workers are in complete subjection to their slightest whims," the speaker declared.

In closing Mr. Frey made an analysis of the proposal made by President Green as one being manifestly fair to the employers of the Dan River and Riverside mills, as well as to the workers and the general public. He declared that the workers were willing to leave their case in the hands of outsiders because the cause was just. "No person who has anything to hide," the speaker said, "is afraid to put his case before the bar of public justice. Let the mill owners do this and the Danville strike can be settled."

Praises Strikers' Courage.

Mr. Frey called attention to the fact that he had organized many local unions in his own craft (molders) in the south, most of them thirty years ago, and that they were still going. He paid tribute to the Danville workers for their courage and self-sacrifice in standing firm for the principle of the right to organize and predicted a happy end to the controversy.

A number of Danville business men were in attendance at the hall to hear the distinguished labor official talk. As the meeting opened C. W. Bolick, organizer in charge of the strike, asked if anybody was "going to work" Monday. A shout of "No" almost raised the roof. More than 2,000 persons crowded the small hall and as many more were turned away.

doing for them in their effort to win a righteous strike. The committee reported that many of the men who spend most of their time out of doors on picket lines, committee work and in the woods cutting wood for the strikers, needed shoes, and contributions to this end are asked for.

Trade union organizers who have spent years in the cause declare they never saw better morale and spirit displayed by workers anywhere than in the Danville strike area. The slogan "The strike has just begun" indicates the temper of the workers.

LABOR'S CHIEF SEES HOPE FOR EARLY END OF BUSINESS 'SLUMP'

Green Believes Spring Activities Will Mark Turning Point.

Gloomy as Present Conditions Are, Signs of Improvement Are Appearing --- Emphasizes Need of Organization to Bring Industrial Stability.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—Gloomy as present conditions are, organized labor sees hope for improvement in the coming months of 1931, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, says in a statement on the unemployment conditions and the prospects for the future. His statement follows:

"The second winter of unemployment finds us with increased unemployment and with decreased reserves. Approximately five millions of wage earners are without employment. Gloomy as present conditions are, we find hope in the spirit with which communities are rallying to meet the emergency of widespread need, and the capacity of American citizens to cope with difficult problems; in our unemployment reports from unions in twenty-four industrial centers which show the increase in unemployment this month is much less than last month and less than the regular seasonal increase this month; in the fact that deflation of prices has gone so far as to indicate the bottom has been reached; in evidence of returning confidence in the production policies of important production companies; in the general belief that spring activity will mark the turning of the tide.

"Wage earners have been bearing a heavy burden as a result of serious business depression. About 50 per cent of trade union members have had to lower their standards of living because of lowered incomes. The incomes of wage earners have declined by over six billions in the past year. As they represent over 80 per cent of the purchasing public, their falling income has still further added to the business depression which was caused by productivity increasing faster than incomes. In sharp contrast to the decline in wages industries have in 1930 increased the sums paid for dividends and interest by over $400,000,000. Part of this goes back into investments whereas what is needed is to finance those who buy the products of industry.

"Fear has laid a paralyzing hand on our business transactions and there is needless demoralization. This fear is born of uncertainty. There can be no stability without organization based upon advance planning. What is needed in this critical situation is clear judgment and discriminating application of principles that will stimulate business activity. Attention has been necessarily directed to relief first, but permanent help can come only from return to regular customary employment. These fundamental principles are essential to restore and maintain business prosperity:

"(1) High wages to finance consumers.

"(2) Shorter hours so as to give employment to as many as possible.

"(3) Organization of wage earners so this large group of consumers may be in a position to advance their interests and keep their returns from industry advancing with increased productivity.

"(4) The development of the machinery to set up co-ordinated control of industries.

"Wage earners look forward to the coming months of 1931 with the hope that the seasonal improvement will be the beginning of better times. We feel confident that American business has the capacity and resourcefulness to put order into our economic relations so that we can avoid breakdowns. Future progress lies in team work and trade unions stand committed to a program of co-operation for the promotion of mutual interests. Labor looks forward to opportunities for sound organization in 1931, confident that prosperity will follow."

M'DANIELS SEES BRIGHT FUTURE FOR BUILDING

Trades Unionist Declares Several Large Projects to Be Started During Year.

E. E. McDaniels, business manager of the new building trades council now in process of formation, is optimistic with respect to the local building program for 1931, and declares he personally knows of a number of major projects in this line which will be started when favorable weather opens up. The outlook at this time is better, he declared Thursday, than it has been in many years, and if a solid front is presented to employers, organized labor stands a splendid chance of securing employment for its members on large "jobs" during the summer.

Mr. McDaniels said the building trades council held an enthusiastic meeting last Wednesday night, and that he believed all crafts are realizinz the value of co-operation. A committee was named to visit all building trades crafts which are not affiliated and urge them to join the new organization.

It has been decided, said Mr. McDaniels, to meet every Wednesday night until further notice, in order to transact necessary business and complete the work of organization. Trades unionists of all crafts, he added, have a cordial invitation to attend the sessions.

Adwell President Plasterers, 157

Local 157, Operative Plasterers, at the regular weekly meeting Wednesday night at Central Labor hall, named Lawrence T. Adwell president, and elected and installed a complete list of officers for the coming year. Without exception, those who will have official charge of matters concerning these workers during 1931 are men of long experience in the labor movement, and it is a safe prediction that the Plasterers will make considerable progress during the year to come.

The "official family" to serve with Mr. Adwell follows:

Vice-President—Garnet Vetter.
Financial and Corresponding Secretary—P. B. Garber.
Treasurer—W. M. Beck.
Recording Secretary—W. L. Adams.
Tyler—John Beck.

EIGHT HOURS IN OIL FIELD.

Local 165, International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' union, at the regular monthly meeting Tuesday night, elected officers for the coming year, Sam Pope being named president, Arthur Gregory vice-president, and H. E. LaChance secretary and treasurer.

Mr. LaChance said Thursday that the local Pressmen have had a fine year, everything considered, and the membership and interest increased remarkably during 1930. He expressed the belief that within the next few months every eligible pressman in the jurisdiction will be a member of Local 165.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—When was Samuel Gompers sentenced to jail for violating a labor injunction?

A.—On Dec. 23, 1908, he was sentenced to a year in jail for violating a sweeping injunction obtained by the Bucks Stove and Range company, of St. Louis. Frank Morrison and John Mitchell were sentenced at the same time on the same charge. The case was appealed and the sentences were not served.

Q.—Who said: "The organization of workers to better the conditions of labor is undoubtedly a safeguard of equality and opportunity and in accord with basic principles. The essence of combination of workers is collective bargaining, and the recognition of the right to combine cannot be separated from the right to bargain collectively."

A.—President Hoover.

Q.—Is there a strike of garment workers in New York City now?

A.—The strike of tailors and dressmakers in Fifth avenue shops is still going on. The strike belongs to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union.

What Next!

Discovery of a ray which pierces 80 inches of leaden plate with a loss of only half of its strength and which is ten times as penetrative as the strongest radium ray is announced by Prof. V. F. Hess, of Vienna. In a paper read before the Vienna Chemical and Physical society, Prof. Hess said this great force must undoubtedly be of extraterrestrial origin, since its intensity increases with distance from the earth's surface. Prof. Hess believes the wave length of the rays to be unbelievably short, probably one hundred millionth that of the ultra-violet ray and one thousandth that of radium rays.

Sense From Congress

The people of the country are tired of "good party men." They know that is where crime and wrong get into high places. "Good party men," as ordinarily understood, are men who will cover up sin and debauchery and crime in their own party and disclose it only when they find it in the other party. That is doing more damage and more hurt to our government and our civilization than any other thing."—Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska.

LABOR VIEWPOINTS GAIN.

New viewpoints on automatic machinery and wider acceptance of labor's long demand for higher wages and shorter hours marked the year 1930. The old theory that greater production cheapens prices and creates an increased demand, followed by more employment, is being discarded. Men are realizing that automatic machinery and scientific processes, yet in their infancy, affect every industry and calling and that these create unemployment faster than displaced workers can be absorbed.

Widely-heralded "stabilization" assures employment to some, but this cannot check the continuous displacement of workers. Even the men who believe their jobs are "stabilized" may eventually become victims of the machine. Mass production in agriculture illustrates how mechanization operates. The government is pleading with farmers to produce less. The same is true of oil and other raw materials. This slow-down process is referred to as "stabilization," but in its essence it is the same as labor's demand for shorter hours.

The past year has vindicated labor's long agitation for higher wages. Men outside the ranks of organized workers are being praised for their advanced position on this subject, but their argument was used by trade unionists thirty years ago. Lay-offs and staggered employment are also being advocated, but these place the burden of the depression on labor. Dividends to stockholders in 1930 increased $400,000,000.

Volumes have been written on the cause and cure for this depression, but these reasons and remedies are words. The value of shorter hours and higher wages is ignored.

Organized labor must emphasize the solution for present conditions, while insisting that the resources of government be used to appease hunger and to shelter the homeless. It is mockery to talk of "rugged individualism" when human beings are hungry and when but a small percentage of these unfortunates are fed in soup houses. The situation cannot be changed by the charitably inclined who collect thousands of dollars that are in reality belated wages. If this money were paid in full, when earned, instead of handed out as a pittance to unemployed, there would be no depression. Organized workers must continue their solution for depressions, but they must reject ancient tax-saving theories and demand that the hungry and shelterless be protected.

There is no excuse for hunger in a land such as ours. Prophecy of a better day is no substitute for distress that can and must be relieved. Billions of dollars are spent without stint when the nation is threatened by an outside enemy, but insidious foes, such as hunger and want, are minimized, even though they rock a country's foundation.

It is unjust—and dangerous—to take the position of French autocrats—"after us the deulge."

ECONOMIST IGNORES FACTS.

Prof. Wilford I. King, professor of economics, New York university, is against shorter hours for wage workers. He acknowledges that "it has been impossible to sell, at the prices quoted, all the products of some of our farms and factories," but explains that we are in the midst of "a buyers' strike," and that people are pessimistic. As soon as this changes to optimism, he says, "depression will gradually give way to prosperity and unemployment will diminish."

Prof. King does not give the reason for "a buyers' strike" and for pessimism. The economist applies the same flippant "reasoning" to the farm problem. He says there is too much wheat and suggests that if they (the farmers) "shift their energies to producing things people are willing to pay for, the better it will be for all concerned."

He fails to list commodities that the people "are willing to pay for," nor does he explain how, when and where farmers will make this change.

Farmers Need Food, Says Legion Chief

Washington. — Arkansas farmers are poverty stricken, said Oran J. Vaughan, commander of the American Legion of that state, in a letter to President Hoover.

The legionnaire said it would be "an empty gesture to offer to loan our farmers money to purchase food for live stock, seed and fertilizer with no provision for necessities of life for themselves and families."

MORE LYNCHINGS IN 1930.

New York.—Despite denunciation of mob rule by the church, the bar and press, there were twenty-five lynchings in this country during 1930, as compared with twelve the previous year.

These figures were issued by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The association reiterated its demand that congress take prompt action to stamp out lynchings "if the United States is not to continue being disgraced and humiliated before the civilized world."

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part VIII.
MONEY—WHAT IS IT?
(Part 1.)

WM. L. MOSS

What is money? The simplest answer is: Money is an invention. It is an invention like writing, printing, ship-building, the higher forms of reasoning, etc., and was created to facilitate exchange. Like the rest of man's inventions, man can live without it, yet it serves a particular purpose for him, he has accommodated his life to its use and is unwilling to do without it. Money is not, as the unthinking might believe, a distinctive mark of man's civilization. There have been very stable, elaborate and worthwhile civilizations without money. These were civilizations before which we of today stand in awe and wonder at their arts and industry, they lasted longer than any successive forms have done, they created and invented things, now lost, which the world has never been able to duplicate, and they were so far advanced that after passing into the dust and into all but oblivion itself, later civilizations have honored them by copying many of their features—and envying those they did not have the ability to reproduce! These ancient civilizations maintained active life and continuous industry without money—as far as daily and hourly exchanges by means of coins among the masses was concerned. In Babylon and Nineveh money was no part of the people's life. For 3,000 years the highly complex civilization of Egypt, the land of those who built the Pyramids, sculptured the Sphinx and erected the great Temples of Karnac, had no coinage. In fact, it was as late as 600 B. C. that the first coins were minted. In much of the Europe of Homer's day cattle was the means of exchange; we even get our word "pecuniary" from the Latin word "pecunia" (money), which in turn the Latins derived from "pecus" (cattle). We get still another word from this Latin source; the word "chattel" derives from "cattle," and chattel has come to represent all of one's property. In the Zend-Avesta of India a physician's bill is calculated in cattle. Few know when we pay our doctor his "fee" we do exactly the same thing, for the word "fee" is the old word "vieb," which in German still retains the sense of cattle. Ancient China didn't let money govern its economic life. It did not have a genuine coinage, business being on a basis of barter. In later centuries coins were at times used in China, but they were by fiat deliberately abandoned for long periods, barter being the medium of exchange in that country even up until the dawn of the present century! It is interesting to note about moneyless China that it never had a "dark age" in the European sense, its social collapse was never so complete as in European countries, and it is to the credit of China during its moneyless centuries that it did not suffer so complete deterioration in cleanliness, decorative arts and literary efforts as has the monied Western hemispheres. During the Middle Ages a great part of Europe was on a basis of a "natural" rather than a "money" economy. When we get closer home—what? Take, for instance, the days of our grandsires, the men who made this great American republic. They lived their lives amid a practically moneyless economy. Theirs was a moneyless society to the extent that they could live their entire lives and never use a coin—just as Russian peasants and the lower classes of European and Oriental countries do today. Even in the days of Abraham Lincoln money entered so little into the lives of many people that men could go from year's end to year's end and never so much as see a coin!

Money is, then, as we have seen, an invention—invented to facilitate exchange—and is not necessary to either man's existence or to what man is pleased to call his civilization.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The dawn of 1931 is a good time to stop mushy thinking.

It is a good time for every trade unionist to reaffirm his loyalty to trade union principles.

It is a good time to cut a clear line between trade unionism and the mess of half-baked, frivolous, treacherous and vaporous notions and nostrums that clutter up the thought-scape.

Every now and then someone comes along aching to make for himself a place in print and the quickest route is the utterance of some "new" idea, some notion that is startling because of its nonsense.

Too many people fail to distinguish between sound principles and glittering phrases.

Adepts at phrase making have long been with us. It is not evident that their numbers diminish.

* * *

Whether their numbers diminish is not important. That they be properly set down and known for what they are is important.

After more than half a century of real, fighting existence, this trade union movement ought to have gained the ability to spot fakes, the fakes of philosophy along with all the other kinds.

For the most part that ability is a very real thing. But there are those—and probably there always will be those—who will be attracted by glitter, by tinsel, by the unreal.

The hangers-on of the trade union movement, with their vast promises, their shoddy ambitions, their shabby little tricks and pretenses, are as numerous as ever and perhaps a bit more numerous. The communist movement has given birth to a fresh group of non-conformists and mental freaks.

* * *

The American trade union movement is the only labor movement in the world that does not provide a place inside the tent for adventurers and those who like to play around with this and that looking for vicarious thrills. The nimble witted can't get in legitimately, so they attempt by every device known to man to sneak in, crawl in and wriggle in.

The trade union movement is a movement of wage earners, having definite aims, a definite program of action and a definite philosophy.

"Nice people" by the score would like to have a hand in shaping labor's policies. They would like to pretend that they are the moving forces, that they are the cream in the labor movement coffee.

Many of them are perfectly willing to pay well for the privilege, having money along with their wits.

New Year's is a good time to freshen up on trade unionism and get back to its firm foundations.

* * *

The American trade union movement has never given an inch to the various ism and ists.

It has stood its ground on the field of philosophy and it has come off a winner for every one of the passing fads of mind.

It has proved its right to its faith. And it has proved the utter soundness of that faith.

Trade unionism is not a toy or an experimental thing. It is an instrument for the doing of certain things for working people.

And every working man and woman belongs inside the trade union movement.

It is not a question of "what can the union do for me"—it is not a selfish question.

It is a matter of duty to belong to the movement of labor, helping as well as being helped.

It's New Year's. Be a trade unionist beginning now!

Mill Workers Fired, Then Wished Merry Xmas, Happy New Year

(By International Labor News Service.)

Reading, Pa., Jan. 1.—Notice that they were to lose their jobs was the Christmas "present" handed workers of the Reading Iron company's Ninth Street mills by their employers, who did not forget to wish them a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. The employes received the following letter shortly before the holidays:

"To the Employes of Ninth Street Mills:

"The quality of puddle bars produced this fall has shown a consistent improvement and indicates that skillfulness and a fine spirit of cooperation exist within our organization.

"It is indeed a matter of gratification to all of us and we appreciate the efforts put forth during the past few months.

"Much as we would like to see an uninterrupted continuance of the good work, it has become necessary, through causes beyond our control, to temporarily halt production of puddle bars until the excessive inventory will have been reduced to a point in keeping with the demand.

"The puddle mill will, therefore, close when the present supply of pig iron is exhausted and remain closed until further notice.

"The management deeply regrets that this decision has had to be made at this time of the year and hopes that business conditions will improve rapidly so that operations may soon be resumed.

"Wishing one and all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, I am,

"Very truly yours,
(Signed) "R. S. WENGER,
"Vice-President."

Employes Are Gouged On U. S. Public Work

Greensboro, N. C.—The Central Labor union of this city protested to President Hoover against low wage practices of contractors at Fort Bragg.

The union calls attention to the president's declaration against wage cuts, made on Dec. 23, following the refusal of congress to insert a prevailing wage clause in the $116,000,000 appropriation. The protest follows:

"Contractors on government work at Fort Bragg, Fayetteville, N. C., are paying bricklayers, carpenters, other skilled building tradesmen approximately half prevailing wage scale of this section. We feel your statement as quoted by Associated Press, Dec. 23, relative to existing policy of government justifies us in calling this to your attention with hope that an adjustment of this practice may be made which will conform to your desires as expressed in news story."

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

WEALTHY IN VULGAR SPLURGES WHILE MILLIONS BEG FOR WORK

Power Magnate Squanders Fortune on Daughter's "Coming Out" Party While Jobless Throng Soup Kitchen Across the Street—Similar Barbaric Displays in Other Cities.

The coming out party of Helen Eames Doherty, stepdaughter of the power magnate, Henry L. Doherty, was the most elaborate and expensive affair ever seen in Washington, according to a special article in the current issue of Labor.

It was held the night after Christmas at the Hotel Mayflower, the largest hostelry in the capital. Two whole floors were taken over for the party. Decorators and lighting experts brought in from New York turned them into a fairyland, the article continues.

Expensive entertainers, including a radio star and a famous quartet, were brought from the same city. A twenty-five piece orchestra supplied music.

A thousand guests were present. Many of them were brought from other cities in special trains. After the reception and dancing, they sat down at midnight to a five-course supper—really a superb banquet. Then revelry went on until 4 o'clock in the morning, when breakfast was served.

Soup Kitchen Across Street.

And outside, in front of the hotel, unemployed men were selling apples and stamping their feet to keep warm; while across the street, in the wee small hours, other jobless men began to gather in the cold rain and wait in line for breakfast from the soup kitchen established by this same hotel.

The lowest estimate printed of the cost of this vulgar splurge puts it at more than $50,000. Probably twice that sum would not cover all the items. Senator Norris declared that it was "scattering money around ruthlessly while millions are suffering."

What makes the atrocious taste of such dollars flaunting even worse than it first seems is the source from which these dollars come.

Small Investors Lost.

Mr. Doherty is the promoter of the huge and tangled power concern known as Cities Service. Stock in that concern was literally peddled from door to door by high pressure salesmen, all over the country and particularly in the west, and sold to small investors at fantastic prices.

Before the crash in November, 1929, Cities Service common stock sold as high as $69 a share. Now it is selling around $15 a share. Probably 100,000 families have lost money on this one stock—and some have lost the savings of a lifetime.

The shrinkage in market value of this and Mr. Doherty's other companies is estimated at nearly $1,500,000,000.

And the money thus lost goes in $100,000 lots to spread a feast in the midst of hunger, at which only those who are not hungry may eat.

Other "Coming Out" Orgies.

While the Doherty affair is the most garish in its display of all yet recorded, this season has seen a veritable epidemic of costly debuts. They have become so numerous, notorious and expensive that the staid Associated Press has been moved to send out a story on the subject.

Coming out parties this season in one New York hotel—and that far from the largest—will cost well above $500,000, says the Associated Press.

Four of these parties at the Ritz-Carlton had 1,000 guests apiece. The music for the debut of Barbara Hutton, granddaughter of Frank Woolworth, founder of the five and ten cent stores, cost several thousand dollars.

On another occasion, the ballrooms were made over into an old-time southern plantation for the delectation of a debutante from South Carolina.

Fortune in Flowers.

Up in (supposedly) thrifty New England, orchids valued at $100,000 were decorations at the coming out party of another young girl.

Meanwhile, 5,000,000 workers in this country cannot find work. Their income is gone. Other millions are working part time. Never in America was there such widespread distress, and never was there such insolent, garish, ghastly waste of money in barbaric display.

WOUNDED MARION TRADES UNIONISTS SUE SHERIFF AND COMPANY

(Special Correspondence)

Marion, N. C., Jan. 8.—Damage suits totaling $60,000 were filed in McDowell county, North Carolina, superior court Dec. 10 against Sheriff Oscar Atkins and deputies, together with the Marion Manufacturing company, for Rhom Minish, wounded worker, by Attorney Charles Hutchins, of Burnsville. Minish was shot in the back of the head on Oct. 2, 1930, when the officers fired into a crowd of fleeing workers following the release of tear gas by the sheriff. Six men were killed and twenty-four wounded from the volley.

Other damage suits in behalf of the "estates" of four of the slain men were filed several weeks ago by Mr. Hutchins, who is the attorney for the American Civil Liberties union.

Members of the Marion local of the United Textile Workers' union have been very helpful in "rounding up" witnesses and gathering evidence.

WHY INHERITANCE TAX IS OPPOSED BY WEALTH

Cincinnati.—The reason for opposition to inheritance taxes is shown in the report of the executor of a former newspaper owner in this city whose estate is valued at $6,328,844.

The executor paid an inheritance tax of $536,947.50 to the state of Ohio and $134,136.89 to the federal government.

This total of $671,083 would pay an old age pension of $6 a week to 100 persons for approximately twenty-two years.

Harvard Alumni Pay Back Wages Of Scrubwomen

Banker's Son Distributes Money to Discharged Workers, Severely Criticizing University Corporation for Its Attitude.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 8.—What was probably the final chapter in the celebrated case of the Harvard scrubwomen, discharged shortly before Christmas, 1929, because Harvard university was unwilling to pay them a few cents more a day, was written when Corliss Lamont, son of the New York banker, distributed $3,880 among the nineteen discharged women.

The amounts distributed to the women varied according to the length of their service at Harvard, the largest sum being $300 and the smallest $60. In distributing the money—which was in the form of savings bank accounts—Lamont stressed the point that it was not to be considered a gift but "merely back wages due them."

Lamont, as secretary-treasurer of the Harvard scrubwomen's fund committee, sent a letter accompanying the money to each of the women.

University Refuses to Act.

"I take great pleasure," Lamont's letter said, "in enclosing a savings account book in your name representing approximately the back pay due you for work at the Widener library over a number of years. This is your share of a total fund of $3,880 subscribed by 268 Harvard men from various groups.

"When it was discovered last January that Harvard university for nine years had been paying the cleaning women in Widener two cents an hour under the minimum wage standard, it was the hope of every fair-minded Harvard man that the university itself would make good the underpayment.

"The university, however, consistently refused to take such action, making no real effort to investigate the matter and to arrive at the full truth.

Blames Corporation.

"A group of Harvard men finally decided, therefore, to raise a fund of $3,880 covering back wages owing to the nineteen women discharged November and December, 1929.

"Final responsibility for the university's neglect and niggardliness in this matter rests with the Harvard corporation. Though clearly proved to be in the wrong, the corporation has steadily and stubbornly refused to acknowledge its mistake.

"We hope that the payment of the back wages by Harvard men will convince you that the corporation's attitude has been from start to finish a misrepresentation of Harvard."

Representative government, to be effective, must be so framed that the people's will must be performed and not thwarted.—Representative Luther A. Johnson, of Texas.

The cost is Small Wherever You call

Talking to out-of-town relatives or friends is the most pleasing and satisfactory means of communication. Telephoning is just like being there in person and the cost is surprisingly small. When using Day Station-to-Station service you can talk a distance of one hundred miles for approximately sixty cents and by using the same service after 8:30 at night you can talk that far for as little as thirty-five cents. The cost of talking greater distances is correspondingly small.

People everywhere are daily experiencing enjoyable chats with relatives and friends in other cities. You, too, can afford such pleasures. Remember "the cost is small wherever you call."

The Hamilton Securities Corporation, with paid-in capital stock of $500,000, is owned by the stockholders of the Hamilton National Bank. This is not included in the above figures. Through this organization we offer a complete investment service.

The Hamilton National Bank is a member of the Federal Reserve System, and has all the privileges and facilities offered by that great Government organization.

The Bank owns five banking houses—the Head Office and four branches, the former being a fifteen-story structure at Market and Seventh Streets. All are free from mortgage, and it is the policy of the Board of Directors to keep them so. This is a visible asset which cannot be lost. The real estate on which our Head Office is located is carried at exactly its cost twenty-four years ago, though it is now probably worth five times its original cost.

We have a large Board of Directors, influential and successful business men; also a staff of experienced officers. Our President has been with this bank and its predecessor for more than forty-one years, a record in this city for continuous service with virtually one financial institution. Most of our other officials have been with the bank from fifteen to thirty-three years. All are stockholders, and over 95% of our employees are also stockholders. Most of our Directors have large financial interests in the Bank, and all stand for its policy and integrity.

We cordially invite business from individuals, business organizations and banks.

Pale and Weak

"I THINK Cardui is a wonderful medicine, for I improved greatly after taking it," says Mrs. A. W. English, of R. F. D. 4, Roanoke, Va. "When I was just a girl of 13, my mother gave this medicine to me, and it did me a great deal of good. I was weak and run-down. After I had taken Cardui awhile, I felt much better.

"In 1924, my health was poor. I felt miserable, and hadn't enough strength to do my housework. It took all my willpower to keep up. I was pale and weak.

"I got Cardui again and took it. My improvement was wonderful. I can recommend Cardui to others, for my health was so much better after I had taken a course of the Cardui Home Treatment."

BOSS OF AMERICA'S ONLY MILITARY LINE

COL. HIRAM L. OPIE

Here's the commanding officer of the only American soldiers now on active duty in continental United States.

He's Col. Hiram L. Opie, commanding troops at Danville, Va., seeing to it that strikebreakers get into the mills O. K.

Col. Opie's troops did their tour of duty on Christmas day, just as on other days.

But let no one say they are cheerful about their jobs. Reports are that the contingent seethes with resentment—but a soldier's resentment is just that much wasted energy! There they are, most of them nice boys, many of whom ought to be in school.

Col. Opie's fitness for command in a strike zone has been challenged by the Virginia State Federation of Labor, but Gov. Pollard keeps him on the job.

Union Printers In Florida City Replaced by 'Rats'

Orlando Dailies Lock Out Composing-Room Employes After Terms Proposed by Publishers Had Been Accepted in Full.

Orlando, Fla., Jan. 8.—Serving notice at 5 o'clock New Year's eve that after that hour the services of all union printers employed by them would be no longer desired, the Evening Reporter-Star and the Morning Sentinel severed connection with the group of men and women who had been in their service for a number of years and with the International union. This notice came following an agreement by the printers to accept the offer made by the publishers.

Practically all of the printers affected have been employes of the papers since before the boom days and a number of them had been on the staffs of the papers for over fifteen years and are listed among the highest type of working residents in Orlando. Approximately 80 per cent of these printers own their homes in Orlando and 90 per cent of them are taxpayers. All of them have been residents long enough to become a part of the life of the city and are regarded as substantial and law-abiding citizens.

The discharge notice was handed the committee from the employes by the publishers at a conference agreed to by both parties to consider differences in the proposed wage between the publishers and printers. It was called following proposals for a reduction in wages submitted by the publishers and a counter proposal made by the printers. That the printers confidently expected to reach an amicable agreement was evidenced at a meeting one week previously, when, after discussing the problems of the publishers, they agreed to accept in full the offer of the Morning Sentinel. The offer of the Reporter-Star was the only one in question, and the differences of employer and employe in this were minor.

Norris Scores Debut As Ill-Timed Luxury

Washington, Jan. 7.—The $50,000 party given in this city by a public utilities magnate for the social debut of his daughter was assailed by Senator Norris, who said this is an instance of "a man scattering his money around ruthlessly while millions are suffering."

"That is the trouble with our prosperity," said Senator Norris. "I can't help thinking that this is exactly the same situation as existed prior to the French revolution. I don't anticipate such a thing in this enlightened age, but something very like it is pretty nearly here."

He referred to a bread line in the same block in which the party of 1,000 guests were held. "I am glad," he said, "that this man's daughter had such a nice time, but she could have had as nice a time on one hundredth part of the money that was spent."

Mary, Mary, quite contrary—
How your hem-line grows!
It used to swirl above your knees,
Now it nearly hides your toes.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

After a big Christmas and a Happy New Year this column again makes its appearance from a recess of two weeks. We had thought that most readers skipped the ramblings of Melody Lane when they read The Labor World on Saturday morning, but from the number of inquiries we discovered our mistake, and find that some of the dear public do find something interesting—or rather funny—in the column.

* * *

Brothers are reminded of the $5 assessment for the convention fund. It was decided at last meeting to pay $1 each month. Chairman Cohn has made arrangements for the members to pay at Summers-Washburn studio. Dig down, fellows, and get the buck!

* * *

"Flying High," under George White's direction, dropped in to see us at the Memorial auditorium. Bill Krug, Frank Worthy, John Casale and Ralph Miller augmented the orchestra. Most everyone spoke highly of the show.

At last members of our local are breaking into society. The social page of the Times carried the announcement that Mr. John C. Patty had returned from a brief visit to Chicago.

* * *

Readers of this column found that the writer was not kidding when he spoke of Joe Leland as a tap dancer. Little Joe held the patrons of the Bijou spell-bound when he shook a wicked toe at the midnight matinee New Year's eve.

* * *

We think a suitable name for Frank Worthy's band would be Frank and his Soup-Strainers. These misplaced eyebrows are a curse in themselves, but when Herman Dodd and Buck Weaver come out in them—Wow!—page Dracula!

* * *

The 1931 session got off to a good start last Sunday. President Summers lined up his committees and everything went off smoothly. Perhaps the county court or even the state legislature should drop around and see how we run things.

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

Well, it seems that the site for the new postoffice is not yet settled. After taking twenty feet off to widen Ninth street and as much off Tenth street and setting the building back on Georgia avenue to widen the sidewalk, and twenty or thirty feet to open the street in the rear, what have you left? A narrow piece of land which will be inadequate for the purpose of a postoffice. If the government does take this piece they will regret it before many years. Take the block between Market and Broad from Tenth to Eleventh and you have plenty of room for now and the future, as it could not be crowded and would be on the main highways through the city. The objection to this place is all poppycock. It's an ideal place for the million-dollar postoffice.

* * *

We are glad to note that the wife of M. A. Lichtenstetter, who underwent an operation, is recovering nicely.

* * *

Oakes drove his car to town one day, parked it, and after work got on the bus and went home, forgetting all about his car.

J. H. Johns had to throw up the sponge and go home as his feet were sore and he had to get off them.

J. A. Carson, M. A. Lichtenstetter, R. E. Lipscomb were elected delegates to the state convention, which meets in Knoxville Feb. 23. Oehlson wants to take the band along and show off his boys. May charter a bus for the trip.

* * *

Secretary Brooks in his notice of meeting of Branch 62 says, "Frank Brooks will not make a speech." Thanks.

* * *

You could talk all day and not say anything, says Pat Connor to J. L. Miller.

* * *

Pat got in to his stride the other day and defeated (Peter) Earl Miller seven straight at checkers. Miller says the score for the week is: Pat, 13; Miller, 10, Friday and Saturday to go.

There will be a meeting of the stockholders of the Credit Union Tuesday, Jan. 13, at 4 o'clock. Important that all be there.

Brookhart Attacks Use of Injunction

Iowa Senator Denounces Assaults on Labor's Rights and Urges Passage of Pending Anti-Injunction Bill.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Jan. 8.—Urging the passage of the amended Shipstead anti-injunction bill now before the senate, Senator Smith W. Brookhart, of Iowa, declared in a radio address from Washington that the injunction is the most powerful instrument against labor in its demand for equal rights, and the power which it gives federal courts has run riot in the struggle between human rights and property rights.

"The struggle between human rights and property rights is as old as civilization," Senator Brookhart said. "In fact, it is scarcely a generation ago that property rights in men were abolished by the constitution of the United States and equal political rights given to all.

"The Declaration of Independence and even these amendments to the constitution have not yet resulted in economic equality. In the economic field in our country property is still ruling, and much of its rule is quite as ruthless as the autocrats of old. Our method of organization of corporations recognizes no human right. Men do not vote at all. Capital alone votes for the man who owns it. We boast of individuality in the United States, but it is a mockery and is subordinated to the rights of property in every great economic organization in our country.

"A corporate organization in its very nature means a combination of capital. In each great corporation there are united capital holdings of many people and this combination exercises a power akin to the feudal lords of old.

"Labor has asked the right to organize for collective bargaining as capital itself has always been organized. This demand has been resisted. The most powerful instrument against labor in this demand for its equal rights is the so-called labor injunction, and this injunction is largely the result of court-made law."

Churches Join In Aid to Jobless

Permanent Prevention of Idleness to Be Discussed at Conference by Jewish, Protestant and Catholic Welfare Bodies.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Jan. 8.—Plans are well under way for the conference on "Permanent Preventives of Unemployment," sponsored by the social justice committee of the central conference of American Rabbis, the social service commission of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare conference, which will be held in Washington, D. C., at the Hamilton hotel, Jan. 26-27.

The executive committee in charge of the program met in Washington during the week to complete the plans for the conference. Announcement was made by the chairman of the committee that this conference will endeavor to attract thinking people who feel the responsibility of determining the causes and remedies for the "recurring tragedy of unemployment."

Prominent among the speakers whose names appear on the program are Dr. John R. Commons, well known economist from the University of Wisconsin, and John E. Edgerton, president of the anti-union National Association of Manufacturers, both of whom will speak at the session of the conference devoted to "unemployment insurance."

Robert F. Wagner, United States senator from New York; D. J. Meserole, president of the National Unemployment league, and Edward E. Hunt, of the United States department of commerce, will discuss "Public Works and Construction Programs." Other speakers will include Rabbi Edward L. Israel, of Baltimore, and Dr. John A. Ryan, of the Catholic university.

The sessions of the conference will be open to the public.

MACHINISTS LOSE LOYAL MEMBER

G. W. Exum, Long-Time Employe of Southern Shops, Passes to His Reward.

Lodge 1450, Machinists, lost an old and valued member last Monday when G. W. Exum, active in the councils of the lodge for many years, passed away at his home, 514 East Seventh street.

Mr. Exum is survived by his widow; two daughters, Mrs. Burlie Janey and Mrs. L. A. Brown; and two sons, Harry, of Chattanooga, and R. E., of Buffalo, N. Y. The latter is a son-in-law of Tom Hall, also a veteran member of Lodge 1450.

Mr. Exum was a member of the Masons and of St. James M. E. church, where funeral services were held Wednesday morning, conducted by Revs. J. A. King and H. C. Coleman. Interment followed in Forest Hills cemetery, with the following acting as pallbearers: Honorary, Joe Hoge, Robert O'Barr, Earl O'Barr, C. A. Hooper, Tom Hall and G. C. Parker; active, William Roy, Edward Rice, Robert Hayner, Charles Gippin, E. H. Cooper, William Minner.

The Labor World joins a host of local friends in extending to the bereaved relatives of Brother Exum heartfelt sympathy in their great loss.

O. B. Kelso Heads Drink Workers

Local 79, Soft Drink Workers, began the new year by electing officers at their regular monthly meeting, most of those named having seen service before in various capacities.

The Chattanooga unit of the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal and Soft Drink Workers is recognized as one of the most substantial locals of this craft in the south, and unusual care is always used by the members in their selection of men to fill the various official places, and a continuation of past progress is expected under those named for 1931.

O. B. Kelso, who has served the local union in the past as its chief executive officer, was again named president, with the following "official family" to assist him in guiding the destinies of the craft:

Vice-President—Ed Steiner.
Financial Secretary—W. F. Strickland.
Recording Secretary—Roy Lee.
Treasurer—Claude Gribble.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Tom Brown.
Trustees—R. L. Lee, R. V. Lawson, Tom Ellis.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council—Paul J. Aymon, R. L. Lee, Leo Stewart, Ed Steiner, Erskine Fisher.

Printers Vote For Assessment

By a majority of more than two to one, members of Chattanooga Typographical union, No. 89, at a special election held at Central Labor hall Wednesday afternoon, voted a voluntary assessment on the earnings of all members to assist in caring for those unable to secure sustaining employment at the trade.

While the printers have not been as hard hit by the depression as workers in some other lines, the life of a "sub" has in some instances not been so rosy, particularly on the newspapers, and the members most affected have been taken care of up to the present time with funds out of the local's treasury.

The local action follows similar programs in other cities, and the special assessment will run for thirteen weeks. It is hoped that by the end of that time normal conditions will have been restored.

Trade Unions Gain Another Friend

Local trades unions have gained another business friend through their dealing with Sam Tress, who has opened a first-class delicatessen and cafe at 111 East Seventh street.

Mr. Tress, a newcomer, leased and remodeled the East Seventh street building, installing up-to-date equipment, painting and decorating the interior of the place, all work being done by members of local building trades unions.

Mrs. Tress, who is associated with her husband in the new business, was formerly an active member of the Ladies' Garment Workers' union in New York City.

The delicatessen and cafe was opened for business this week, and bids fair to become a permanent institution in the city.

LOCAL UNIONISTS QUESTION PROPRIETY OF CRITICISM BY APARTMENT-HOUSE BUILDER

Interview in Morning Paper, Advocating Reduction of Union Wage Scales, Brings Statement That A. A. Dragoo Does Not Use Organized Workers — H. F. Brown Comments on Times Article.

Building material costs have advanced in several lines since 1928, according to A. A. Dragoo, local apartment-house owner, as quoted in Friday's Times. The only reduction in total cost of building, he is quoted as saying, is in labor, which he declares is off some five per cent, and "a slight saving on brick." Union labor, however, should immediately reduce its wage scales, it is argued, in order that Mr. Dragoo may add still another to his string of twelve prosperous apartments.

Members of building trades crafts who could be reached Friday morning, as The Labor World went to press, expressed some wonder as to just why the apartment-house builder should be interested in union labor's wages, several old-timers wracking their brains in a futile endeavor to recall when Mr. Dragoo ever employed union labor during his twenty years' activities in building apartments.

H. F. Brown, who has been active in the Plumbers' union for a longer time than the apartment-house owner has been in the building business, recalls the possibility that union plumbers were employed in one of Mr. Dragoo's twelve buildings, but takes characteristic exceptions to the "landlord's" suggestion that labor should reduce its hard-won standards to accommodate Mr. Dragoo's building program.

Mr. Brown expressed himself as follows Friday morning:

I have just read with much interest an article in the morning paper in which Mr. A. A. Dragoo advocates a drastic cut in the wage scale of plumbers and other union labor of just 33 1-3 per cent. This is quite a cut that he wishes us to voluntarily make to encourage him to go ahead and build his thirteenth apartment house in twenty-one years, I must say!

What I want to know is, what does Mr. Dragoo know about union labor of this class, when he has never used it, so far as I know, in any but one of these apartment houses? All he knows about it is that if we should actually make that tremendous sacrifice, for HIS sake, it would at once result in a corresponding cut in wages of the nonunion ginks that he employs to do his work. And that's exactly why Mr. Dragoo is so anxiously advocating this reduction in union wages!

Furthermore, Mr. Editor, I think that Mr. Dragoo, who is probably considered one of the wealthiest men of our city today, certainly one of the largest property owners, shows little consideration for those who helped to create his wealth when, in the short space of twenty-one years that wealth has grown at such a tremendous rate as to multiply itself by twelve in that time! How much does the man want for his share of our worldly goods at the sacrifice of the brain and brawn and buying power of the working man, who builds it for him? Surely a man whose returns show such a remarkable increase of value as to enable him to build such apartments as he builds, one every two years, should be able and willing to pay a decent wage to the expert, skilled labor that builds them! This wail of woe of his is truly out of place, and shows poor taste and judgment of the good sense and appreciation of the public as to just what it means!

HOLDS 'DOLLAR DIPLOMACY' RESPONSIBLE FOR AMERICA'S PRESENT ECONOMIC STRESS

Detroit Priest Cites Treaty of Versailles as Foundation of World's Industrial Woe — Flays "Higher-Ups" in Radio Speech Delivered on Demand of 300,000 Listeners.

That the peace treaty of Versailles is the basis of America's present difficulties is the contention of Rev. Fr. Charles E. Coughlin, pastor of a Detroit church, who has created a nation-wide sensation with Sunday evening radio sermons broadcast from his church over the Columbia system, discussions of present economic situation stamping him as a patriot of unusual discernment and courage.

That Rev. Coughlin's expose of the selfish manipulations of self-styled "patriots" in the high places is distasteful to those who have become accustomed to having their own versions of public questions accepted without challenge was indicated when he announced some two weeks ago that protests to the Columbia concern had demanded that he "restrain" his remarks and desist from preaching his "inflammatory philosophy."

The speaker did desist, for one Sunday, but took occasion to ask his friends to speak in his behalf, and the result is said to have been some 300,000 letters protesting against the threatened censorship, and Mr. Coughlin, last Sunday night, delivered the "unpreachable sermon" in spite of the wincing of his confounded objects of attack.

Among the protests against the censoring of the Rev. Coughlin's addresses were many from Chattanooga trades unionists, and after a lengthy discussion of the subject at Monday night's meeting of Central Body, The Labor World was instructed to secure and publish a copy of the address delivered last Sunday night only after hundreds of thousands of real Americans had demanded that it be allowed.

The address, which Rev. Mr. Coughlin released for readers of The Labor World, follows, with a few deletions due to lack of space:

I.

In any discussion of a subject which is so intimately related with the greatest question which has arisen since the days of our Civil war—I refer to the question of labor—there is necessarily a marked divergence of opinion. Both the moralist and the politician have views to propound. It is expected that no matter what their principles may be, both in common are anxious to advance the welfare of their fellow citizens; both are agreed upon the idea that present conditions as they exist are not totally satisfactory.

We are sensible enough to admit that we have not arrived at the millennium of things where there is perfect peace and contentment and fraternity. Like our forefathers we must continue battling against the unfriendly elements of a hostile nature, building new highways through the wilderness of doubt, erecting new fortifications of law against the destroyers of private property and human rights. * * *

Lest the laborer be under the impression that he is the only type of citizen who has suffered outrageously during these past two years, let me remind him that his sufferings are perhaps equaled by the agricultural class of America. Let me recall for him the fact that approximately 1,000 banks have failed during the past year; that tens of thousands of investors in stocks and bonds are left penniless; that hundreds of small corporations are operating at a loss; that the great middle class of our nation, in one word, is heavily suffering.

Because the laborer of America has more or less existed on a hand to mouth policy without scarcely a reserve to tide him over such a period as this, his suffering is more acute.

In the face of this there can be little sympathy extended to him who in his self-pity thinks that he is the only one whose brow is crowned with the sharp thorns of worry or whose body is lashed with the scourges of depression. And less sympathy is entertained for those others who advocate a philosophy of radical revolution. What we strive for today is not revolution, but the restoration of principles which have been shelved by the new type of radical who identifies prosperity with the international regime of a plutocracy.

II.

The Peace of Versailles.

In the previous discussions on the question of unemployment and depression, extensive reference was made to causes which were more or less national. Uncurtailed mass production, the exportation of American gold to build up foreign industrial competition—each has played its part in this tragedy through which we are now living.

This evening it is my privilege to invite you to consider a new aspect of both national and international depression.

It dates back to the year 1919. The scene is the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles, France. The actors are the representatives of the nations of the world. Germany and Austria are the principal villains. Clemenceau and his associates wield the sword of justice.

The plot which is fresh in their memories and in their experiences is laid in war-torn Europe. Visualize it, if you can: scarred and torn and wrecked, scarcely nothing left but the gaunt corpses of crops and homes and factories! As you pass in panoramic view over the fields of wind-blown poppies or down the white aisles of ghostly crosses, your mind is numbed when confronted with the ruin of the great war upon whose altars so many millions of human lives had been offered for what foolish purpose no one knows.

Yet no human being comprehended those facts half so well as do those who sit in the Hall of Mirrors. Of one thing they are certain: they know that all Europe must begin the new post-war period in dire poverty and burdened with incalculable debts. They all know that reserve capital is a thing of the past. And more than that, they are not forgetful that you cannot bleed blood out of a barren stone.

Thus, these plenipotentiaries convene to carry on their negotiations. Days and weeks of discussion are spent. New colonies and territories, by a stroke of the pen, are contributed to England. New divisions of Europe are parceled out irrespective either of national or lingual boundaries. And to climax the tragedy of this so-called "Peace" Treaty of Versailles where God's Name was not permitted to be mentioned; where Christ's charity and forgiveness was regarded as impractical, a fine of thirty-three billion dollars to be paid within thirty-seven years is imposed upon an enemy with a hope of crushing her financially despite the fact that her purse is empty and that her heart conceives no honest notion of endeavoring to meet the impossible demands of this tragic Treaty of Versailles.

Thirty-three billion dollars is a stupendous amount of wealth. The international banker was magnetized by it. Here is a real opportunity for him to play politics at the expense of human misery!

III.

The New Ambassadors.

Thus, in the year 1921 in the New Haven address which Secretary Hughes delivered we discover the birth of a novel philosophy of international settlements. From that moment on we have been exhorted to leave the settlement of foreign problems to the economic experts and to the international bankers; to shelve our lawfully elected senators and congressmen, as if bankers as a rule care more for the welfare of the mass of population than do our upright political representatives.

You are aware of those historic days which witnessed the departure of the new type of ambassadors of finance to Europe to settle Europe's problems. You are aware, too, of the volcano upon which were sitting Germany, Russia, Italy and Turkey on the one hand as opposed to France and England and the League of Nations on the other.

These unelected ambassadors of finance began with the mistake of accepting as a working principle the honesty and the validity of the Treaty of Versailles.

Instead of inquiring whether political readjustments must first be made; instead of asking were the findings of that treaty based upon justice; were they contrary to the psychology of human nature; were they freely entered into by both parties of the contract; was hatred the motivating force in the mind of one party; was dire necessity the actuating element in the heart of the other, we find them clinging to the principle that all adjustments could be made by the yard stick of dollars and cents.

Assuming that there were no political wrongs in the so-called peace treaty which first must be corrected, "they have proceeded," to quote the Hon. Louis McFadden, "to crystallize the blood money of a vast war tribute into billions of dollars of bonds which they have brought home

TRIBUTE TO R. M. MURPHY

Railway Carmen Express Esteem for a Brother, Victim of Tragic Accident.

At the regular semi-monthly meeting of Lookout Lodge, No. 211, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, last Thursday night, the following unusual tribute was paid to the life of R. M. Murphy, active worker in the lodge until he was the victim recently of a tragic automobile accident:

"Whereas, the grim mandate, the messenger of death, hath silently crept into our midst; passed the barred door and their Sentinel's word, and took from us our beloved brother and member, R. M. Murphy, we are called upon to mourn the loss of another son of light.

"On Nov. 26 Brother Murphy closed his eyes upon the temporal things of life, only to open them again upon the light of that all perfect and never-ending life—the life of our faith and hope.

"It is in this hour of tribulation that we turn our thoughts as never before to the needful, and forget, for the time being, the material things of life. It has been truthfully said that death makes all men equal. Dives surrendereth up his riches, Lazarus puts off his rags, the king abdicates his throne, and the jester leaves off his mask of frivolity, thus we in turn shall go to our last resting place and the earth that has nourished us shall claim our growth, and we shall be changed to earth again and lose every human trace, surrendering up our individuality we shall again go to mix with the elements.

"Why some things happen is beyond the veil of human intellect, but God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform, and while life is sweet and longevity is desired by most of us, we, nevertheless, feel that life beyond the grave is also something to be hoped for.

"When the sun is sinking in the west, and the leaves of autumn reflect the lengthening shadows of twilight, then we shall go to be with our loved ones, and the petty differences so loathsome on earth will be forgotten and a glorious reunion will be consummated, never again to be severed.

"R. M. Murphy was a man loved by all who knew him; kind to his fellow-man; ever ready to extend a helping hand to one in distress. He took life as it came, always looking on the bright side, full of life, and he enjoyed his days to their fullest extent.

"Words are inadequate to express our sorrow and we cannot execute any deeds that can ease the heartaches or dry the tears of sorrow. Time alone will have to be the healer. We can point out to his loved ones the great light that will come as our sun sets to rise no more, and implore them to live in the happy reflection, for out yonder somewhere, far beyond the bright skies, their loved one is waiting with a smiling face to greet them, where there is no pain or sorrow and where they will again be reunited, never to part again.

"May God's richest blessing rest upon the loving wife and companion and upon the children of Brother Murphy, and may the walks of their life be such as he would had them; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we furnish a copy of these resolutions to the bereaved family, a copy furnished The Labor World for publication, and that a copy be spread upon the record of this lodge in memory of Brother Murphy.

"Respectfully submitted,
"H. N. WADE,

Express Sympathy For a Brother

Local 226, Painters, has adopted resolutions of sympathy for Roy J. McFarland, a brother member, and of respect for the father of Mr. McFarland, who passed away recently following a long life of activity in civic and community affairs.

Sentiment of the local was expressed in the following resolutions, prepared by a special committee of the union:

"Whereas, the Angel of Death recently entered the family of Brother R. J. McFarland, and took therefrom, at an advanced age, J. R. McFarland, the father of our fraternal brother; and,

"Whereas, the deceased was a high type of citizen, having rendered unusual service to his community during a long and active life, and his worth to his city was recognized by all groups of citizens; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Local 226, Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, deplore the taking away of this good and substantial citizen, and that we individually and collectively express to Brother Roy McFarland and the other bereaved relatives our heartfelt sympathy in their great loss; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, sent to the family of Brother McFarland, and to The Labor World for publication.

HANLY OFFERS 2 LABOR BILLS TO LAWMAKERS

Asks Correction Small Loan, Garnishment Laws.

LABOR COMMITTEE PERSONNEL GOOD

Federation Chairman Believes Legislative Problems in Good Hands.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 15.—The general assembly passed a resolution providing for an investigation of the affairs of the state government under the administration of Gov. Horton. The opinion here is that the personnel of the investigating committee insures that there will be a thorough investigation.

On Friday the senate will consider a bill that would give a legislative committee power to subpoena witnesses and compel their attendance and for refusal to attend and testify punish for contempt. Also to grant immunity to witnesses who refuse to answer questions on the grounds that it would incriminate them. It is the opinion of lawyers here that unless legislation of this character passed any attempt at an investigation would prove futile.

Speaker Fitzhugh, of the senate, appointed the labor committee as follows: Larsen, chairman; Anderson, Chambliss, Clements, Cornelius, Faulkner, Graves and Monroe. I think this committee will be fair to labor.

Two bills sponsored by labor have been introduced to repeal the small loan law that legalizes an interest rate of 42 per cent a year, and a bill to raise the amount of wages exempt from garnishment. All other labor bills will be introduced next week.

Tonight the barbers' union gave a banquet in honor of W. C. Birthright, secretary-treasurer of the barbers' international union. J. C. Shanessy, international president, was the principal speaker. Among the guests was Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor. Several legislators were also present.

BROWN BREAKS LOOSE AGAIN

Old-Timer Celebrates Birthday by Return to Former Position on Labor World.

H. F. Brown, ancient local bachelor, plumber, "pipe-fixer" and wit (whole), celebrated still another birthday Wednesday of this week, and fittingly observed the auspicious occasion by returning to a position held by him for lo these many years as feature writer and correspondent-extraordinary for The Labor World.

The old-timer refused to state how many of such occasions he has enjoyed in the past, but solemnly remarked that he is a charter member of the WDOD Kiddies' Safety club, and propounded a query for readers of The Labor World—which proves his loyalty to the safety-first principles of the broadcasting club.

"Handsome Hal," as he is known to hundreds of local trade unionists, submitted the following for publication: Editor The Labor World:

Owing to the change in weather prophets for our section, or some other condign influence, it seems that we're going to have a hard winter, with plenty of snow and sleet and slush and I am writing you early to avoid the rush to inquire if you have any knowledge of any dealer in non-skid chains for pedestrians? I need some, for these second-hand rubbers of mine have lost their vacuum cups or something, and I find it very difficult to negotiate our streets the last two days.

If you have not this information possibly you may know of some dealer to whom I might trade in these slick rubbers for some new ones with a liberal allowance for the old ones, which would serve very well next summer and are a nuisance not only to myself but other pedestrians in the circumstances, and night even ruin someone's car if I should skid under it. Any information along this line you might supply would be gratefully received, I assure you, as I, like a great many of our fellow citizens, am economizing at present. Would be glad to have your valued opinion on this important subject.

Yours expectantly,
H. F. B.

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union made goods and service.

The Story of A Little Child

They put her out of her home.

They put her father and mother out.

They put their furniture out.

She didn't know what it was all about.

She saw the strange furniture heaped in the road.

She saw a constable bossing the job, as gently as he could but firmly.

She saw her father and mother help load the furniture, later, to be taken to the home of friends.

She is just a tiny thing, puzzled, a little tinged with the woe that comes with leaving even the humblest kind of a home, when you don't want to and have no money.

Across the town lives another family—the family of the man who owns the little house and who owns the mill and whose word thus far has been law to thousands.

He alone has said "go" and "come" and great numbers had to go and come.

He owns the mill and he has been the wood man and the ice man and the Y. M. C. A. man and the grocery man and the doctor and pretty much the dictator of everything—the Mussolini of the town.

The town is Danville, Va.

If things had happened as they were here, the girl would have grown up to be a hater of the rich, owing few debts of imprisonment for herself, having all her things to the west of that other mill on the other side of town.

But it is not same. And the man, a man, took pity this little girl out of her home as a part of his right to keep on being master of the people.

Strangely, this little child seems to be a symbol.

Her picture is a picture of the numerous that is struggling for a voice that can speak against the authority of the mills.

All over the United States men and women are watching to see which shall win in Danville.

OUR CURIOUS DIPLOMACY.

Sr. Sandino's funny little army is cutting loose again in Nicaragua. Somehow the chase for Sandino is much like the chase to get the late Sr. Pancho Villa.

For many years we blundered in Mexico. Now we are blundering in Nicaragua. Our state department has been kept busy of late trying to guess which side would win in a half dozen countries, guessing wrong oftener than right.

In Cuba the American ambassador goes about with Dictator Machado like a bodyguard, which maybe he is. Matters go from bad to worse. A club of some 2,000 members, many of them patriots of Cuba's early struggles, defies the president-dictator and is padlocked for its nerve. Students are piled into prison cells. Editors are shot or forced to flee. The people are in dire distress. One of the best equipped armies in the world sees to it that the regime is kept in power.

American diplomacy is a queer thing. Representing a nation dedicated to human freedom it goes abroad, particularly in Latin America, linking its fortunes with vested interests, aristocracy and grafters.

CONGRESS IS IN SESSION.

Again congress is in session. It will grind away for about two months. If there were any great sincerity about political life, and if government were always as representative as it sometimes is, this session of congress would see labor's anti-injunction bill passed by a healthy majority.

It would see a radical change in the structure of anti-trust legislation, so that industry could develop toward more democratic and more efficient organization without transgressing. It would stop being hypocritical about unemployment. What a refreshing session there would be!

Meanwhile we shall have politics and, if the pressure is hard enough, we may have some progress toward an anti-injunction law. But nothing will be won without a fight!

The fight, then, ladies and gentlemen, is the thing!

ARKANSAS FARMERS GET FOOD.

About 500 Arkansas farmers, bereft of money and food by the drought and its effects, the other day came into the nearest town and demanded food for their starving families.

These farmers got action quickly. They got food and the promise of more. They were not denounced as breakers of the law. They were given a good deal of respect, in spite of their threat to take food, if they could get it no other way. A prosecuting attorney addressed them with sympathy and understanding.

The episode proved that there are some exceedingly intelligent people in Arkansas and that at least some things that have been said about that state aren't true. You have to give credit to a state that doesn't send the soldiers out to fight hungry people who demand food.

HAVE FEUDAL OBJECTIVE.

Repeated refusals of the Danville mill management to accept arbitration in a dispute with 1,500 strikers is significant. The appearance of protest from large sections of the public press and the anti-Virginia public officials against the mill management are significant.

Behind this strike, with suffering and privation of workers and their dependents, is the age long effort to enslave democracy—to make the employer supreme; to develop dependent employees. These workers ask for the right to act together and to have differences arbitrated. This offer appeals to every fair-minded citizen, but it is ignored by serf advocates who oppose any form of collective action by workers because it is a challenge to their control.

The Danville strike is waged around this point. This industrial dispute is more than a struggle for decent work conditions. The objective is freedom of action, which is resisted by the mill management and backed by public officials of Virginia and anti-union elements throughout the country. These forces would drive textile workers back to their employment, beaten and discouraged.

How can industrial concord be established in such an atmosphere? Good-will talk is a mockery when employers deny such an elemental right as voluntary association to employes.

President Green should be sustained in his position that the governor of Virginia has no legal or moral right to place soldiers in Danville when the mill management rejects every peace offer.

The Danville strike is not a local movement. It affects every citizen who would establish right relations between men. Support without stint should be given these workers, and the nation should rock with protests against the anarchy of Virginia officials and mill barons.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part IX.
MONEY—WHAT IS IT?
(Part 2.)

WM. L. MOSS

All of man's goods, in every phase of his complex life, is ultimately reducible to and is computed in terms of money. It is the one sign and symbol of his earthly possessions, representing both his means of sustenance and pleasures in a very solid yet unrealized form.

At first an invention to facilitate exchange, money has, through the long course of centuries, evolved into a "standard of value." To many, the getting of money is an all-absorbing passion beside which all else in life is dwarfed or set aside as of little consequence. Even to those who, because of satiety through having an abundance of it, have long reached the stage where possession of money cannot add further to their joys; to those who have become senile and no longer have the incentive to spend it, and to those who have more than enough for their own use as long as they may live money has the capacity of keeping alive in them the burning desire to continue to pursue it with undiminished avidity.

From the beginning of its use in daily life, money served to acquire for the average man a certain form of individuality and liberty: it removed him from the group and made him stand out as a single unit that could, through the use of his money, g oit alone and create for himself a little world to his own liking apart from the rest of mankind. Money broke down for the ordinary man the last barriers to the privileged class and permitted any man to enter this class if he possessed money, and freed the individual from the necessity of acquiescence and conformity to other men's ideals. It at one and the same time helped individual man to sever the bonds that bound him to his fellowman and bound him with an indissoluble bond to this same fellowcreature, in that it made his livelihood, even his happiness, dependent on either he or his neighbor possessing money or its equivalent. Men's relations have come to be maintained, as far as they are maintained at all in terms of manpower, machine and materials, solely through the use of money. Paradoxically, then, money achieved freedom for man by enslaving him!

* * *

Although one of the commonest tools used in man's life, money is also one of the least understood. It is only because of our daily handling of money that there has been bred in our minds a misunderstood familiarity with it. Our "money economy" is full of unexplored mystery. Experts are wrestling with money today as an unfathomed problem. Money is a real study as to what it can do for us and what it cannot do, where and how it fulfills its functions, its dangers. But there is one limit to the powers of money: though it can seer and blast a man's life and subvert his soul, it cannot buy him salvation! In the remaining articles of this particular series we will let Jesus, who is the Christ, the great Teacher of all who would teach and the Central Figure of all time to all nations who will but recognize Him, lead us in His accustomed way from gross and material darkness—the love of this world—to inspiring and life-giving knowledge—Spiritual Light—that sets men free indeed and brings them into possession of their true selves.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Now English textile workers are getting a taste of the "stretch out" system and they are rebelling exactly as have American workers. Three thousand five hundred weavers have gone on strike at Burnley, England, in protest against a new system of work that forces a weaver to operate eight looms instead of four, as hitherto.

English workers don't like exploitation any better than do American toilers. The basis of the objection of both English and American workers is that the "stretch out" system forces them to do more work at little or no more pay. In some plants the number of looms which workers are forced to tend has doubled or trebled and in some instances the increase has been even larger. Hence the term "stretch out."

Arthur Brisbane, highly paid and very prosperous Hearst writer, and others, have been saying that the protest of the English textile workers is a protest against the machine and have been comparing the Burnley strike to the action of the English workers a hundred years ago who smashed machinery, fearing it would take their jobs. It is nothing of the sort. It is not a protest against machinery, but a protest at being forced to do extra work without additional pay.

Childs restaurant chain has slashed wages of its employes 10 per cent. William A. Barber, president of the company, is doing his best to create the impression that the Childs employes are only too glad to take the wage cut, which of course is the bunk. "I am happy to say the employes accept the decrease in a cooperative spirit," says Mr. Barber, presumably with a straight face. "By reducing salaries," he adds, "we will be able to maintain a normal level of employment, and at the same time continue our stock dividends to the thousands of persons who have invested in the company."

Just so. The workers take a cut in their "dividends," i. e., their wages, but the stockholders take no cut in theirs. In other words, despite what Mr. Barber says, the stockholders' interests were considered above all else.

Childs' action is in line with the loving and sedulous protection given dividends during the present crisis. "Take care of the stockholders but let the workers go hang," seems to be the motto, exemplified by the policy of wealthy corporations in maintaining or increasing dividends on one hand and slashing wages and laying off workers on the other hand.

The United States census bureau has recently sent out an official bulletin in which some enlightening figures quite clearly suggest the high cost of accidents.

During the year 1929 the manufacture of artificial limbs in this country amounted to $2,425,527!

And here is also some interesting information. Other surgical appliances manufactured during the same year amounted to $17,257,092. These included all sorts of braces, trusses, knee-caps, anklets, arch supports, ear drums, crutches, splints and similar devices.

Two million for artificial legs and arms—seventeen million for other physical replacement!

Quite a repair bill, to say the least.

* * *

The other day an explosion in a mine near Glen Rogers, W. Va., killed eight miners. "Only the presence of rock dust in the workings," the Associated Press said, "prevented the explosion from spreading and extending the toll among 40 other miners, who escaped after the blast, according to R. M. Lambie, chief of the West Virginia department of mines."

In November, rock dusting was credited with saving the lives of 42 miners in an Oklahoma mine disaster. A few days later, rock dusting saved many in a New Mexico mine.

In the face of this new evidence of the value of rock dusting, should there be any delay in compelling its use in every mine in the United States where it will prove efficacious?

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Who said: "The only entirely reliable 'Friend of labor' is labor itself?"

A.—Walter MacArthur in "Trade Union Epigrams," published by the American Federation of Labor.

Q.—In what European country is the five-day week reported making considerable progress?

A.—Czechoslovakia, where 60 per cent of the workers in the shoemaking industry will soon have the shorter week. The five-day week has also been introduced in a chocolate factory and it is reported that the question of introducing it into the government tobacco factories is under consideration.

* * *

Q.—What was the first labor paper in the United States?

A.—The Workingmen's Gazette, published by Evans brothers, English labor reformers, in New York in 1825, is said to have been the earliest labor paper.

Sense From Congress

The man who owns a machine that can do the work of a hundred men owns the equivalent of a hundred men. The slave owners of the south never had one-tenth the power that the machine owners of America have.—Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina.

I cannot understand why many members of the house, who have voted to make donations to foreign countries with which to feed the starving people, can hesitate to vote for a loan to farmers in our own country who are in a destitute and starving condition in the drought areas, and that will enable them to buy food with which to make a crop during the next year.—Representative Edward B. Almon, of Alabama.

What Next!

Ice is now being imported from the tropics. It is a product of carbon dioxide gas found in the wells of the Tampico, Mexico, oil fields and flowing to the surface at a pressure of 1,000 pounds to the square inch. A New York concern has erected a factory which solidifies the gas into subzero ice. It has a capacity of 40,000 pounds a day. Vessels with insulated chambers of corkboard a foot thick will bring the ice to the United States.

NATION'S NEEDY TO GET ARMY'S OLD CLOTHING

Washington.—Secretary of War Hurley set aside regulations that the army's cast-off clothing be destroyed unless sold. Commanders are ordered to distribute the clothing to charitable organizations with the stipulation that they be dyed and that none of them be sold.

There are still a great many people who simply will not let the dentists do all the looking down in the mouth.

MORE ABOUT PEACE TREATY

th them to America and offered ew, for sale to the American peo- with the assurance that Europe's litical troubles had been healed by ir masterly statesmanship and, in- ntally, that the bonds were an ex- lent investment for the American rchaser."

IV.

A Program of Deception.

Thus, since the year 1919, we, the erican people, have been led to lieve that the Peace Treaty of Ver- lles actually made peace, whereas has done little more than to per- tuate hostility. We have been fed on the propaganda that when Sec- tary Hughes in 1921 accepted the rman indemnity of thirty-three bil- n dollars as a reality and approved the London ultimatum which im- ed it upon Germany that peace d prosperity were the reward for victors, when as an actuality a war cloud fomented by hatred injustice was being formed upon sky line.

To still quote the Hon. Louis Mc- lden, "the fact that the London imatum provided that twelve bil- dollars in reparation bonds were be immediately commercialized; the suggestion that the settle- nt in Europe be left to eminent erican financiers which followed commercialization did not even ract the slightest attention of the erican public," as our sovereignty sed out of our hands into the un- hands of the international ker.

V.

Germany's Reaction.

Now in the meantime, Germany no stomach for this commerciali- ion of bonds. It has been her ar- ment that the preliminary agree- s of the armistice which brought stilities to a close in 1918 had ly incorporated in it, in terms aranteed by international law, that re were to be no punitive dam- s. Bear in mind, ladies and gen- men, that Germany did not surren- in November of 1918. On the trary, she entered into an armi- e fully protected by the legality nternational law.

Thus, it is her argument that the aty of Versailles paid no heed to s preliminary and legal agreement. o what has been the result? From until 1924 no co-operation came m Germany in the matter of the sale of these blood bonds because punitive measures were adopted at Versailles. But in 1925 on board a small vessel named the "Orange Blossom," floating serenely on the waters of Lake Locarno, Stresemann, the minister of foreign affairs for Germany, and Briand, of France, made "peace" between their countries. Germany's unwillingness to pay the thirty-three billion dollars was dissipated in the minds of all possible investors both in America and abroad because of the importance which the newspapers attached to this empty travesty enacted between Stresseman and Briand, and by the league of nations opening her arms to her erstwhile enemy.

Shortly afterwards in a little rustic tavern at Thoiry, in the Vosges mountains, Stresseman for Germany and Briand for France again met. They agreed that bonds should be sold outside of Europe and that Germany should, for its co-operation, receive one-third of the money obtained.

Ladies and gentlemen, a bond is no more valuable than the word either of the man or of the nation who issues it. A bond is not gold. It is merely a promise backed up by future expectancies and by honesty of intention.

But to continue with the story: In 1927 Mr. Poincare, of France, openly advocated the secret agreement made at the Thoiry tavern. This was followed in 1928 by the powers of the world meeting at Geneva in Switzerland for the final and complete settlement of the reparation question. And behold! The result of the Geneva conference was the appointment of a committee of financial experts to handle the situation. Here, then, is the birth of the Young reparation committee! The mountains of the Geneva conference groaned and, as history has proven, they brought forth a mouse!

VI.

The Result in America.

Meanwhile, preparations had been made in America for the purchase of these blood bonds. The borrowing rate of money became surprisingly low in our federal reserve banks. Credit was given to every Tom, Dick and Harry until playing the stock market became as popular as playing bridge. Hundreds of millions of dollars of German bonds were sold at a price better than $90 each. But suddenly Mr. Stresseman, of Germany, passed out of the picture of German politics. The agreement which he made at Locarno with Briand became discredited in France. Simultaneously with the collapse of the Stresseman policy of selling bonds which in their hearts most of the Germans had no intention of honoring, came the depression in the United States. The price of these bonds fell from $91 to $68. The cat was out of the bag and left behind it the bones of the mouse. The banks which had invested in these bonds feverishly called their loans. The market crashed!

VII.

"Without Christ."

Whether or not we are in accord with the Treaty of Versailles, we are forced to admit that its manipulation by international bankers has failed to produce peace in Europe or prosperity in America. As a matter of fact, one of the basic principles of international law, I repeat, was treated as a scrap of paper at this "peace" treaty, which ran true to its form from beginning to end by keeping the principles as well as the Name of Jesus Christ outside the Hall of Mirrors.

Now, perhaps, ladies and gentlemen, you begin to understand why enormous sums of money have been exported from this country abroad, especially to the national banks of allied governments whose policies have been identified with the Treaty of Versailles. Perhaps you begin to see why the growing opinion in Germany that these bonds would never be honored, because of the exorbitant reparation demanded, had something to do with the crash of the stock market, which had been artificially inflated to secure the money which was poured abroad. Perhaps, above all else, these facts offer you some explanation why there is so much anxiety in certain quarters for us to join the world court of the league of nations with France and England against Germany and Italy with the hope to save some of the billions invested by our international financiers in the blood bonds born of an unjust treaty. * * *

VIII.

Paper Poison.

During the past few years it has become a rather popular journalistic sport to belittle our congressmen and sneer at our senators, although they have been the choice of our people. And perhaps, God alone knows, that this sneering propaganda has been instituted so that unelected and selfish financiers can handle the international negotiations of our nation instead of the more reputable men whom we as conscientious citizens have elected to guide the ship of our political destiny. It is about time, my friends, that the reigns of management be rescued from the hands of private individuals and passed into the hands of our duly elected government.

Judging from the foregoing incidents, the unrest of Europe and the industrial distress of the world are traceable to the illegitimate cradle of the Treaty of Versailles, which made a mockery of peace. It has wrecked corporation after corporation in America; has emptied thousands of purses and bank accounts; has weakened many capitalists and has paralyzed millions of the middle class, thus directly affecting the laboring man, who has had no reserve capital to see himself through the crisis, which was brought on by the desire of a certain few to worship at the altars of the international calf of gold and play financial politics at the expense of a nation's misery.

IX.

The War Continues.

But at this juncture there is no need for crying over spilled milk. The evil has been done. We transferred the activities of the great war from the fields of Flanders and France into the Hall of Mirrors, where the pen has been more venemous than was any sword. Now, it is high time that we cease hostilities by trafficking in blood bonds or by entangling ourselves in foreign alliances with the hope of remedying the muddled investments of international financiers. "They who use the sword shall perish by it!" * * *

So today, my friends, we are glad to give voice to our national watchword of "prosperity." Prosperity which means hope. We hope that better things will come again; we hope that the ancient spirit of our founders will walk once more through the halls of congress; we hope that the world will see the dawn of prosperity; we hope that the eternal Gospel of Jesus Christ shall be our guiding star. "Without Him we can do nothing."

X.

The Farmer: a Christian View.

During the past few weeks we have been hearing considerable about drouth relief for the farmers and unemployment relief for the jobless. The socialistic tendency just touched upon by Leo XIII. has found its way into the sentiments of our secretary of agriculture. Recently an appropriation of $45,000,000 has been set aside for the relief of those farms which were devastated by last summer's drouth. The bill of appropriation is so construed that this money shall be expended upon seed, upon food for animals, but none of it is to be used to buy food for the farmer himself, lest, perchance, the "insidious" dole system be inaugurated. Well, as Senator Heflin has rather tersely expressed it: "They put the hog above the human and the mule above the man." I suppose it is radical of me to mention that in stricken Arkansas 100,000 farmers are suffering from starvation. This is the information which the conservative New York Times published last Sunday.

Other Appropriations.

There is no need to have any qualms either of conscience or of policies in feeding the starving or in clothing the naked who find themselves victims of a passing calamity. There is no danger that this thing be perpetuated when normal times will have been restored. Was there question asked when at least $120,000,000 was appropriated to feed the starving Belgians who were victims of the war? No one protested when $35,000,000 not so long ago was appropriated to be loaned to large shipping interests so that they can build boats and make money for themselves. Two million dollars was charitably appropriated for the Porto Rico hurricane commission. Two million five hundred thousand dollars was again appropriated for the study of bugs. Ten million dollars on still another occasion was set aside for the great airline transportation companies. Approximately $160,000,000 has been taken out of our treasury and used as tax refunds during this past year to the poor rich people of our nation. Why do we squall and squirm and elevate bugs and hogs and tax refunds above the essentials of clothing and food for distressed human beings!

XII.

Works of Mercy.

Can you show me a city wherein there is not a free soup kitchen maintained generally by private individuals? Our little parish here at Woodward and Twelve Mile Road has clothed approximately 7,000 people during these last three months and has fed twice that many with money which has been supplied mostly by the middle class and the poor.

I repeat that there is no danger of perpetuating a system of doles by practicing the charity of Jesus Christ. But there is danger, if it is neglected, in giving birth to a more dangerous kind of socialism than we have ever expected.

My friends, these are perilous times through which we are passing. As usual those of the laboring class have been affected most severely. To add to our national financial discomfiture the blighting drought of last summer disabled thousands upon thousands of farmers. The small merchant, the independent manufacturer, every individual of the middle class has felt the weight of oppression upon his shoulders.

Yet, our nation is not discouraged. It is in nowise impoverished. Which one of us lacks confidence in the outcome? We have every faith in our government and in our constitution that it will provide every laborer with steady employment; that, if necessary, old age pensions will be instituted to take care of those whom modern industry rejects in the maturity of life. The American people are too big and too imposing to hide behind the communistic invention "that good works of giving money for charity are injurious to the native dignity of men." (Leo)

My friends, believe me, there is no great pleasure afforded me in having made mention of the Peace Treaty of Versailles. I have been asked by many since last Sunday's discourse what was meant by my reference to the fact that Clemenceau barred the Name of God and His principles, as is a historic fact, from the negotiations conducted in the Hall of Mirrors. I hope my answer has been satisfactory. Thanks be to God that as Americans we have not soiled our hands by exacting from a broken enemy what is physically impossible for him to surrender. Thanks be to God that we have not reached out to lay greedy hands upon his colonies. * * *

CHARGES STRONG INFLUENCES BALK JUSTICE TO STRIKERS

Vice-President Gorman of Textile Workers Denounces Forces That Block Settlement of Danville Strike and Declares Nation Will Not See Toilers Starved Into Submission.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Danville, Va., Jan. 15.—"Will it be said of the people of Danville and Schoolfield that the powerful banking and other influences wielded by an autocratic management can stand in the way of social justice? Why the silence?"

Those questions were fired at this strike-bound city by Francis J. Gorman, vice-president of the United Textile Workers, in a meeting of Local Union 1685 that packed Dansylvania hall to capacity.

At the conclusion of the address every member took the pledge of loyalty, a sea of raised hands demonstrating the strength of the strike.

"The strike is on with greater determination than ever before," Gorman declared, as the pledge was taken. "It can only be called off by a vote of the workers who made it possible. President Fitzgerald, of the mills, addressed a meeting of the Rotary club last week and urged the necessity of organization among the business men. What a satire on justice! He advocates organization for everyone but textile workers. How long will such industrial persecution be tolerated?

Conspires to Break Strike.

"After publicly stating that outsiders would not be brought in to break the strike, the management is now conspiring with other mill owners in the southern states in an effort to break the strike. Because the company refuses to permit the employes to have a voice in their own affairs for their own welfare strikebreakers are imported to take the jobs and the homes of decent workers who have given their lives to the development of the Dan River and Riverside cotton mills. Agents of the company are offering $2 a head to the stool pigeons to get strikers back to work. Two dollars each on the hoof is cheaper than cattle, but at that the agents will starve to death."

Gorman declared the country will not stand by and "see these people starved into submission." He urges that food, shoes and clothes be sent to the union at 69 Loyal street. "More than that," he said, "I urge that trade unionists come here and see for themselves one of labor's greatest struggles against industrial greed and oppression."

Assails the Bee.

Gorman peppered the local afternoon newspaper, the Bee, with hot shot all through the meeting and he charged misrepresentation of President Green's speech throughout the country. He said Green's speech had been falsely represented as a plea to return to work, whereas it was a fighting speech laying down a challenge to the mills to bring about peace on terms equitable beyond challenge.

The Bee was charged with helping strike-breaking activities and it was asserted that the "innocent pretense of neutrality" was a mask that was let down when the newspaper declared it would no longer print prepared statements if it could get direct interviews from leaders of both sides. "But the union is wise to the Bee," Gorman declared.

Ninety Leading Economists Back Billion Dollar "Prosperity Loan"

New York City, Jan. 15.—Criticizing the "timidity of business and legislators" in the present crisis, ninety leading economists throughout the country have indorsed the program of the emergency committee for federal public works calling for a $1,000,000,000 "prosperity loan" to finance the construction of needed public improvements to speed the nation's economic recovery, according to an announcement by Harold S. Buttenheim, chairman of the committee.

The statement declares that the economists in indorsing the appeal of the committee are simply approving again a principle accepted by them and socially minded business men for a generation. Referring to the efforts made by the federal government to encourage large expenditures by industry and local governments, the statement asks that Washington do its part to hasten the return of prosperity by a large scale expansion of the public works program in road building, reforestation, irrigation, drainage and improved water transport, reclamation of waste lands and flood control, and elimination of grade crossings.

"These public works," the statement continues, "projected on a scale to check the present business depression would of course require hundreds of millions and possibly a billion dollars to be effective, but the cost cannot be compared to the loss sustained by all classes of the nation if such expenditures are not made. Taxation for such purposes, equitably distributed, would not be seriously felt by any group.

"The need of the hour is courage to act along lines of long established economic principles. The time has come to test them on some adequate scale. All that is needed is the will to act."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Painful Condition

"WHEN I was just a girl at home," writes Mrs. B. F. Riggan, of Baird, Texas, "I took Cardui for cramping and pains in my side and back, and it helped me at that time.

"After I was married, I found myself in a weak, run-down condition. I suffered a great deal with my back, which was so weak it hurt me to get up or when I would stand on my feet. I fell off in weight.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

SMALL GROUP GETS "CREAM" OF LIFE'S GOOD THINGS

Only Small Proportion of America's Population Has "Ample Current Money to Spend," Conservative Saturday Evening Post Points Out in Illuminating Advertisement.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, Jan. 15.—The "cream" of life's material good things goes to 4,062,804 families, while the remainder of the total of 29,000,000 families in the United States get along with anything from skim milk to the whey that remains after all the cream and the milk has been taken out by the churning process of exploitation, industrial inequity and the general melee of the life of the times. The figures are offered by the conservative Saturday Evening Post in a full page advertisement published in the United States Daily. The advertisement is intended to show how good the Saturday Evening Post is as an advertising medium, but it shows a great deal more than that. It shows the need of distributed buying power before there can be general prosperity for the masses.

The Saturday Evening Post, claiming to reach "the first three million families in America," in point of buying power, goes coldly about the business of showing where to find the money that can be spent for commodities. It does this in a series of black squares, each proportioned to the segment of population under discussion.

Squares Tell Story.

In a square of about one and one-half inches on each side the total population of 122,693,391 is shown. This is reduced to a total of 29,000,000 families. "Then," says the advertisement, "it needs to be shrunk again to the families which mentally are directly reachable somewhere near 11,500,000 families in which some adult is above 14 years in intelligence." (Bold type as in the original.) The sides of the resultant square measure about one-half inch. The Saturday Evening Post believes there is no use advertising to those that cannot grasp the message and it puts the number of those who can grasp it at an alarmingly low figure, probably based on census returns. But it proceeds to still further distillation.

"Then it need to be shrunk once more," says the advertisement, "to the families which have ample current money to spend, the families from which the 4,062,804 income tax returns were filed," thus getting buying power properly located among those who earn enough money to have money to spend. (Bold type in quotation are as in the advertisement.)

The square representing this potent figure measures no more than a quarter inch on each side. "Ponder that smallest square, gentlemen," says the terse and business-like advertisement, "for there is the heart and hope of prosperity—the bull's-eye of the sales target in America. It does not represent all the business, of course, but it does represent the cream of it."

Money in Small Group.

This little group of American families is designated the "most responsive section" of the population, as the advertiser sees the situation. That means it is the section that can buy because it is either well paid in wages or salaries or because it has entree to that great stream of profits that flow from investment, speculation or some similar classification of income. The great masses, grouped in that great bulk of some 25,000,000 families, cannot buy enough to make them worth the effort of the national advertiser, because they do not have "current money to spend." They do not have it, inferentially and actually, because they do not and cannot now earn it or bring it otherwise into their possession.

The Saturday Evening Post was founded by Benjamin Franklin. It still tells, every now and then, a profound and important bit of truth.

PENSIONS FOR AGED FAVORED BY CARAWAY

Washington.—An old-age pension is included in Senator Caraway's program of legislation which he hopes the minority party in congress will support. In discussing the proposal Senator Caraway denied that such a system is a "gratuity."

"Each generation," he said, "leaves more wealth in the world than when it began. That is illustrated by the fact that when the Indians sold New York to white men for $25 they got their money's worth. A system by which old age could receive some support from society is not a gift, but simply provides that the aged could draw on the reserve which they themselves helped to accumulate."

PLANT LESS COTTON, SAYS FEDERAL BOARD

Washington — The federal farm board renews its recommendation that planters grow less cotton this year. Prices will continue low unless there is "a record reduction in acreage," the board states.

Cotton prices during the next ten years may be expected to average considerably lower than in the last ten years, the board added, and this prospect makes it imperative that many southern farmers readjust their programs permanently so that cotton will not be their only income.

This call by a government board to plant less cotton is of interest to trade unionists who are urging a work day reduction because of overproduction on the industrial field.

JOBS ARE ASSURED BY N. Y. PUBLISHER

New York.—Paul Block, publisher Brooklyn Standard Union, informs all employes that "their jobs are secure for 1931."

In a memorandum to the heads of all departments on this newspaper, Mr. Block said: "We believe business depression would be ended sooner if all employers acted in a similar manner, and we want to show our faith in the future of business by assuring all our employes that they have steady jobs."

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

A. F. of L. Council Faces Issues of National Moment

Southern Campaign and Danville Up for Consideration With Unemployment, Legislation, Brotherhood Affiliation.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Miami, Fla., Jan. 15.—With a dozen nationally important issues on the calendar the American Federation of Labor executive council convened here Tuesday for a ten-day session.

President William Green today gave International Labor News Service an official outline of matters to come up for discussion and action. Leading among these are:

1—The Danville strike.

2—The southern organizing campaign as a whole.

3—Possible affiliation of the Railroad Brotherhoods.

4—The Washington legislative program, headed by labor's anti-injunction bill and the proposal to establish as compulsory by law the payment of the prevailing wage on government contracts, and including the 44-hour, five-day week for government employes.

5—The government's unemployment relief proposal via appropriation and other measures.

6—Labor's own broad unemployment program as outlined in the Boston convention, entailing a sweeping inquiry and study, the preliminary achievements of which President Green will report to the meeting.

Discussing the southern campaign, President Green said he was confident the council would order the campaign continued with all possible intensity. His own determination that the campaign must go on with all the vigor that can be put into it is well known. "Our purpose is to win the confidence and support of the employers and of the people of the south," said he, "to our program of co-operation and progress, to convince them that we have a distinct contribution to make and to win for the workers the right to organize and to bargain collectively."

The unemployment and prevailing wage issues will be given extended attention. The provisions of the Boston convention program will be taken up and further steps taken to carry that program into effect. On the prevailing wage issue the council will have before it the Couzens and Davis measures now pending in the senate. A strong position probably will be taken on legislation to halt the attack on wages being made by a group of non-union contractors on important government work.

Much consideration will be given the legislative program and the general strategy to be followed in the present short session, with a group of vital issues pending, headed by the anti-injunction bill.

The council will get a report on what has transpired thus far in the move for affiliation by the Railroad Brotherhoods, but what progress will be made is not indicated.

OUT-OF-WORK SURVEY STARTED BY SENATE

Washington.—The senate appropriations committee is conducting a jobless survey. The leading witnesses are Col. Arthur Woods, chairman President Hoover's emergency committee for employment, and John Barton Payne, chairman American Red Cross.

Upon their testimony is expected to hinge the decision of attempting further relief. Senators La Follette and Walsh (Mass.) urge a direct appropriation of $100,000,000 to defray relief expenses of cities and states.

NOTICE!

Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council will meet Monday night at 7:30 o'clock, in regular session. All delegates are requested and expected to be present, as matters affecting every local union will come before the meeting for discussion.

Following several months' efforts to induce Miller Bros. Co. to join with their principal competitors and operate a union beauty shop, representatives of Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council, and of local Barbers and Beauty Workers, this week abandoned all hope of an amicable adjustment of the matter, and a campaign of publicity has been started to notify all union men and women and their friends of the attitude assumed by the department-store management.

The Miller store was formally declared "unfair to organized labor" by Central Body several weeks ago, but many local trades unionists who had for years faced the concern with their patronage were slow to believe that the management would persist in its attitude of opposition to union labor, and the publicity campaign was held up until every possible course was exhausted.

Refusal of the Miller management to employ union workers was based on one single item in the proposed contract, which had been signed long before by principal competitors of the department store, and which it was impossible for the unionists to concede in fairness to all those proprietors who had affixed their signatures.

The first step in the publicity campaign was taken this week, when the store was picketed and all who had occasion to be in the vicinity of Seventh and Market streets could have seen a "sandwich-man" carrying the information that "Miller Bros. is unfair to organized labor."

The union officials announced this week that a thorough campaign has already been planned, and several methods will be used to notify all friends of the workers of the attitude taken by the department store, long the beneficiary of laboring men and women's patronage, in order that the strong protest may be made.

BIASED NEWS STORIES FAIL TO WEAKEN DANVILLE STRIKE

False Propaganda Sent Throughout Country in Effort to Stop Flow of Relief Angers Textile Workers and Vigorous Protest Is Lodged Against Reports of Press Association's Local Representative.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Jan. 22.—Entering its seventeenth week, the strike of the Danville textile workers shows no weakening, despite the propaganda efforts of the company to inform the country "the strike is over."

The bosses have dug down into their bag of tricks and hauled them out to no avail. Danville newspapers have thrown off their mask and are making a fight for the company. The news editor of the Register who had attempted to give a fair presentation of the controversy lost his job because of it.

Biased and colored stories appearing in the Danville Bee were transmitted over press association wires telling the world the strike was at an end. One account said 3,100 workers were in the mills; another "special correspondence" story said the number was 5,100, while still another account placed the figure at 3,200.

2,000 in Both Mills.

According to figures and data in the hands of the strike committee the number was approximately 2,000 in both mills, including superintendents, overseers, second-hands, office workers, transients, floaters and hoboes. Of this number fewer than 250 were actual bona fide textile workers, former members of the union. The rest were all non-producers.

The payroll as given by a local newspaper was $60,000 a week. On the basis of 5,100 workers in the mills this would mean an average wage of $10 a week, including all salaried workers. If 3,100 is the correct number the average wage, including all salaried workers, would be approximately $18 a week.

The mill company has given out no statement on the figures quoted by the newspapers. If it did it would be an admission of the correctness of the union's position in respect to the low wages paid and the exploitation of the workers.

Aimed to Stop Help.

It is plain that the propaganda sent out was for the purpose of breaking the strike through lessening the contributions to the aid of the workers. That contributors were, in some quarters, influenced by it is noted in the returns to the strike committee. Generally, however, the support which has been forthcoming has kept up.

The strike committee made a vigorous protest to one press association concerning the biased news sent out by its local representative, all of which was taken from the afternoon paper which has fought the union and the strike since its inception.

But none of this propaganda has b roken the strike. The 4,000 members of the union are sticking to the limit, despite meagre food and inclement weather.

Injunction Stands.

The injunction secured against the workers some time ago has been made permanent by Judge Henry C. Leigh. The defendant strikers made no answer to the petition and let it go by default, feeling that nothing they could do would cause the court to dissolve the decree. It was also pointed out that the strikers were not doing any of the things prohibited in the injunction and had no intention of doing so.

Influential Southern Newspapers Denounce Exploitation of Labor

(By International Labor News Service.)

Richmond, Va., Jan. 22.—Influential newspapers of the south are calling on the southland to stop the exploitation of southern labor by northern and southern capital, and to provide adequate laws to safeguard labor, especially women and children, in the textile industry.

The Richmond News-Leader calls the situation "cannibal industry," having reference to the "ten-hour day, the 60-hour week, and night work for women and children." The editorial concludes by saying that "let alone, it (cannibal industry) gradually but surely saps the vitality of the operatives. It feeds on human flesh."

The editorial was in reference to the appointment of Miss Lucy Mason, of Richmond, to have charge of the work of directing the Southern Council of Women and Children in Industry in obtaining adequate labor laws for the south.

Protective Laws Advocated.

"False pretenses must be avoided," the editorial says. "Southern labor must not be exploited by long hours and starvation wages." The editorial calls upon the south to set up a "decent framework of legislation" for the protection of women and children in industry. The council will advocate uniform labor laws for all southern states as respects the length of the work-day and work-week and the age of employment. In most southern states the hours of employment average 10 or 12 hours daily for men and women. Gov. Gardner, of North Carolina, in his message to the legislature recommended a 55-hour week for labor in that state.

Keen observers in the south declare the work of the American Federation of Labor in its southern organizing campaign is beginning to bear fruit. They say that the publicity attendant upon the exploitation of southern labor and the pernicious conditions existing in all the southern states where industrial plants have located, as pointed out to the world by the American Federation of Labor, have wrought a tremendous change in public opinion in Dixie.

Green Hit Exploitation.

President Green in his numerous southern speeches protested vigorously the exploitation of the workers, not only by northern, but by southern capital, and declared on many occasions that the obtaining of adequate labor laws in the south was through trade unionism which, for the most part, had brought about labor legislation in the states where labor is now well protected.

Men who are yet timid about having their names in the public prints in connection with organized labor, admit the American Federation of Labor is doing a "monumental work in the south" in its organizing campaign.

URGE ROAD BUILDING TO END UNEMPLOYMENT

St. Louis, Mo.—Highway construction on a vast scale to end unemployment was urged by the American Road Builders' association at their annual convention in this city.

"It is criminal for a nation to boast of its wealth, bank balances and other values when so large a percentage of its citizens are deprived of earning a living," said President Van Duzer.

Rail Employment Drops Over 17 Per Cent in Year

Washington, Jan. 22.—The total number of railway employes at the middle of November was 1,394,403, a decrease in employment of 17.05 per cent as compared with the number recorded at the same time in November, 1929, and of 17.02 per cent below the employment for November, 1928, according to a tabulation by the interstate commerce commission.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council—J. H. Wood, J. H. Poe and W. W. Kirkpatrick.

Brother Fuller, the financial secretary, has been elected to this office every year for the past fifteen years, and he has also had the honor of being representative to the grand lodge conventions. He attended the grand lodge convention in Kansas City in September, 1929. Brother Fuller is a very congenial fellow, and has a smile for everyone (especially if they mention farming and hog-raising in Georgia). He is well liked by all of his fellow-workers, and is affectionately known to scores of them as "Doc." He has been in the employ of the Southern railway for twenty-five years.

Mrs. Swing said that the auxiliary is in splendid condition, with a healthy interest being shown in the work, and it is the purpose of the membership to aid materially in the program of Lodge 211 all during the coming months.

LABOR ASKS GOVERNMENT TO ADOPT FIVE-DAY WEEK

A. F. of L. Executive Council Holds Proposed Federal Action Would Give Immediate Relief in Unemployment Situation.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

Miami, Fla., Jan. 20.—The first act of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, on opening its annual mid-winter meeting here, was to adopt a resolution calling upon the federal government to "get into step with progressive employers" and make the five-day working week effective for all employes.

Announcing the adoption of the resolution, President William Green said that inauguration of the five-day week would help the unemployment situation and that it was the judgment of the executive council that there would be immediate relief if it were applied at once wherever possible in government departments.

Mr. Green made an emphatic reply to the statement favoring wage reductions made by Albert W. Wiggin, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank of New York City.

Wiggin Illogical, He Says.

"Mr. Wiggin is illogical and at odds with leading economists, also many of our great employers, in his advocacy of lower wages," Green said. "We are starving in a land of plenty simply because we have overemphasized the development of production machinery and failed to keep up our ability to purchase this output.

"If, with our present production, we lower wages and thus decrease the buying power of consumers throughout the nation, this depression may continue indefinitely. Having the materials and the production machinery, we can restore normal business conditions by placing the nation's buying power on a par with production."

The council was formally advised of the formation of labor's legislative committee for the modification of the Volstead act, with which international unions, representing 2,000,000 of the 3,000,000 members of the federation, have affiliated for the most highly organized campaign yet made to permit the brewing and sale of beer.

Would Help Jobless.

Such action, according to the spokesman for the committee, would provide almost immediate work for 1,500,000 men and revive a market for farm products that in 1918, the last year of legal brewing, used 950,000 tons of farm products, mainly grain and hops, valued at $110,000,000; relieve unrest and provide the government with $400,000,000 in revenue.

The committee is composed of the heads of international unions, state federations and the several departments of the federation and to date includes nearly every large union.

The committee will hold a national conference in Washington Feb. 23 and 24, where the campaign will be formally launched.

In a report made to the executive council by Ira N. Ornburn, president of the Cigar Makers' International union, executive secretary of the committee, the committee announces its purpose to "use every legitimate avenue for the development and crystallization of public opinion."

To Stamp Out Bootlegging.

"We are determined," says the committee, "to stamp out bootlegging, smuggling, illicit distilling and the manufacture of alcoholic beverages in the home.

"The passage of the Volstead act has done more to create unrest than any other law on the statute books. Class hatred has been engendered. The present generation is becoming a generation of whisky drinkers. Making beer drinking a crime has made criminals out of thousands of former law-abiding citizens.

"Modification would help law enforcement. As conditions now stand, law-abiding citizens are resentful and rebellious, with resulting disrespect for all laws and corruption in public office."

Ministers Raise $1,000 Fund for Danville Union

Check Presented by New York Clergyman, Who Says Victory in Strike Will End Industrial Slavery.

By C. S. GARRISON

Danville, Va., Jan. 22.—The Rev. J. M. Spofford, of New York City, who spoke Sunday to some 2,000 textile workers, on strike here for sixteen weeks, said he was "spokesman for the Episcopal Church of America, in respect to the Danville strike." Incidentally, at the close of his address, the clergyman presented the local union with a check for $1,000 as the church's contribution to the strike relief fund. He said that at least ten bishops had contributed.

Mr. Spofford read a resolution adopted by the New York City Church league saying that "human rights must take precedence over property rights; that workers must have comforts and a saving wage and the right to organize."

"The master-slave, paternalistic system which is in vogue in Danville is antiquated," the speaker declared; "and the people are fooled by welfare agencies and company unions which are always controlled by the company officials."

Victory to End Industrial Slavery.

The speaker said the winning of the Danville strike would "bring an end to slavery in industry in America." "If Mr. Fitzgerald knows he is right why is he afraid to arbitrate with the United States government?" the speaker asked. "Unless the mills here come to their senses I know there are forces, which I oppose as a Christian, which will bring trouble to the mills and which the mill will regret."

Mr. Spofford paid his respect to the churches as follows: "I say with shame that the churches of America have not supported you as they should; but I suppose the pastors here are mill-owned. Mr. Fitzgerald's pastor would not want to run the risk of losing his contribution. I know there is criticism when churches take a stand like this. However, there are some clergymen who aren't afraid to come to your aid."

When the speaker, at this point, presented the local union with the thousand dollar check there were loud applause and cries from over the house: "More beans!"

Mr. Spofford is editor of the New York Witness, an official publication of the Episcopal church.

STATE BANKS FAVORED.

Lincoln, Neb.—State ownership and operation of banks in Nebraska, similar to the federal government's conduct of the postal savings system, was proposed by the governor, Charles E. Bryan, in his inaugural address.

NO PLACE TO MEOW!

Mary Haraway and her black kitten were victims of the Danville mill eviction that began right after Christmas. Mary and her kitten were photographed just as they left their mill-owned home pursuant to orders from the constable. Mary is facing the future bravely, but the cat is taking one last look through the window into the barren room.

WILL HONOR "OLD-TIMERS"

Circle Club Plans to Entertain Veterans of Labor Movement in February.

Local members of the old "Knights of Labor," of which there are quite a few, together with some who, although not members of that pioneer organization of labor, may be easily classed as "old-timers," will be guests of Circle club on the evening of Feb. 16, according to plans discussed at Monday night's regular meeting of the latter organization.

It is the purpose of the clubmembers to invite the veterans to a general social gathering, at which reminiscences of the early days of the trade union movement, both locally and otherwise, may be recalled and comparisons made with "ancient" and modern thought and activities on behalf of those who toil.

The possibilities, both for entertainment and constructive value, of such a gathering are apparent, and it is expected to make of the session one of the most enjoyable ever held by the club in all its six years of existence. Entertainment features, including music and stunts, will be arranged as a courtesy to the guests, and the probabilities are that 100 or more, including the clubmembers, will be present.

Regular meeting Monday night was largely attended, and while no set program had been arranged, address of Paul J. Aymon, a guest of the club, provided an enjoyable feature. John Mahoney was also a guest.

HANLY READY WITH PROGRAM STATE LABOR

Proposed Legislation to Be Offered Lawmakers.

VITAL MEASURES ASKED BY WORKERS

Weekly Review of General Assembly Features State Banking Tangle.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 22.—The following labor bills have been introduced and have been referred to committees: A bill to raise the amount of wages exempt from garnishment to $75 a month; a bill to repeal the small loan law; a bill to establish an eight-hour day on all public work; a bill to require inspection of boilers.

Tomorrow I will have introduced a bill to limit the power of courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes and to declare invalid the so-called "yellow dog" contract. Also a bill to limit the hours of work of females to forty-eight hours a week. I expect to have a bill to amend the workmen's compensation law introduced next week. All labor bills will be introduced before the recess.

Five bills relating to bus and truck transportation have been introduced in both houses. They are being supported by the railroads and the railroad brotherhoods. They are as follows: Busses to pay proportionate part with the railroads and the state for the elimination of grade crossings; to limit the size of motor trucks; busses to pay for road construction, requiring busses to pay additional taxes. The other bill provides for more stringent regulation of busses and trucks by the railroads and public utility commission. This bill also provides an eight-hour day for bus and truck drivers.

The general assembly is in its third week. An adjournment will be taken on Jan. 30 to March 16. The usual number of junketing committees will be appointed to sit during the recess.

The investigation of the state's affairs started Wednesday, with L. D. Smith, state's attorney-general, as the first witness. Gen. Smith concluded his testimony today. The most damaging testimony related to the failure of the state superintendent of banks to require Rogers Caldwell's Bank of Tennessee to deposit solvent securities to protect the state's deposits in that bank. The investigating committee today refused to permit Gen. Matt Whitaker, attorney for Gov. Horton, to have any part in the investigation. This also applies to all other attorneys representing any other individuals.

Both houses today passed bills extending the time for the payment of state and county taxes to June 1. The senate bill provided for an interest rate of 1 per cent. a month on the payment of taxes after March 1, and the house bill provided for an interest charge of one-half per cent. a month. These differences will probably be settled by a conference committee.

Philip P. Lynch, Jr., Dies at Soddy Home

Many local friends of Phil Lynch, of Soddy, for many years an officer and worker in the Miners' union there, learned with regret of the death, last Thursday, of his son, Philip Patrick Lynch, Jr., aged 19.

The young man succumbed after an illness of only a few days, of pneumonia. He was a member of the 1929 graduating class of Soddy High school, and had since childhood been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was also a member of the Junior Order.

Besides the parents, four sisters and three brothers survive, as follows: Edith, Edna, Joan and Mary Helen, Walter, Marshall and Charles.

The Labor World offers, on behalf of the entire labor movement of this section, sincerest condolences to Phil and Mrs. Lynch and the other surviving relatives.

JOBS DROP IN NEW YORK.

Albany, N. Y.—December factory employment in this state dropped 4.1 per cent from November. This is the lowest level on record since the employment index was started in June, 1914, according to Industrial Commissioner Frances Perkins.

What Next!

A process by which cold-rolled iron may be converted into high grade steel is now known. The iron may be treated to any desired depth up to one-half inch by simply heating in an ordinary furnace for a given period of time, depending on the size of the stock. The part to be affected is packed in a mixture of dry chemicals, before submitting to the heat. A flexible core, which is very desirable often in such parts as an automobile crankshaft, may be left, while the parts having bearing surfaces are hardened to the grade of high-carbon steel, and may then be tempered. Machined parts may be worked and given final finish before treatment, and as this may include such parts as gears, chains, rocker arms, push rods and tappets, or any part not exceeding an inch in thickness, the reduction in production costs thus effected may be very considerable.

Sense From Congress

Congress should devote its energies during the coming weeks to the enactment of a relief program and to the passage of constructive measures for the prevention of relief in the future.—Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin.

Patriotism is not measured by public profession and he who loves his country best will seek to keep it out of needless wars, even though it requires greater courage to face a noisy army of junkoers and war advocates than to drift with the tide.—Representative James A. Frear, of Wisconsin.

"LOOKING BACKWARD."

Wage reductions are urged by Albert H. Wiggin, chairman of the governing board of the Chase National bank, New York, in his annual report. He revives the old theory that low wages will aid business. The Chase bank is the largest financial institution on this continent and is allied with gigantic industrial and transportation systems. Its international relations are also extensive.

Mr. Wiggin rejects organized labor's high wage philosophy that has been supported the past several years by statesmen, business men, economists and social students. He reverts to the feudal outlook of the Middle Ages and talks of the "good will of business" in paying "high" wages. These wages, Mr. Wiggin infers, are not due labor by right but through the graciousness of employers.

Organized labor insists that employers are stealthily cutting wages, while publicly proclaiming their faith in the value of high purchasing power. Mr. Wiggin indorses this claim and declares that the Hoover conference, held thirteen months ago, to check wage cutting, has failed.

The report is the first time during the present depression that a responsible business man has publicly called for wage reductions. The statement is significant from other standpoints. It is a denial that prosperity is just around the corner, for if this were believed a demand for wage cuts would hardly be made. Another feature is the retreat to the wretched theory that wages should be based on living costs. It is a reversal to the mere existence philosophy, and is a rejection of all attempts to secure an equitable division of wealth.

The Wiggin statement can fairly be assumed to represent the views of high finance. It will be quietly circulated to subsidaries that control industry in their respective communities. Men in this group do not speak on the spur of the moment. They are not moved by impulse.

No trade unionist should ignore the Wiggin statement, nor stand idly by while financiers and other controllers of industry attempt to re-establish hoary economics. The value of high wages is woven into the popular consciousness. It can be held there by widespread agitation and publicity of proposed wage cuts. The people's welfare depends upon its general acceptance.

Trade unionists deny that they advance through the good will of employers. This is company "union" argument. Every single gain by employes has been associated with a powerful organization of workers. If we accept the "good will" theory, that fits into a feudal order, there is no basis for trade unionism.

"THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH."

A notable commission, appointed by the National Civic Federation, of which Matthew Woll is acting president, of which Elihu Root is honorary president and of which Secretary of Labor Doak is honorary vice-president, has just produced a notable report, based on a year's hard study.

Labor's anti-injunction position is sustained by the 100 members of this commission and its hatred of the yellow dog contract is given their approval.

"The old order changeth" because of man's ingenuity and the rules must be changed to conform. We seem to be headed for changes all too long delayed. Labor's voice long cried in a wilderness of silence. But it cried to a purpose, as this commission's notable report shows. How long will it take legislators to catch up with the facts of industry and with the conclusions of those who know most about industry?

CHILDS—FROM COAST TO COAST.

You can find Childs' restaurants from coast to coast. Nearly always there is a girl in the front window, turning wheat cakes.

Childs' restaurants have just cut wages 10 per cent and the announcement says it was done to prevent laying off anyone and to insure continued payment of stock dividends.

Childs' started out as a sort of poor man's place to eat. But of course all that has changed. Now 9,000 people get a wage cut to prevent discharges and to safeguard dividends! By all means, gentlemen, you must protect your dividends. Heaven will protect the working girl.

NOW ARTIFICIAL LIFE.

A scientist has just announced that he believes he has created synthetic cells that live. That's fine.

We already have the mechanical robot. Now clothe his frame in these new synthetic cells and make a man out of him—all except brains.

We may yet have the perfect non-unionist!

DANVILLE BUSINESS FAVORS STRIKE END

Danville, Va.—Business men in this city are quietly circulating a petition to the strike-bound mill management to accept President Green's proposal to end the strike.

Mr. Green suggested that the workers return to their employment, that they be permitted to join the union if they so elect, and that all differences over work conditions be arbitrated.

Business men are suffering from economic conditions because of the long dispute.

GOD'S WORD

A Weekly Comment on a Text From the Bible

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part X.

"What did Jesus teach concerning money?"

This, if you remember, is the opening sentence of the first article of the present series, appearing in The Labor World in the issue of Nov. 21, 1930. We are now ready to begin the actual study of what Jesus taught relative to money, but before doing so the writer desires to make two points clear, namely, what will be regarded as "money" for the sake of discussion, and the manner in which the texts selected will be discussed. The writer took great pains in one of the preparatory articles to this series (Jan. 16, 1931,) to tell what money is, and there is explicitly stated: "It (money) is the one sign and symbol of his (man's) earthly possessions," "representing both his means of sustenance and pleasures in a very solid yet unrealized form." He has nothing to add to this by way of definition. In taking up texts for discussion one of two recognized methods of exegesis was possible: Isolating a single saying of Jesus by lifting it out of its context and discussing it, or, choosing a text and studying it, not alone, but in relation to and in conjunction with its "historical context," i. e., the scene or episode formed by the verses preceding and following the text in question, thereby letting the entire scene shed what light it will upon the text. The latter method has been chosen.

WM. L. MOSS

Below is a list of the scenes containing texts which will form the basis of our forthcoming discussions:

(1) The Call of Matthew. Mark 2:13-17. (2) Concerning Alms. Mat. 6:1-4. (3) Treasures on Earth and in Heaven. Mat. 6:19-21. (4) Concerning Divided Service. Mat. 6:24. (5) The Quarrel Over an Estate. Luke 12:13-21. (6) Against Sordid Anxiety. Luke 13:22-31. (7) Parable of the Importunate Friend. Luke 11:5-8. (8) Double Parable of the Hidden Treasure and Pearl of Great Price. Mat. 13:44-46. (9) Mission of the Twelve. Mark 6:6-11. (10) The Temple Tax. Mat. 17:24-27. (11) Parable of the Wicked Servant. Mat. 28:23-25. (12) Jesus and the Rich Young Ruler. Mark 10:17-31. (13) Parable of the Unjust Steward. Luke 16:1-12. (14) Condemnation of Jewish Presumption. Luke 16:14-15. (15) Dives and Lazarus. Luke 16:19-31. (16) Parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard. Mat. 20:1-16. (17) Zaccheus. Luke 19:1-10. (18) Cleansing of the Temple. Mark 11:15-17. (19) The Widow's Mite. Mark 12:41-44. (20) The Pharisees' Question. Mark 12:13-17. (21) Parable of the Talents. Mat. 25:14-30. (22) Blessedness of Giving. (An authenic logion quoted by Paul in his speech to the elders at Ephesus.) Acts 20:17-38.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The average wage per industrial worker in 1929 was $1,318. The average per industrial worker paid for interest and dividends in the same year was $825.

In 1930 there was a relative cut in wages. But the reports indicate that interest and dividends as a whole were in most cases equally good or better than for 1929. The probabilities are that the average paid for interest and dividends per employed worker in 1930 was well over $1,000.

This high rate of interest and dividend payments would be especially true in manufactured food, tobacco, and public utilities.

If there were need of a rapid accumulation of capital for industrial or national use, as there is in soviet Russia, there might be some sense in maintaining this ratio. But the need in this country is for an increase in the purchasing power of the national market—of the consumers. And since the consumers constitute the bulk of the workers, there is one logical method of increasing that purchasing power. It is by increasing the wages.

But some New York bankers are even now howling for lower wages.

Sensible persons are not getting excited over the propaganda now going the rounds to the effect that a special session of congress would be a national calamity. The recovery of business does not depend upon an adjournment of congress by March 4. It is silly to try to create the impression that it does. What congress may do or not do will have precious little influence on world conditions, which are at the root of the present depression in the United States. Those who say that a special session of congress would be disastrous are only making themselves ridiculous.

"Distribution of manufactured goods has no fundamental problem to solve in the way of movement of goods from the factory to the consumer. This matter is constantly being studied and improved upon by the management of the various manufacturers, and is on a better basis today than ever before. With certain raw materials—wheat, for instance, there seems to be a real problem. I am feeding 62-cent wheat to cattle on my farm, while millions of people in some parts of the world are on the verge of starvation. You can't say there is overproduction of wheat under such circumstances. Here is something for the world to think about. We are solving the fundamental problem of distribution in America by inspiring over 120,000,000 people always to want more and better things and by matching that desire for higher standards of living with the purchasing power that enables them to satisfy their wants. High wages, high standards of living, enthusiastic workers, high prosperity—that is the sequence. The per capita consumption of goods in the United States is seven times as great as the average of the outside world. Think of what remains to be done in increasing the consuming power of the world."

The foregoing sounds as if it might have been said by a trade unionist. But it wasn't. It was said by Thomas J. Watson, president and general manager of the International Business Machines corporation, as quoted in the Magazine of Wall Street.

Those who still think of Japanese women as people who, though picturesque and lovely, are yet bound to the ancestral home by centuries of custom, will find much of interest in a report recently published by the Japanese bureau of social affairs, the figures of which show that the women have felt the sweep of the industrial revolution. Of the 4,774,047 persons employed at the end of June, 1930, 1,534,314 are said to be women. The number and proportion of women in the different classifications were as follows: Factories, 1,013,428 or a little less than one-half of the total; mine, 44,774, a little less than one-fifth; transportation and communication, 47,684, slightly less than one-tenth; and casual and other employment, 428,428, or a little less than one-fourth.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

ANNOUNCEMENT

ZACH TAYLOR

To the Readers of The Labor World:

I take this means of announcing to my friends among the working people of Chattanooga that I am a candidate for a place on the Board of City Commissioners in the election to be held March 17.

This announcement is made after thorough consideration and after consultation with many friends, including a large number of members of local trades unions.

I was born in Chattanooga forty-four years ago and have spent my entire life here. I have seen this great city grow, in this brief space of time, from a rather small and struggling little city to the commanding position it now occupies in the industrial and civic life of the south and the nation. I am proud of my city, and I am one of thousands who believe that its future is unlimited. Whatever I have been able to achieve in my life has resulted from the opportunities which Chattanooga offered. It has been my privilege to contribute whatever I could as a private citizen to Chattanooga's development through co-operation with others in civic, fraternal and religious affairs. I hope that I have been able to contribute something worthwhile in the years that have passed.

It is my ambition to be one of the five men during the next four years who will shape, guide and direct Chattanooga's city government.

As the campaign progresses I will have more to say on definite issues which the people should decide in the selection of their commissioners. I will see as many people as possible before the election. To see them all is an impossible task in a city of 120,000 population. I believe those who know me will say to those of you who do not that my sole ambition is to honestly, courageously and efficiently serve the entire citizenship of our great city.

I am proud to number among the friends I have made in my entire lifetime in Chattanooga many members of the Organized Labor movement, and to those of you who do not know me, I respectfully urge that you investigate my attitude toward the efforts of wage-earners to better their condition.

ZACH TAYLOR.

WHERE ARE YOU WHEN THE TELEPHONE RINGS?

Nowadays the living room is the family's most comfortably designed retreat and it is in this room particularly that an extension telephone is needed. Placed within easy reach in a cabinet or on a table it encourages relaxation with the comfortable feeling that to answer or make calls it is only necessary to reach out a hand. You don't get up from your easy chair and walk to some other place to turn on the light, so why not be modern in your telephone facilities.

You, too, can easily afford such comforts. The cost is surprisingly small. Less than five cents a day. Call the Business Office, now, for full information on home extension service, or ask any telephone employe.

Prevailing Wage Law Upheld By New York State High Court

(By International Labor News Service.)

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 15.—Supreme Court Justice Staley ruled that railroads must obey a state law which provides for hours of labor and payment of the prevailing rate of wages for grade crossing elimination work.

The cost of this work is divided between the railroads and the state. Rail managers contest the provision that debars them from reducing wages and lengthening the work day.

The railroads involved are the Long Island, Delaware & Hudson, Erie, Lehigh Valley, New York Central, New Haven, Pennsylvania and Staten Island Rapid Transit company.

The railroads claim that the eight-hour provision and prevailing wages increase the cost of work for which they must pay a part, and that this impairs their freedom of contract and their property is taken without due process of law. In upholding the law, Justice Staley said:

"That the state may impose conditions for hours of labor and rate of wages in its contracts for public work flows from the right of the state to dictate the terms of its contracts and which are imposed only upon those who voluntarily accept such terms. That the state may compel municipal corporations to enter into similar contracts flows from the right of the state to control its instrumentalities.

"The legislature might have directed that the work be done entirely by the state or by its municipalities. At any rate, in my judgment, the work is of such a public character that the state may legally prescribe the conditions under which it directs and permits it to be performed.

"What might be unreasonable were the railroads to pay the whole cost is hardly a test in a situation where the state pays a substantial part."

Newspaper Gag Law Opposed by Governor

St. Paul, Minn.—Repeal of a Minnesota law which permits an injunction judge to suppress newspapers was advocated by Gov. Floyd Olson in his inaugural address.

"The freedom of speech and the press should remain inviolate and any law which constitutes an entering wedge into that inviolability is unsafe," said the governor.

The gag law was passed by the state legislature at the instigation of politicians who were being exposed by a weekly newspaper. The publication was padlocked under injunction proceedings, and the law was upheld by the Minnesota supreme court.

The question is before the United States supreme court. The American Newspaper Publishers' association is combatting the act on the ground that free press in this state now depends upon the conscience of equity judges.

DICTATOR IN CUBA?

Washington.—"There is no law in Cuba except the will of President Machado," said Rafael Cabrera, former member of the Cuban congress, in a letter to Congressman Britten, of Illinois.

"Machado has long since demonstrated that he is a ruthless and venal dictator," said Cabrera. "He has destroyed all semblance of constitutional government; abolished all safeguards of life, liberty and property; free speech and free press is indulged at the risk of assassination or exile; the revenues of the country are squandered or misappropriated and the people driven into a state of despair and starvation, without parallel in recent history."

Southland Opposes "Cannibal" Industry

Danville, Va.—The mill strike in this city and organized labor's struggle throughout the south is awakening southern newspapers. Opposition is being recorded against "a harrowing long work day" and "pay envelopes that will attract the wolf to the door."

The Richmond News-Leader says: "The south wants no industrialism based on the 10-hour day, the 60-hour week, or night labor for women and children. This is cannibal industry. It feeds on human flesh."

The Times-Dispatch, published in the same city, says long hours is not only inhuman, but is "decidedly poor business, both for the south as a section and for manufacturers who are here to avail themselves of opportunities in the south."

Radio Trust Looms Under Present Plan

Chicago.—"Control of the air by the radio trust is as certain as tomorrow's sun, if present conditions continue," declared Edward N. Nockels, manager labor's broadcasting station WCFL and secretary Chicago Federation of Labor, in a luncheon address in this city.

"Monopoly of the air was launched on Nov. 11, 1928, when the federal radio commission arbitrarily set aside forty clear channels to favored corporations," said Mr. Nockels.

"It was then that the 'swag' was divided, to use the language of the street. These forty channels were divided among twelve corporations that were organized to operate broadcast stations, twelve radio equipment manufacturers, ten manufacturing merchandise, eleven newspapers, three huge public utility corporations, five insurance corporations, and one fraternal and one municipal corporation.

"The radio commission passed rule 40, perpetuating these forty clear channels to the corporations to assure them property rights in the air.

"The forty channels are so distributed over your dial that when the stations on these channels have 50,000 watt power, all stations on the side bands will be silenced.

"Even if a station is independent today it will not be independent tomorrow, for in order to compete with other stations you must have the same facilities and the same power as other stations if you would survive. We say that the monopoly of the air is complete. Labor's station WCFL is the only independent radio station today. Our station cannot be merged and it cannot be sold because of its co-operative ownership.

"The American Telephone and Telegraph company, in order to protect its investments and property rights, must get control of these channels, because radio is yet in its infancy."

JOE W. ANDERSON
Announces for City Attorney

JOE W. ANDERSON

I have served as assistant under the last three City Attorneys. During this period of more than eleven years the city has quadrupled in area and more than doubled in population. During the past five years the increased work resulting from the annexation of new territory, and the many street widening and extension programs put on by the city has required practically all of my time. As a result of my service as assistant I have become familiar with the many duties and responsibilities of the important office of City Attorney. I am familiar with the large amount of important pending litigation in which the city is a part.

I am confident that the work I have done, and the experience I have had during these eleven years has qualified me to fill the office of City Attorney.

During the time I have served as assistant I have tried to render a faithful and efficient service to the city and to deal fairly and courteously with all those having business with the legal department.

I naturally have an ambition to serve the public as City Attorney. I submit my claim for promotion on the record made as assistant during the past eleven years.

On account of the work of the legal department being unusually heavy at this time I will be unable to see as many of the voters as I would like. However, I expect to see as many between now and the primary as I possibly can without neglecting my duties.

I respectfully request those who are not familiar with my qualifications for the office of City Attorney and the character of service I have rendered the city to investigate my record, and I refer them to any present or former members of the Board of Commissioners, to the present or any former City Attorney, to any of the Judges of the Courts of Hamilton County, or to any practicing attorney at the Chattanooga Bar.

I was a charter member and served as the first president of the local lodge, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Express Division. I carried an active card for many years after leaivng the Express Company, and now hold an honorable withdrawal card.

To Delinquent Taxpayers

You are advised that after February 1, additional penalties and costs will be imposed in consequence of suits to be filed for enforcement of the lien for taxes against land; until the filing of such suits, taxes may be paid at my office.

Painful Condition

"When I was just a girl at home," writes Mrs. B. F. Riggan, of Baird, Texas, "I took Cardui for cramping and pains in my side and back, and it helped me at that time.

"After I was married, I found myself in a weak, run-down condition. I suffered a great deal with my back, which was so weak it hurt me to get up or when I would stand on my feet. I fell off in weight.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

Dividends Stayed Up As Payrolls Were Cut

Bigger Corporations in Canada Did Very Well by Stockholders, Maintaining or Increasing Payments During 1930.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Montreal, Jan. 22.—While it is estimated that the aggregate payroll in Canada during 1930 was nearly 20 per cent less than in 1929, the bigger corporations managed to do pretty well for their shareholders. According to a compilation made by the Financial Post, covering 450 leading Canadian companies whose securities figure on the stock exchanges, 350 paid dividends during 1930 as high as in 1929, while 47 paid higher dividends per share. Thirty-eight companies passed dividends, while six others reduced dividends.

"It is, however, cheering and enlightening," says the Financial Post, "to find that this rather unpleasant cloud has its silver lining, consisting in the fact that no less than twenty-four stocks have been brought into the ranks of dividend-payers, or, as in the case of three of these, have resumed paying dividends after a lapse of time."

Here is the record in tabular form:

	No. of Companies
Dividends unchanged	356
Dividends increased	17
New bonuses	5
Bonuses increased	1
Initial dividends	24
Dividends reduced	6
Bonuses reduced	0
Dividends passed	38
	450

Bonus payments during 1930, alike in number and dollar value, were ahead of 1929.

8-HOUR SHIFTS URGED BY VIRGINIA OFFICIAL

Richmond, Va.—Three eight-hour shifts in Virginia factories, instead of the present 10-hour plan, is favored by John Hopkins Hall, state commissioner of labor. The state official estimates that approximately 20,000 workers would be given jobs if all full-time plants changed to eight hours.

Profit Plan Absent In P. O. Operation

Washington.—"The postoffice is not a business; it is a public service," declared Congressman Kelly, in opposing Postmaster-General Brown's plan to raise first class postal rates from 2 cents to 2½ cents.

Mr. Kelly is ranking majority member of the house committee on postoffices and post roads. Not a single member of his committee, he said, favors the increase.

"It is a fallacy to class the postal service with a business like a telephone or telegraph company, whose reason for existence is making money," said Mr. Kelly. "The postal service is a part of the American educational system far more than it is a part of our business system." The speaker poined out that first-class mail pays its way and more, while other classes of mail do not at the present time.

If this question were considered from the standpoint of modern industrial practice of a low price reduced as increased volume warrants, there would be a reduction in the present 2-cent rate, asserted Mr. Kelly.

Wage Reductions Urged by Banker

New York.—Wage reductions to "decrease costs and increase employment" was called for by Albert H. Wiggin, chairman of the governing board of the Chase National bank, in his annual report. This bank is the largest on the North American continent and has far-flung industrial, transportation and financial connections.

The Wiggin statement is the first disavowal of the Hoover no-wage reduction conference, which the banker declares "has failed." The report rejects the theory of high wages.

"It is not true that high wages make prosperity," said Mr. Wiggin, who referred to the "good will of business" in paying "high" wages.

He insists that prosperity makes high wages, rather than high wages makes prosperity. "When wages are kept higher than the market justifies, employment and the buying power of labor fall off. American business has proved its good will in dealing with labor on this point in the past year, and in many industries may reasonably ask labor to accept a moderate reduction of wages designed to reduce costs and to increase both employment and the buying power of labor.

"We attempted, as a matter of collective policy, to hold the lines firm following the crash in 1929. Wages were not to be reduced, buying by railroads and construction by public utilities were to be increased, prices were to be maintained and cheap money was to be the foundation.

"This policy has had a 13-month test. It has failed."

MATERNITY ACT PASSED BY SENATE; VOTE 56-10

Washington.—The senate, by a vote of 56 to 10, passed the maternity act authorizing an appropriation of $1,000,000 to aid the states in caring for mothers and infants.

Each state will be granted $15,000 for maternity needs, the balance to be distributed among the states in proportion to population, if the states appropriate like sums.

The maternity-infancy act, first known as the Sheppard-Towner bill, went into effect in 1921, but was allowed to lapse in 1929. The new bill has no time limit.

Opponents claim the plan is another encroachment of the federal government upon state functions. The bill may meet strong opposition in the house.

Packers' Decision Breaks New Record

Washington.—A revision of the packers' consent decree by a District of Columbia court may result in other decrees asking for similar judicial revisions.

A consent decree is a legal phrase. It means an agreement.

The "Big Four" meat packers, in 1920, signed a consent decree with the government that they would retire from the retail meat business. The government pledged that in that event it would not prosecute for violation of the anti-trust laws.

The packers later started a suit to have the consent decree modified on the ground that great changes have been made in merchandising and that they should be permitted to meet new conditions.

The court revised the decree to the extent of permitting the packers to engage in the wholesale meat business and to distribute other food products. The court defended the small business man, who might be annihilated. With judicial revisions of these decrees established, however, no one can predict where or when they will end.

SEASON RECAST.

the Miller situation was perhaps the most interesting of immediate problems coming before the body, reports of committees and action on various communications forecast a season of activities, insuring that the return of industrial normalcy will find the local labor movement in splendid position to continue its progress. Executive board, upon which falls a large portion of the detail work between meetings, showed by its report that the members had been unusually busy the preceding two weeks, and new matters were referred to the board which will command a large amount of time from the members before next regular meeting.

DIXIE COMMITTEE SEEKS CO-OPERATION.

A letter from Edward F. McGrady, chairman of the southern organizing committee of the American Federation of Labor, recalled that the Dixie drive is now entering on its second year, and stated that "When we consider the tremendous, world-wide economic depression, and the practical panic that has faced business and industry in this country, with its great problems of unemployment, we feel that the progress made has been astounding. In a great many localities last year we were unable to give assistance we wished, but we hope to overcome this handicap in part this year."

Mr. McGrady asked for the committee that Chattanooga Central Body immediately initiate a survey of the situation regarding existing local conditions, and report on the possibilities for strengthening those already existing and forming new organizations where practical. "We expect to see a great awakening of southern labor in the coming months," the letter concludes.

WILL ENDEAVOR TO "TAKE THE AIR."

In support of the southern committee, together with compliance with a communication from President Green, a committee was named to endeavor to arrange programs to be broadcast over the local radio station, leading up to a series of mass meetings in the near future, to be addressed by prominent local citizens. The committee to investigate possibilities of radio broadcasts consists of John Mahoney, Musicians; George Forbes, Postal Clerks, and A. C. Kamin, Picture Operators. Another committee, to plan for the mass meetings, is composed of L. T. Adwell, Plasterers; E. E. McDaniels, Electrical Workers, and George Perry, Barbers.

SEEK SENTIMENT ON SUNDAY MOVIES.

Proposed repeal of the state law prohibiting Sunday movies was discussed, and it was decided to get the sentiment of local unions before taking action upon this much-discussed matter. Delegates were accordingly asked to take the matter up with the individual locals and report results at next regular meeting.

LEGISLATORS WILL "STUDY" BUS BILL.

Proposed regulation of buses, approved at a previous meeting of Central Body, and submitted in principle to Senators Brock and McKellar, Congressman McReynolds, and to Mayor Bass for consideration of the city government, will receive "thoughtful consideration" of the national lawmaking representatives, according to replies received from those officials, while Mayor Bass replied that he will "submit same for adoption by the city commission, copies to be forwarded."

Mr. Moreland, formerly president of the Garment Workers' local, was granted the floor to speak in behalf of J. F. Holbert, and Mrs. E. J. Whitson made a short talk in behalf of union-labeled men's furnishings for which she is local agent. Mrs. Whitson handles labeled shirts, ties, caps, hose, underwear, garters and handkerchiefs. She may be reached by phone 2-4955.

Newly-elected delegates were obligated as follows: Elevator Constructors, M. C. Lawson and R. R. Ballew; Railway Carmen, J. H. Wood, J. H. Poe and W. W. Kirkpatrick; Electrical Workers, E. E. McDaniels, E. E. Crosby and Judd Lowry.

PENSION PLAN URGED.

St. Paul, Minn.—Compulsory old-age pensions was favored by Gov. Olsen in his message to the state legislature.

A. F. OF L. EXECUTIVES AT MIAMI MEETING

Federation Executive Council Plans to Continue Campaign To Organize Southern Labor

Will Fight for Prevailing Wage on Government Work, and to Speed Work on Federal Building Program—Trainmen's Affiliation Nearer—Annual Session of Labor's Chiefs Institutes Progressive Program.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

Miami, Fla., Jan. 29.—Decision to continue and to extend the southern organizing campaign was reached here this week by the American Federation of Labor executive council after review of the entire field. President Green reported that fifty local unions have been organized since the Boston convention last fall.

To Speed Federal Building.

It was announced that the executive council of the Building Trades Department has arranged to co-operate with the federation proper in a campaign to force the maintenance of the prevailing wage laws on government work and to speed up the awarding of contracts by the treasury department.

In connection with government work, William J. Spencer, secretary of the Building Trades Department, reported to the executive council that the $350,000,000 government program to relieve unemployment in the building trades has broken down through the failure of the treasury department to provide sufficient equipment and personnel to prepare the necessary plans.

Because of the lack of proper facilities and the unwillingness of the department to utilize the services of architectural offices in New York, Boston, Chicago and other large centers, much of the work planned for the relief of the jobless will, as matters now stand, not be begun until after the crisis is passed, he declared, and the government will once more be competing with private builders for help.

Treasury Failure Scored.

"There is no complaint against Mr. Wetmore, the supervising architect," Mr. Spencer explained. "We have found him courteous and considerate. But there is serious complaint against the failure of the treasury department to make proper provision in equipment and personnel for handling the immense mass of work the emergency appropriations have thrown upon his office.

"There is but one way out, and that is the employment of the big architectural staffs available in New York and other large cities to turn out the necessary plans. This would work two ways—it would give substantial relief to large numbers of engineers, draftsmen and others who have been as hard hit as anybody, and give jobs to the great mass of unemployed building workers."

Trainmen's Affiliation Nearer.

Summoning all interested organizations to a conference, probably to be held in Washington, President Green and the executive council this week brought affiliations of the Railway Trainmen a long step nearer than it ever has been. The conference will be held in February or March and is intended to take up any jurisdictional issues that may arise in connection with the affiliation proposal. The trainmen will vote on the question in May.

The council, considering legislative questions, telegraphed to Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary of the Postoffice Employes, assuring him of its full support of the 44-hour bill now pending in congress. The council urges all possible support for this measure.

Carmen's Auxiliary Plan Entertainment

Unusual entertainment for the members, including a regular old-time chicken dinner, was planned by Ladies' Auxiliary to Lookout lodge, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, at the regular meeting held last Friday at the home of Mrs. Warren Bryan, 708 Woodward avenue.

Next session, according to Mrs. Jessie Swing, president, will include the social features mentioned, and it is planned to invite a number of friends of the ladies to participate in dancing after the business is completed.

The meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. C. R. Allison, on February 13.

Miss Louise Blair Returns to City

Miss Louise Blair, daughter of our own "Bully," has returned home, after a short time spent at Dayton, O., where she was transferred by her employers, the Howard Dry Cleaning company. Miss Blair was formerly stationed at the concern's McCallie avenue plant, but will be located in future at the branch office, 732 Georgia avenue.

Church Men to Hold Unemployed Parley

Washington.—Organized church men of the country held a conference on unemployment in this city, Jan. 26 and 27. The purpose was "to focus the conscience of the nation" on permanent preventives of unemployment.

The conference was under the social action departments of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the National Catholic Welfare council and the Central Conference of American Rabbis. John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer Metal Trades Department A. F. of L., spoke for labor.

Other speakers were Senator Wagner, of New York; Dr. Harry F. Ward, professor of social ethics, Union Theological Seminary, New York; Rev. John A. Ryan, of the Catholic university; Rabbi Edward L. Israel, of Baltimore; Prof. John R. Commons and John E. Edgerton, president National Association of Manufacturers.

Friday's news dispatches contained the information that the Danville mill strikers voted Thursday to end the seventeen-weeks struggle for justice and rights.

Although no definite details of the peace plan are given, it is known that influences had been at work particularly during the past ten days or two weeks to effect a settlement.

Whether the vote means permanent peace for the stricken community, or is merely a truce, is yet to develop, and millions of American working people will await full and authentic reports with great interest.

Building Trades Meet Wednesday

E. E. McDaniels, business manager of the Building Trades council, calls attention to the fact that regular meeting of that organization will be held Wednesday night, 7:30, at Electricians' hall, 11½ East Seventh street, and urges all eligible locals to have representatives present at the meeting.

Plumbers Name Watson Chief

H. F. Brown, somewhat irregular correspondent of The Labor World from Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, breezed in Thursday to report that his lodge had elected and installed new officers. The exact date of the voting was not given, the old man having been apparently satisfied with the statement it was "recently."

Anyhow here is the list Brown brought in:

President—Frank Watson.
Vice-President—Tom A. Bledsoe.
Past President—Oscar E. Cook.
Financial Secretary—F. R. Warren.
Recording Secretary—G. F. Chapin.
Inside Sentinel—Joe Stolpman.

WELSH MINE STRIKE ENDS.

London, England.—A South Wales strike of 150,000 miners was settled by the persistence of labor government officials. Wages are not changed. The miners re-established the seven and one-half hour day, instead of eight hours. The truce destroys the "spread-out" system which permitted coal owners to enforce any hours so long as the average was seven and one-half.

S. H. Borisky to Be Guest of Circle Club

S. H. Borisky, president of the Independent Theaters, Inc., will be the guest of honor at regular meeting of Circle club Monday evening at Deuberry's dining room, 11 West Ninth street.

The subject of Mr. Borisky's address has not been announced, but clubmembers who attend are assured of an interesting evening. The theater executive has for years been active in civic affairs, and is thoroughly capable of discussing any phase of community life which his fancy may dictate.

At Monday night's session further plans will be made for the Feb. 16 meeting, which will be in the nature of an "old-timers' night." It is the purpose of the members to have as their guests on that occasion every member of the old Knights of Labor in this community, as well as some of the pioneers in the modern movement.

The meeting Monday night will be called to order promptly at 7 o'clock.

Machinists, 1450, Indorse Bus Bill

Regulation of buses, a movement popular particularly in railroad circles, was given hearty indorsement by Lodge 1450, Machinists, this week, and proposed regulations submitted by the National League of Railway Employes was indorsed and a committee appointed to confer and co-operate with legislative committee of Central Body in furthering the cause. The committee, consisting of James C. Rogers, C. W. Pfeifer and Tom F. Hall, will endeavor to have legislation introduced at Nashville embodying the regulations indorsed by Lodge 1450, and first steps to that effect have already been taken.

Machinists, 56, For Sunday Movies

Lodge 56, Machinists, the first local union to report on the referendum originated at Central Body meeting Monday night, voted in favor of Sunday movies by an almost unanimous vote, it was reported Thursday. Regular weekly meeting of the lodge Tuesday night is also declared to have been one of the largest attended and most enthusiastic sessions in many months, considerable business having been transacted.

HAL CLEMENTS PLEADS FOR COURT ACTION IN SLATE-FUNDS MUDDLE

Speech of Knox Senator Features Week in State General Assembly.

Criticizes Law-Enforcing Machinery for Not Bringing to Bar of Justice Those Responsible for Present Conditions---Women's Eight-Hour Bill Introduced.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Jan. 29.—The feature of the week in the proceedings of the Tennessee general assembly was the speech made by Senator Hal Clements in the senate today. Arising to a question of personal privilege, the Knox county senator criticized the law enforcing machinery of the state for not bringing to the bar of justice those responsible for the present financial difficulties growing out of banks said to be controlled by Rogers Caldwell failing and now in the hands of receivers. He said there was proof enough now for criminal prosecution without any probe. He said:

The people of Tennessee do not want a sore tooth treated; they want it pulled; and nobody can do that but the criminal courts.

Senator Clements further said:

Let me give you another illustration. There is a notorious prisoner in the penitentiary. His name is Howard Barr. He was sent up from Knox county, and I prosecuted him. I remember he held up some filling stations. He got less than $100, and how excited we were!—demanded a special empaneling of the grand jury, tried the case, and the way I strutted in my humble ability and demanded the extreme penalty, and the jury gave him thirty years.

He is an artist. Since he has been out there, due to his ability to take the face of George Washington on a one dollar bill, and put the whiskers of Abraham Lincoln on it, he has made ten dollar bills out of one dollar bills, and for that, under prison regulations, he has been placed in solitary confinement, I understand, for a period of two years. The warden asked me if I would like to see him. I said, "I certainly would, I am the lawyer that sent him up." We went down there, Senator Cornelius was along, to that dungeon where hardly the light of day ever comes and the sunshine never. I remembered him as a virile, vigorous young man when I convicted him a few years ago; when they unlocked that dungeon door—they have a white line like you see a traffic line, where not even a prisoner can walk nearer the wall of that dungeon—they open that door, and there, back in the recesses of that dungeon, as black as night, sat a figure. His hair has turned as white as snow, upon his face was a great mass of hair, because they do not allow him to shave. He blinked at the light like an owl that you disturb in the barn loft in the day time. He tottered to the door and I asked him if he recognized me. He did not. Upon his forehead was the pallor of death, and his skin and hands were so transparent when you looked at them you could almost see the bones as if you were looking at them through an X-ray machine. He had almost the weak voice of a child. And finally, he tottered back, and sat on his bed, and the door clanged shut, not probably to be opened for many hours until they stuck a little food in for him.

All my cockiness was gone. I walked away with bowed head, and I wondered at a government that could exact such a toll of human suffering from one man and let other men sit behind mahogany desks and rob widows and orphans, and then only be probed about.

Will the confidence of a free people be maintained if that is the order of justice? Are the laws of the land just for the obscure and the penniless? Or shall the big folks, politicians, or otherwise, be brought to the bar of justice to expiate their crimes against society?

The house today passed a bill to extend the time of paying taxes to June 1. This bill had previously passed the senate. It was amended in the house to make the penalty for failure to pay taxes by March 1 at the rate of 6 per cent a year instead of 12 per cent a year in the senate bill. The senate concurred in the house amendment. Taxes delinquent after June will bear the usual penalty provided by law. This bill will become a law when the governor signs it.

There has been no action taken on any labor measure as yet.

Among the bills introduced this week is one to reduce the hours of work for women and children from the fifty-seven hours now allowed by law to forty-eight hours a week. This bill was introduced in the house by Representative John P. Murphy and in the senate by Senator Larsen, of Shelby county, and Senator Clements, of Knox county. These same legislators also introduced a bill to regulate minors in street trades—selling newspapers on the streets.

On Wednesday the house passed by an overwhelming majority a resolution requesting the Tennessee senators and congressmen to vote for the Norris bill providing for the government operation of the power dam at Muscle Shoals. On the same night the house reconsidered its action in passing the resolution and referred it to the judiciary committee. Evidently the power trust has some friends in the house.

The general assembly will recess Friday until March 16.

Banker's Wage Cuts Will Continue Sag

Miami, Fla.—"If, with our present production, we lower wages and thus decrease buying power of consumers, this depression may continue indefinitely," said Wm. Green, president A. F. of L., in discussing the wage reduction policy of Albert H. Wiggin, chairman governing board of the Chase National Bank, New York City.

"Mr. Wiggin is illogical and at odds with our leading economists, also many large employers," said Mr. Green. "We are starving in a land of plenty simply because we have overemphasized the development of production machinery and failed to keep up our ability to purchase this output.

"Having material and production machinery, we can only restore normal business conditions by placing the nation's buying power on a par with production."

Colorado Prison Ruled by Bishop

Canon City, Colo.—Gov. Adams placed Rev. Dr. Johnson, Colorado bishop of the Episcopal church, in charge of the state penitentiary here.

The convicts staged a rebellion in October, 1929, when thirteen lives were lost. Col. Patrick J. Hamrock was given control of the pen with dictatorial powers, but his iron discipline has failed.

Hamrock used the same methods against striking coal miners, sixteen years ago. His gunmen, garbed in the uniform of the state militia, brought civil war into southern Colorado. The thugs shot up the miners' tent colony at Ludlow on April 14, 1914, when more than a score of men, women and children were killed.

Railroads Opposing Private Car Order

Washington.—Railroad managers oppose an order by the interstate commerce commission prohibiting railroads from handling private cars of another railroad without charge.

The case was decided against the carriers, who are now before the United States supreme court for a reversal of the order.

The interstate commerce commission found that millions of dollars were wasted every year by railroads hauling these cars. Large groups were given free transportation and meals, in many cases. The beneficiaries included the families of rail officials and large shippers and their friends.

These cars were often hauled from the east coast to the Pacific. The favorite travel was to New England resorts during the summer and Florida during the winter months.

A continuous demand for the union label, shop card and working button will bring joy and sunshine into the lives of thousands of trade unionists.

SENSE and NONSENSE

SENSE.

Editor Labor World:

I see in this morning's paper that Mr. Dragoo is out denying he said "so and so." Ain't it funny that when a guy gives out an interview that's published he even denies he said it till he gets into a jamb? I feel sure all my laboring brethren will heartily join me in expressing my personal thanks to Mr. Wilson for his prompt and emphatic denial that organized labor is paid too much wages, in his reply to Mr. Dragoo's statement. If you'll note, Mr. Dragoo only suggests a reduction in the wage scale for six or eight months. He can easily build his little fifty grand apartment house in that time, you know, and it will be two more years before he'll want to build another. And, maybe by then, he can get us to stage another suspension of prevailing scales till he can build that one! Anything, you know, for an "entering wedge" to start the scale down, and we'd have the Devil's own time to get them back up again, just as we had to get them there to date! I don't believe in reducing wages. All vanity and vexation of spirit—and flesh!

H. F. B.

NONSENSE.

Editor Labor World:

You know, I am nothing if not scientific, and of late I have been devoting myself to a careful study of this so-called English language we speak, which is comparable to both a woman and a mule, in being fearfully and wonderfully constructed. And I have run upon a serious problem in my studies, which you as an editor of such a magnificent sheet, and such a master of the language as I am sure you are, should be able to solve for me, namely: Supposing that you have two legs, which I do not doubt, is it proper to say "half of your legs is left" when legs are plural? It doesn't sound right, I'm sure, but what's a fellow to do when there are only two, and half of them certainly "is" one!

Also, could you very well say that "half of your legs 'is' left, but it's all right?" And, pray tell me how on earth it could be left, when you brought it with you, which I feel sure you did? I am all befuzzled and need help! Yours in desperation,

WRONG FONTS

By J. H. C.

The H. D. Lee Mercantile company has placed some 2,500 members of the United Garment Workers' union, employed in its five large manufacturing plants in as many cities, on the 40-hour-week basis. A similar move by the A. L. McDonald Manufacturing company, of St. Joseph, Mo., added 500 more workers to the shorter work week.

• • •

The American Sales Book company, with plants in Niagara Falls and Elmira, N. Y., is still on the "unfair list" of union printers everywhere. An effort is being made to divert as much work as possible away from the above company and into the plants of fair companies. Among the firms listed as being able to furnish any class of printing which the American Salesbook company produces, with the added advantage of having the label on it if desired, are the following:

Fred J. Ringley Co., 621 Plymouth Court, Chicago.

Eureka Specialty Co., Inc., 530 Electric Ave., Scranton, Pa.

General Manifold and Printing Co., Inc., Sixth and Buffalo Sts., Franklin, Pa.

G. A. Ackermann Printing Co., 350 Hudson St., New York, and 727 W. Van Buren St., Chicago.

REMOVE THE CAUSES!

A committee of the federal house of representatives probed the communists and have made a voluminous report. The document summarizes the growth, development, tactics and philosophy of these revolutionists. The report dispels the illusion that communism is an advanced liberal pose that the "reds" affect until they discipline and "educate" workers to the point where they dare reveal their objective.

Communists may be probed and deported, they may be jailed and outwardly suppressed by every force of government, but they will be replaced by others who agitate by underground methods as long as the causes of unrest continue. Every low wage, every hungry man, woman and child, every bread line in a land of plenty, every Danville strike with its troops and autocracy, every injunction, every denial that workers may unite, every refusal to discuss wrongs, every job seeker, is grist to the "red" mill. These wrongs are referred to in union halls by communists who mask as "progressives" and who deny trade union remedies. They are discussed in shop, factory and mine. They are discussed by discouraged workless who are reminded that communist opponents in high places have but one solution—charity—for present conditions.

Social wrong is an ideal soil to plant revolutionary seed. The "red" laughs at patriotic appeals of men who profit by these wrongs. Idleness and distress are harvest days for the "red." This is ignored by economic-blind statesmen and flag wavers who believe revolutionary agitation can be checked by emotion, suppression and deportation.

History should teach these men that ideas thrive on opposition. If "reds" are deported they return under another name. Men who direct this movement behind the scenes are too crafty to be caught. "Reds" now come in by the thousands by calling themselves "seamen." Trade union seamen have for years attempted to stop this practice by an act of congress, but they are opposed by employers and other business men who give lip-service resistance to communism.

Revolutions are not ordered like a magician draws a rabbit from a high hat. Behind every revolution is a deep-seated cause. The revolution itself is but a culmination of a long series of grievances. To deny this is to ignore history.

Condemning communists, while the cause for communism remains, is like covering an ulcer with talcum powder.

LAW PROTECTS LOW WAGES.

The A. F. of L. executive council will urge federal legislation that compels government contractors to recognize prevailing wages and standard work conditions. President Hoover, last December, called for such recognition. William Green, president A. F. of L., submitted to the chief executive a list of government contractors who ignore this position.

Secretary of Labor Doak, speaking for the president, informs the A. F. of L. official that it is impossible to enforce prevailing wages on government work because of a decision by the federal controller. That official ruled that conditional requirements cannot be included in such contracts, as the law calls for "responsible" bidders. A "responsible" bidder is considered one who can secure bonds to guarantee that he will complete the job. Any bonding company will back a successful bidder on government work.

The controller's decision can be annulled by changing the law that protects low wages. Congress should immediately amend this statute that legalizes social degradation.

NO AMERICAN A SERF!

Slave labor in Liberia has just caused the resignation of the president and vice-president of that country. There is slave labor in other countries and their possessions and doubtless a good deal of the output thereof finds its way into the United States. Also there is much convict labor and many of the convicts are political prisoners, as in soviet Russia, land of terrible despotism. Unhappily, the output of these unfortunates also finds its way into the United States, in violation of our law, either for lack of what officialdom terms adequate proof, or for lack of complaint. Added to the list there is an enormous amount of semi-slave labor, as in some South American countries, like Venezuela, where tyranny is nearly complete. The United States accepts the products of semi-slave peon labor, asking no questions.

At home we have vast numbers of unemployed men and women going hungry and we have great numbers working for six, seven, eight, ten dollars a week. The United States gobbles up the product of these also. There is a great deal of inequity and injustice in this so-called civilized world. In some places the injustice is worse and more terrible than in others. The basic difference between the United States and many other nations is that we have machinery and the fundamental rights which we can use and are using to improve things.

Just as rapidly as we determine just what we want, just as rapidly as we learn to work together intelligently, we can bring about improvement. Injustice is not fastened upon us permanently. It is not frozen or institutionalized.

Added to that traditions go back to the beginning of this nation that lead us to go after what we want, fearlessly. Traditions in most other lands take the masses back through ages of unquestioning obedience and furtive longings for what they know they dare not take.

No American was ever born a prince and none was ever born a serf.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XI.
ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH

The Church has not yet accepted the teaching of Jesus on the subject of money, and the average Christian is not acquainted with the fact that He taught many things about it. The nearest approach to an application made by the vast majority of the followers of the lowly Galilean of the truths uttered by Him concerning money is the mere quotation of certain well-known and outstanding texts that have reference to excessive worldly riches, and quoted without an understanding of the psychological truths embedded in the words. In the instances the writer has in mind the words are quoted purely with a spiritual bias, with the real, and larger, import of the sayings missed. True, there are many who give freely to the Church, many who religiously tithe themselves for its sake, and others who will give when asked, but these three classes of givers exist, not because the Church has struck any dominant note on the Gospel teaching of Christ concerning money, but because the Church insists believers must give a part of their worldly gains to the Church for its necessary purposes. The Church, as a divinely instituted organization given over to men's care, as an historic continuity through the ages for the promulgation of the Gospels, and as a force for good among men, has never, at least in the last eighteen hundred years of its life, given forth any clear and distinct teaching embodying the ethical application of what Jesus taught about money. A conscience that is guided by instruction which is the outgrowth of what Jesus taught on the subject as recorded in the New Testament is lacking among Christians.

WM. L. MOSS

* * *

In the course of the history of the Church two decisive tendencies of the attitude of believers toward worldly possessions have held sway; the first, historically, is that of community ownership of one's possessions (the community meaning of course the membership of the Church), an experiment on the part of the First Century Church, which will come up for discussion in a later article since it is so little understood, and the second, a tendency that has been prevalent in the Church from almost after the first century of its life until the present day, the Church ignoring entirely what her Lord said about money. Yet the words of the Master are astonishingly plentiful and also unmistakable in their application. Few know in what way Jesus either commended or condemned money, or how His words ought to be applied to our daily lives. They have only been taught to see in passages that treat of worldly possessions something of spiritual significance and not something that, without in the least divorcing what He said from its spiritual significance, gives us authoritative guidance in our attitude toward money. This tomb-like silence preserved by the Church in respect to our Lord's real teaching about money has always been the underlying cause for the deplorable attitude of the rich toward the poor and the poor toward the rich. In Jesus' sayings on the subject the Church has always been content to choose an interpretation for those sayings that might give least offense, a purely spiritual interpretation, leaving the sorely needed psychological truths to the tender mercies of indifference. So a most harmful attitude has been permitted to grow up among individuals of all classes of believers toward money possessed by others.

(To Be Continued)

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," says the old proverb. There's unemployment, for example. It is an evil wind, but it seems to be blowing the fruit growers good. The thousands of unemployed workers selling apples and oranges on the streets of American cities have boomed consumption and fruit growers are profiting. Apples and oranges have been brought to the attention of the public more than ever before. Hundreds of thousands of boxes of these fruits have been sold and as a result prices have been stabilized at a time when other agricultural products have been fluctuating in a most uncertain way.

No one has any objection to the fruit growers benefiting from the sale of "unemployed apples," but it seems absurd that men must suffer that fruit growers should gain. It only serves to strengthen the impression that this is a crazy world.

Much of the talk about a "dole" would make a horse laugh. As several senators and others have pointed out, a dole is a dole, regardless of who gives it. There may be a question about the relative wisdom of giving doles by government or private agencies, but there is none about the word itself. The dictionary settles this by defining a dole as: "That which is doled out; a small portion; a gratuity." Yet some people who know better are striving mightily to make the nation believe that a "handout" is a "dole" when given by the government but is not when given by a private charitable agency.

And so the bankers think that the standard of American living should come down! One of these, otherwise intelligent, gentlemen intimates that the American working man has been living in an era of mechanical refrigerators, radios and automobiles, and "in an atmosphere of Corona-Coronas." Well, we can tell more about the radios after we get the results of the census count which was taken for the benefit of the R. C. A. and others.

But just how many frigidaires does the eminent and more or less well informed gentleman imagine the working people can have, on a wage of $1,318 per year which the government reports is the average for industrial workers? And as for "Corona-Coronas"—what are they?

* * *

But supposing the banker is right, after all? Perhaps it might be just as well to take in hand this matter of so many frigidaires, etc., etc. The simplest way to begin is, to just shut down the factory where they make 'em. That will end it. The banker can have one made to order for his house, and so can his friends. The stockholders in the frigidaire company will be sure to see the point. And so will the salesmen, and the advertising men, and the magazine and newspaper managers who have been printing all the advertising. And the workingmen—oh, they can always get a job somewhere—you know!

MOTHER

MASTER MOLDER

The following is submitted by T. C. Lawhorne, veteran member of Local 53, Iron Molders:

Mother! Next to God the world's greatest molder.

Men and women, boys and girls, wee toddlers and babies in arms unanimously crown her with this title. She has no rival.

She begins her trade of molding when we are too little to realize she is at it, when we are too innocent to know what life is all about. But she knows! She looks far into the future. She sees there the gifts of life she would have us possess. She sees the pitfalls she would have us shun. With all the tenacity of her mother-love she guides us towards the beautiful and good and guards us from the ugly and black.

She is unafraid of blasts from life's furnace—for herself. She braves them to shield us from burns. Her hours are long, but she is never too tired to kiss a stubbed toe or bind up a broken heart.

She believes in her children. Her faith in us shines as a beacon star when the night of temptation sets in. Living or "asleep," she holds our hand. When we can no longer see her smile, hear her voice, touch her lips, we feel the sunshine of her influence around us.

She molded the character of our Lincoln and Washington. She has reclaimed to useful manhood and winsome womanhood the wayward. She loves more deeply, forgives more fully, understands more sweetly and works harder than any other molder in the world. She is eternally at her trade.

Mother, Master Molder—God bless you! Not just on "Mother's day" in the month of May each year, but on every day throughout the year we love you, we honor you, we appreciate you. God bless you!

Pale and Weak

"I THINK Cardui is a wonderful medicine, for I improved greatly after taking it," says Mrs. A. W. English, of R. F. D. 4, Roanoke, Va. "When I was just a girl of 13, my mother gave this medicine to me, and it did me a great deal of good. I was weak and run-down. After I had taken Cardui awhile, I felt much better.

"In 1924, my health was poor. I felt miserable, and hadn't enough strength to do my housework. It took all my willpower to keep up. I was pale and weak.

"I got Cardui again and took it. My improvement was wonderful. I can recommend Cardui to others, for my health was so much better after I had taken a course of the Cardui Home Treatment."

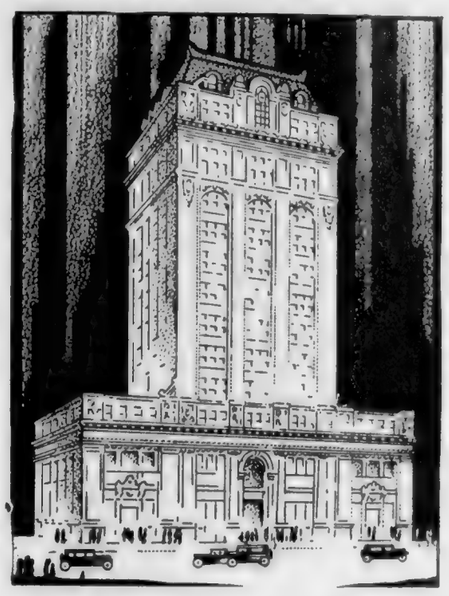
The PROVIDENT
LIFE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY

A CHATTANOOGA INSTITUTION



ESTABLISHED 1887

Premium Income, a barometer by which the growth and progress of an insurance company may be made most understandable, recorded a gain of $459,470.42 over the preceding record-breaking year. This brought the total premium income to the new high mark of $5,560,228.08, an increase of 9%.

Life Insurance in Force registered a gain of $9,990,710.00 over the preceding year, raising the total Life Insurance in Force on December 31, 1930, to $54,603,238.00 This was an increase of more than 22% and the largest single year's gain in the thirteen years of the life department.

Accident and Health Insurance premiums, by which the growth of this character of business is measured, showed an increase of $276,384.74 over the preceding year, which was a gain of more than 6%.

THE REAL STORY OF PROVIDENT SERVICE

During the year 1930, 68,911 Provident checks were written in payment of benefits to policyholders and their beneficiaries. Every three minutes of the business day the Provident sent a benefit check to somebody somewhere. Of these payments to policyholders, 24,891 were for ordinary accidental injuries; 40,328 were for sickness; 462 were for accidental deaths; 3,094 for natural deaths and 136 for specific losses, such as lost arms, legs, hands, feet, eyes and the like. Benefits paid to policyholders and beneficiaries since organization total $18,854,736.42.

During 1930 the Provident met every demand promptly and in full, and closed the year stronger by far than at its beginning, and better than ever fortified and equipped to continue its record of progress.

The sound condition of the Company is indicated by the relation of its assets to its liabiliites, there being $1.406 of Assets for every $1.00 of Liability.

Dizzy Spells

Mrs. Cora Moshier, of 601 North New Orleans Ave., Brinkley, Ark., writes:

"I was so constipated until I was just sick. I could not stand to take strong medicine, so I decided I would take Black-Draught, and I found it to be all right.

"I would have such dizzy spells, and such bursting headaches, until I could hardly go. But after taking a few doses of Black-Draught, I would feel just fine. It is a good medicine, and I recommend it to all who suffer as I did. It is very easy to recommend a medicine that has done as much for me as Black-Draught has done."

CAPITALISM MUST "CLEAN HOUSE," REPRESENTATIVE FISH DECLARES

Chairman of House Committee Investigating Communism in United States Denounces Injustices of Present System and Urges That Child Labor and Other Abuses Be Ended.

Washington, Jan. 29.—If the present system of society is to win, as opposed to communism, it must win on its merits and must "clean house," Representative Hamilton Fish, chairman of the house committee investigating communism, told the National Patriotic council at a dinner in the Army and Navy club here.

"Grave abuses have crept into our industrial capitalism, such as child labor and long hours, and weighed it down so that it has difficulty in supporting itself," Representative Fish said. He continued:

"Capitalism would do well to do away with some of man's inhumanities to man, and put into effect a maximum of eight hours a day in all industries, and half a day on Saturday, or a total of 44 hours a week.

"There is no reason why certain industries should be permitted to work its labor in industrial sections of the south in excess of 54 hours a week, at an average pay of $12 per week, and employ child labor.

System Not Above Reproach.

"I do not want anyone to feel that, because I have taken the lead by virtue of an extended official investigation, in exposing the falsities and attendant horrors of communism, that I believe our own economic system is above reproach. Far from it; there is much that present day industrial capitalism can learn and borrow to advantage from Russian communism.

"If communism is on trial, so also is capitalism.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand, nor can the economic structure of the world long endure half communist and half capitalist. Either it must eventually become all socialized or all capitalized. For this reason, I say it is up to the capitalist system to clean its Augean stables and divest itself of some of its manifestations of greed, inhumanity and reaction."

Representative Fish paid a warm tribute to American organized labor, declaring that citizens hardly realize the services rendered by the American Federation of Labor in opposing activities of the communists. He said the A. F. of L. has fought red influence for the last thirteen years and has done more than any one agency to keep America free from the red influence.

Must Eliminate Abuses.

"I would not stultify free American labor to compare them with the low-paid forced labor of Russia, shackled and harnessed to jobs whether they like it or not, like conscripted soldiers. I believe in capitalism as opposed to communism, but capitalism shorn of its abuses and ugly greed to exploit labor and mankind for the almighty dollar," he declared.

Anything done to help the soviet through trade helps the world revolution, Fish declared. He said he was forced in the direction of restriction of trade with Russia more every day.

The government has an obligation to see that no family goes without food in the present economic situation and drought crisis, Mr. Fish said, and announced that he would favor placing the 125,000,000 bushels of wheat the farm board is holding at the disposal of the Red Cross to be converted to the use of the drought sufferers, if need arose.

Spoke Also in New York.

The address of Representative Fish was similar to one made a few days previous at a mass meeting in Carnegie hall, New York, at which Matthew Woll, Martin W. Littleton and others spoke. Representatives of seventy civic, patriotic and labor organizations sponsored the meeting and joined in indorsement of a program designed to combat communist activities in the United States.

BRICKLAYERS CHARGE U. S. SLASHES WORKERS' PAY

Government Makes Direct Wage Cuts, While Departments Fail to Live Up to President Hoover's Wage Policy, Union Says in Letters Cited in House of Representatives.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Charging that government departments are not living up to President Hoover's declaration in favor of maintaining wage rates, Representative Paul J. Kvale, farmer-labor, of Minnesota, inserted in the Congressional Record a list of government projects on which workers have been forced to accept pay reductions, some of which are said to run as high as 50 per cent. The list was prepared by the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International Union of America.

Representative Kvale told the house that superintendents of construction in the various departments had been given no official notice of the wage policy the president has announced through the press.

The list of cases on which Kvale based his charge was included originally in a letter of protest addressed to President Hoover by Secretary John J. Gleeson, of the Bricklayers' union. The president referred the letter to Ferry K. Heath, assistant secretary of the treasury.

Says U. S. Cut Wages.

Mr. Gleeson said the war department and the interior department had reduced wages on their own initiative on an experimental dam at Vicksburg, Miss., and on an Indian school at Chilocco, Okla. He further charged that the assistant secretary of war, Frederick H. Payne, approved a reduction in the wages on a job at Fort Monroe, Va.

Mr. Heath defended the government policy by saying that while the treasury was bringing all possible pressure to bear on contractors, the law required that contracts be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder and that it would not be possible to conform to the intent of the law if contractors were "restricted in regard to their labor."

Other cases of wage reductions appearing in the correspondence include:

Barracks at Langley field, Virginia, where the J. A. Jones Construction company is said to have cut masonry mechanics from $1.50 to 75 cents an hour.

Projects at Maxwell Field, Alabama, and Fort Bragg, N. C., where reduced wages are said to be still in effect notwithstanding protests to the war department.

The federal reserve bank building, Richmond, where the J. A. Jones Construction company is said to have reduced wages in many cases as much as 50 per cent.

Veterans' Bureau hospital at Northport, L. I.

Several municipal buildings in the District of Columbia and Veterans' bureau contracts at Knoxville, La., and Augusta, Ga., are also in the list.

At Fort Sam Houston, Tex., it is alleged that the contractor is importing Mexican labor and is paying only one-third of the prevailing wage scale.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS

By W. L. M.

Voting their workers an 8 per cent increase in wages is the way the Crescent Hosiery mill at Niota, Tenn., has decided to meet the present depression. A 10 per cent dividend has just been paid the same company's stockholders.

* * *

News from Huntsville, Ala., that the city council has voted to give employment to several hundred men sounds good to some folks, even though the men will do the work in return for only fuel and food.

* * *

A large national mail order house has announced their catalogue now coming off the presses will carry price reductions of 20 to 40 per cent. Who shall we give credit for these price reductions—the company or the hundreds of employes it has laid off in the last few months?

* * *

Congress is still considering the drouth bill, the Muscle Shoals bill, eleven supply bills, and what-not among the nation's important legislation. Considering how necessary the gentlemen who sit in both houses of congress feel they are to the welfare of the country, it is really marvelous how the nation can go for any length of time without the legislative assistance they might render!

* * *

Texas has 13,000 employes on its regular state payroll and 900 occasional workers. Good advertising for the state during these times of depression. In view of the recent bank losses for the state, Tennessee's advertising at the present time is decidedly of the other sort.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—How long has Virginia had a ten-hour law for women workers?

A.—Since 1890. The law prohibits the employment of women for more than ten hours in any one 24-hour period.

* * *

Q.—What is the trade jurisdiction of the International Union of Elevator Constructors?

A.—The construction, installation and operation of elevators and elevator machinery.

Q.—Were stone cutters among the first workers to organize in the United States?

A.—Yes. Craft unions of stonecutters were among the earliest established.

Sense From Congress

The crisis that American industry and American labor is facing today speaks in no uncertain terms of something wrong in our social and industrial system, of that which calls for further and deeper study of causes, effects and cures. Out of such study much good may eventuate. —Representative John E. Nelson, of Maine.

I have seen human distress; I have seen persons suffering from hunger and from cold; and even though I stood alone, I could take no other position than one of support for any measure which has in it the hope of immediate relief of distress and human suffering.—Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York.

MR. CHAMBLISS IN ACCORD WITH PROGRESSIVES

Will Not Vote to Repeal Primary Law.

BELIEVES, HOWEVER, SYSTEM TOO COSTLY

Tells Central Body Effort Should Be Made to Correct Imperfections.

The people's primaries are in no danger from the present session of the state legislature, so far as the Hon. John A. Chambliss is concerned, Senator Chambliss having made this plain in a letter to Matt Gerlach, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, in acknowledging receipt of protest of the local labor movement against a movement recently initiated to repeal the state primary law and return to the old "boss-and-boodle" control of elections.

Senator Chambliss stated, however, that he has often thought the primary law should be repealed, "especially to obviate the extreme expense arising under it."

"Be assured, however," he continues, "that I have no idea of acting on that idea now or at this session. We must try to watch the system up rather than drop it entirely."

What appears to be a carefully-calculated movement to repeal or weaken the primary laws in many states made its appearance in Nashville just prior to the recess of the legislature, and immediately progressive forces were "on their toes" in an effort to prevent selfish political classes from consummating their much-desired plan. Coincident with the introduction of the movement, reactionary newspapers in the state carried editorials describing the "evils" of the direct primary and calling for its outright abolishment.

Among the progressive forces demanding that politicians and their henchmen keep their hands off the people's primary was the Local Central Body, which adopted a strong resolution describing the old convention system as "vicious, undemocratic and a menace to our government," and copies of this resolution were forwarded to Hamilton county representatives in the legislature. Senator Chambliss replied in his usual frank and statesmanlike manner. Representatives Chamblee, Coleman and Payne have not as yet been heard from, but local union officials are confident either of these gentlemen will have a part in the scheme to take away from the people the right to name their own officials and place the selection of candidates entirely in the hands of a few bosses.

ROUTINE BUSINESS FEATURES MEETING.

Regular meeting of Central Body Monday night was featured by routine business and almost altogether "inside" matters. A somewhat smaller than usual attendance was present, some twoscore delegates taking part in the proceedings. Credentials were received for the following: Machinists, 56, Joe Harden, O. R. Hubbard, Herman Metz, H. E. Kelley, C. F. Lange and W. L. Wergin.

Next regular meeting of Central Body, which comes on Monday, March 9, will be devoted to speechmaking by the various candidates for city offices. The occasion will follow a long-established custom of the local labor movement to extend this courtesy just prior to all elections.

Molders Pledge Aid in Fight Of Miller Bros.

"One hundred per cent." cooperation with the local labor movement in the fight on organized labor now being made by Miller Bros. department store was pledged by Lodge 53, Iron Molders, at the regular meeting of that organization last Friday night.

The attitude of the Miller management, which refuses to recognize organized labor in the Miller beauty shop, even though its principal competitors are operating strictly union shops, is resented by all local unionists, the department store having been a beneficiary for many years of the working people's patronage.

The Iron Molders, in line with other locals, is formally on record, according to the veteran corresponding secretary, James Connor, as offering its full sympathy and support in the present controversy, and its members unanimously pledged themselves to render every possible assistance in the present program of the local movement.

Officials of Central Body and of two local unions directly involved in the Miller dispute expressed themselves this week as entirely satisfied with the progress of the publicity campaign so far, and indicated that the "battle" has just begun.

SAFEGUARD YOUR PRIMARY!

Workers Should Assist in Repelling "Drive" Engineered by the Political Bosses in Many State Legislatures.

(An Editorial in Labor)

The organized workers of America should wake up and stand guard over the direct primary in every state which has a primary.

This great device of progressive and popular government is under heavy attack. The bosses and big interests hate it—and they are right in doing so. It spoils their game.

Both want to go back to the "good old convention days," when boss and boodle could get together in some quiet back room, pick both sets of candidates, and give the people the delightful freedom of choosing between Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum on election day.

The primary smashed that; or rather, enabled the people to smash it when they really want to do so. So big interests and political bosses are out to smash the primary.

It is significant that the primary is being attacked hardest in places where it has worked best.

In Minnesota, where the primary helped to send a man like Shipstead to Washington, a bill emasculating the primary has been introduced in the legislature. Happily, the latest advices indicate it is doomed, because of Senator Shipstead's opposition.

In Montana, where the people never could have kept such a star delegation as Walsh and Wheeler in the United States senate without the primary, a scheme is being pushed to "safeguard" the law—mainly by pulling its teeth.

Besides its good work in the separate states, the primary has enabled the great progressive movement, of which organized labor is a part and parcel, to make over the United States senate; to change that body from a club of corporation attorneys to perhaps the most liberal legislative assembly on earth.

Fight for the primary! Watch every bill on that subject that is introduced into your state legislature, and, unless it can prove itself a good thing, beat it!

Trust "Water" Plan Held Void by Court

Washington.—The government can check inflation of valuation of utilities licensed under the federal water power act, according to a decision by Justice James C. Adkins, of the District of Columbia supreme court. The government, after fifty years, can take over these power plants, under the law.

Justice Adkins said it is "of the utmost importance" both to the owner and to the United States, that the actual legitimate cost of the original project should be known to all parties promptly upon the completion of the project.

The plaintiff — the Clarion River Power company, of Pennsylvania—was denied a temporary injunction against the federal power commission.

The suit was brought after William V. King, chief accountant of the commission, assisted by Charles A. Russell, solicitor, eliminated $6,386,000 from the Clarion's listed capital expenditures of $11,132,000. The company was asked to show how the questionable items had been "actually and legitimately expended." The company refused to appear before the commission and rushed to court for an injunction.

While the case was pending the federal power board was reorganized and the first act of a majority of the new commissioners was to discharge King and Russell. The senate took up the fight for the two men. Russell has since been reinstated.

The court's decision, if upheld, will permit the commission to pass judgment on "water" pumped into public utility corporations that can be taken over by the government, in half a century, at an excessivo valuation.

Postpone Meeting Of Circle Club

Owing to unavoidable circumstances, regular semi-monthly meeting of Circle club scheduled for Monday night has been postponed indefinitely. President Smith announced Thursday that the meeting may be held later in the same week, but definite announcement could not be made until further conference with other officials of the organization.

"Flu" Death Rate Higher Among Poor

Washington.—The death rate from influenza is much higher among "very poor" than among the topmost classes, according to the United States public health service.

These medical authorities reaffirm the theory that low-living standards affect a people's health.

The public health service says no observation during the great influenza epidemic of 1918-1919 was more common than the familiar comment that "the flu hit the rich and poor alike."

"Apparently there was ample ground for a belief in the impartiality of the disease. Like many conclusions based on general impressions, this observation was true only in part. Epidemic influenza undoubtedly was very prevalent among all classes of persons and its mortality toll was levied from the wealthy as well as the poor.

"But when the generalization was subjected to the closer analysis afforded by actual records in enumerated populations, the interesting indication appeared that there were marked and consistent differences in its incidence—with respect to morbidity and to mortality—among persons of different economic status.

"An association between the incidence of epidemic influenza and economic condition was manifested. Apparently the lower the economic level the higher was the rate attack. This relationship was found to persist even after allowance had been made for the influence of the factors of color, sex and age, and certain other conditions."

THROWS SPIKE IN WHEELS OF POWER SCHEME

Shipstead "Messes Up" Plot of Big Boys.

FLUSHES PLAN TO GRAB NIAGARA

Chance Remark Bares Typical "Power" Hypocrisy and Turns Tables.

How a cunning scheme of the power interests to commercialize the great possibilities of Niagara Falls was exposed by a chance remark of Senator Shipstead is told in the current issue of Labor, Washington organ of the railroad shopcrafts, in its current issue.

"For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain" this power trust is peculiar, but once in a while the brilliant and highly-paid attorneys for these blood-suckers meet their match among genuine patriots, and the Niagara Falls plot was nipped in the bud and shown up in all its hideousness. Labor's story of the little slip of the big boys follows:

Three weeks ago, Senator Henrik Shipstead, of Minnesota, came into a meeting of the foreign relations committee of the senate to find his colleagues discussing a treaty between the United States and Canada "For the preservation and improvement of the scenic beauties of the Niagara Falls and Rapids."

There was no division of sentiment on the matter of preserving the falls, and the senators were about to make the usual report, when the lone farmer-laborite casually inquired:

"Is there anything in the treaty about power?" That caused Chairman "Bill" Borah to prick up his ears, and other members became interested.

A more careful examination of the treaty revealed that it did contain "something about power."

In order to "preserve" the falls, the treaty authorized the construction of certain works, the cost to be divided between the Niagara Falls Power company, one of the most important branches of the American power trust, and the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario, a great publicly-owned power system.

In return, the Niagara Falls Power company was to be permitted to divert under a temporary permit 10,000 cubit feet of water for seven years. Ontario's "hydro" was authorized to make a similar diversion.

The committee called in various experts and soon discovered that power was the biggest thing in the treaty. One witness testified that the Niagara Falls company's saving on coal alone would reimburse it for what it expended to preserve the beauty of the falls, and in addition give it an 800 per cent profit at the end of seven years.

Also, the Niagara Falls company would in all probability be given a permanent permit for diverting the water at the end of the seven-year period, and would thereafter have the tremendously important right for all time.

These revelations caused a surprising reversal of sentiment in the committee and finally Chairman Borah, by unanimous vote, was instructed to make an unfavorable report.

In submitting the matter to the senate, Borah said every one wanted to preserve the falls, but:

"It is the view of the committee that the government of the United States, in so far as its part is concerned, ought to do this work direct and not enter into a contract with private power companies and pay the price which is here proposed to be paid."

The treaty was negotiated a little more than two years ago by Frank B. Kellogg when that eminent gentleman was secretary of state under President Calvin Coolidge. Being a corporation lawyer of wide experience, Mr. Kellogg probably recognized the importance of the power provisions of the treaty, but if so he did not emphasize the point.

President Hoover has been urged to make Mr. Kellogg chairman of the commission which will represent this country in negotiations with Canada looking to the development of the St. Lawrence for both power and navigation.

Strangely enough, those who are boosting Mr. Kellogg have been saying that he was unusually well qualified because of the experience he gained in negotiating the treaty for the "preservation and improvement of Niagara Falls."

Now that the senate committee on foreign relations has unanimously condemned the treaty because of the "joker" about power, the president may hesitate to pick Mr. Kellogg.

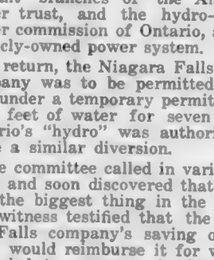
Secretary of the Treasury Mellon is also involved in the St. Lawrence development.

The power trust in its fight to get control of all the power which may come to the United States is operating through the Niagara Falls Power company, which is dominated by the Mellon-Morgan interests.

The charge was made some time ago in the Canadian senate, that the Mellon interests had grabbed all the desirable power sites on both sides of the St. Lawrence, and that they were in a position to reap practically all the benefits in case the work was entrusted to private enterprise.

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

IN HOSPITAL



GEORGE LEWIS

Word comes from Washington that George Lewis, brother of the fightin' president of the United Mine Workers, has just undergone an operation for appendicitis, and at last reports was regarded as out of danger. George was stationed in this territory for some time as a sort of assistant to Ben Williams, and during his sojourn here made many friends, who will wish for him a speedy return to his usual good health.

UTILITIES COME CROPPER IN ATTEMPT TO GAG PAPER

Editor of New Hampshire Daily, Offered Advertisement to Stop Criticism, Scorns Bribe, and Investigation of Utility Management, Operation and Control in State Follows.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, Feb. 26.—High power propaganda to save the power interests from the gathering storm of public criticism against high rates pulled another weird stunt recently that reacted unfortunately on one of its companies. A small town editor and one of the veterans of the profession have exposed this sorry attempt.

The secret influence of manufacturers and utilities in curbing the freedom of the press in even small matters is almost unknown to the average person not connected with an advertising agency, a publicity bureau, or a trade publication.

Up in Concord, N. H., the fight over power rates is spreading like a rash because the utilities tried to coerce J. M. Langley, publisher and editor of the Daily Monitor. As a result the New Hampshire public service commission is investigating the management, operation and control of two New Hampshire utilities owned by the New England Gas and Electric association. It came about in this way:

Editorial Peeved Utilities.

The Monitor printed an editorial which was displeasing to the utility men. Soon thereafter, the editor received a letter from the advertising firm of Daniel Starch and Staff of Cambridge, Mass., saying that an enclosed advertisement might be used if the editor would discontinue his criticism, otherwise not. Editor Langley made a quick decision. He published the Starch letter in his editorial column and replied:

"While we'd like the advertising copy to help earn dollars needed to pay for our new plant, the Monitor does not sell its news or editorial columns."

Then came an outspoken commendation for this courageous course by the Editor and Publisher, the outstanding publication in the newspaper profession. What's the matter, the editor believes, is that there has been too little criticism of "the Big Shots, who have had their sweet will in almost everything for some fifteen years."

Industry, Finance Run Aumck.

This refreshing comment follows:

". . . The underlying causes of the depression are sensed by only a few, perhaps by not more than 5 per cent of the people. The overshadowing fact, of course, is that industry and the system of finance have been out of hand for years, running amuck. It is individualism gone mad and indecently corrupt. In the pursuit of quick, unearned wealth, the national ideal, very few of the old American pillars have been allowed to stand. The Big Boys, sometimes referred to as the Big Shots, have had their sweet will in almost everything for some fifteen years. Government, acting for the common welfare, has had little to say. Control, regulation, rational economics fitted to human service, whenever proposed have been spat upon and ground into the dust.

"If a man were audacious enough to raise his voice against any of the prevailing evils, such as crazy speculation, cockeyed overproduction, bank control of industry, ticker-tape management of railroads, private power propaganda in public schools, overcapitalization or dozens of other evidences of an age of ruthless grabbing and hogging, he would immediately be seized upon as a disturber of the peace, an eccentric freak, and run out of the community, showered with epithets, if not bricks."

Starch Eminent Advertiser.

It is interesting that Daniel Starch is one of the eminent ones in the advertising field, former professor of psychology at several universities, including Harvard, and author of leading textbooks in advertising and psychology.

FITZGERALD, DANVILLE MILL OWNER, DIES SUDDENLY

Survives Long Strike Period by Brief Time, Leaving Future Employment Policy of Big Textile Plants Matter of Conjecture Pending Settlement of Estate.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Danville, Va., Feb. 26.—Harry Fitzgerald, controlling owner of the Dan River Cotton mills, died of heart failure the morning of Feb. 24.

For four months the mills owned by Fitzgerald were tied up by a strike of local Union 1685, United Textile Workers. Throughout that period Fitzgerald maintained a policy of almost absolute silence.

Finally the strike was called off Jan. 29 on a basis of return to work, as, if and when possible, without discrimination against union members.

What effect Fitzgerald's passing will have on the future of the mills and the mill employment policy cannot be estimated until there is announcement of the manner in which Fitzgerald's holdings will be controlled hereafter. He is survived by a widow.

HIS WAGE BILL GIVEN STRONG HOUSE SUPPORT

Representative Robert L. Bacon, of New York, whose bill providing for the payment of the prevailing rate of wages on government building work has been unanimously endorsed by the House Committee on Labor. The committee urged suspension of the rules for the bill's passage. Representatives of the American Federation of Labor and government departments appeared before the committee in support of the measure.

WANT JUDGES ELECTED

Providence, R. I.—Election of the state's judiciary by the people instead of appointed by the governor, or election by the legislature, as is the present practice, is favored by Representative Herrick.

Under the Herrick proposal judiciary candidates would be chosen at political party conventions and elected for six years.

POSITION OF UNION GIVEN IN DETAIL

Says Vote to Call Off Bitter Struggle Was Practically Unanimous.

Danville, Va., Feb. 25.—The position of the United Textile Workers' local union of Danville, in reference to the calling off of the strike after a four months' struggle, was set out in an official statement by Francis J. Gorman, first vice-president of the international union, who had charge of the Danville strike, in an interview here previous to the sudden passing of H. R. Fitzgerald, president of the mill company. In the statement Mr. Gorman set out that Henry W. Morgan, who assisted in bringing about the settlement, was engaged in an effort to make a "complete adjustment" of the controversy with the mill management.

The complete text of the Gorman statement is as follows:

"The Danville strike was called off on Thursday, Jan. 29, exactly four months from the day the strike was called. The vote to call it off was almost unanimous, the members agreeing with the recommendations of the management committee that there was nothing to be gained by a continuance of the strike.

"It is too early as yet to suggest the outcome of the controversy, for immediately upon the settlement a swarm of rumors and false propaganda from an unfriendly press served to discolor the issues and confuse the minds of all concerned. The policy of the union during this period was one of silence, not desiring to aggravate a serious situation and wishing to allay some of the bitterness engendered during the strike. It is satisfying to know that regardless of the treachery practiced by our enemies we are able to say that the union has kept faith, violated no confidence and can meet either employer or employe on a common ground.

"We were assisted in the settlement by Mr. Henry W. Morgan, of Washington, president of the Great Valley Anthracite corporation. Mr. Morgan operates a union mine in agreement with the United Mine Workers of America. He is at the present time engaged in an effort to make a complete adjustment, but owing to various circumstances we are not in a position at this time to give any definite information.

"I attended a meeting in Danville on Tuesday, Feb. 10, and the determination to hold their union was manifested by the members. There are a large number of workers still unemployed, and we realize that conditions in the industry will be a serious obstable in the re-employment of all the workers. It is therefore necessary that relief work should be continued.

"After many conferences with local and national officials of the Red Cross, this organization has signified their intention to assume some responsibility. The union will supplement this work insofar as possible, and many of our friends are still sending contributions since the strike was settled. We realize, of course, that with no strike this help will not be large. The members of the union have all agreed to assist financially, immediately upon return to work.

"The settlement of the strike really opens up another period of effort in order that the union may be rehabilitated.

"We desire at this time to express our sincere thanks to all those who rendered moral and financial assistance during the struggle. We trust to be able, in the near future, to furnish a more fitting acknowledgment, placing in the hands of those who helped us an account of how the funds were spent. We figure that approximately $150,000 was expended during the period of the strike. This only allowed for meager rations, but the strikers carried on with great courage. It is unfortunate that so great an effort should be expended in order to secure the right to belong to a union, and we cannot imagine anyone should stand in the way of organization. If the employers in Danville will now give the same degree of cooperation that the workers will we are confident there will be no more strikes and the industry will be placed on a sound foundation.

"FRANCIS J. GORMAN."

DIVIDENDS GOING UP.

Electric light, gas, telephone and telegraph public utilities led with $134,656,947. Banks paid $58,379,319 and railroads $51,981,400.

Stockholders in investment trusts, holding and finance companies were paid $30,113,803.

LABOR QUERIES

Editor, The Labor World:

In a recent issue you published under the questions and answers caption:

Q.—What was the first union to obtain a universal eight-hour day in the United States?

A.—Journeymen Stone Cutters Association of North America. The eight-hour day was obtained in 1904.

The Cigar Makers' International Union of America enacted an amendment to its constitution in 1885 limiting the hours of labor to nine per day on and after Jan. 1, 1886, and to eight hours on and after May 1, 1886. This was universal and has been in operation ever since. Our constitution reads, article 100, "Every local union shall have the power to regulate the hours of labor in its respective locality, but in no case shall they exceed eight hours per day on and after May 1, 1886."

I was a delegate to the 1885 convention held in Cincinnati and had the pleasure of advocating and voting for this law. See the constitution, 1886, and the proceeding of the 1885 convention for verification of the foregoing. Sam Gompers and I were members of the constitution committee.

The Cigar Makers was one of the first to adopt the eight-hour law.

My recollection is that the Granite Cutters International Association of America adopted an eight hour law about that time.

Fraternally yours,
G. W. PERKINS.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT NIGHTMARE.

In spite of our superficial but vain idea that science and scientific arrangements play a large part in our life, America, whose very bulwarks are her industries and commercial activities, has found no solution to the unemployment problem. It is really unbelievable that over-production (if that is really our trouble at present) and plenty could lead to a situation in which starvation and need holds sway. It is equally difficult to understand how an industrial world that is throwing thousands out of employment through the introduction of labor-saving machinery denies all responsibility toward the workers who are rendered idle thereby. Yet, both of the above statements, as unbelievable as they may sound, are true concerning the depression the whole land is experiencing.

As for over-production, some permanent solution of the dilemma must be found, and education of the American people to refuse to purchase further the thousand and one useless "knick-knacks" and catch-money sundries offered on the markets and, on the other hand, to demand lower prices on the necessities of life, points the way.

In regard to labor-saving machinery, Newton D. Baker says: "Industry has no right to take all the gains that come from this rapid substitution of machine processes for human labor without bearing a substantial part of the loss." Smaller profits in the main and a willingness to assist labor to readjust its working hours and length of work week must be accepted by industrial captains before we can hope to see even a start made toward solution of the unemployment problem.

TEXTILE NIGHT SHIFT REFORMS

If what George A. Sloan, head of the Cotton Institute of New York City, reported recently to President Hoover and Secretary Lamont—that beginning with March 1 about 75 per cent of the textile mill operators would eliminate as fast as possible night shifts for women and children—is true, then organized labor sees one result of its determined opposition and fight against bad industrial conditions.

It has long been the contention of organized labor that from the standpoint of health of the workers, community standards and morals the presence of women and children in textile plants only tended to make conditions almost unbearable. It has always been regarded as a sure indication that wages were not what they should be. The employment of women and children on night shifts has only darkened the situation even more, and now the statement from the operators themselves that the system is to be eliminated as fast as possible from the forces that man the industrial plants will give much comfort to organized labor.

What the operators' desire to eliminate these workers from night shifts may have its inception in economic readjustments they are making in these plants, [illegible] of the employment of women and children on night shifts [illegible] the new readjustment [illegible] will show the operators [illegible] can be more efficiently [illegible] without the need of a night [illegible] children on their night [illegible].

BUREAUCRACY PILLORIED.

Whether or not the conservative Supreme [illegible] like it, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes is performing [illegible] like an intelligent man. Following on the heels of his decision in the Railway Clerks' case a decision which may yet be found to have much deeper implications than seem [illegible] agreed upon, Mr. Hughes delivered an address on Feb. 12 in which he denounced governmental bureaucracy to an extent not made clear by the daily newspapers.

The chief justice warned Americans of the perils of government bureaucrats who possess or usurp powers not reviewable by the courts. He cited Lord Chief Justice Hewart, of England, as an authority on the evils of bureaucratic powers in the hands of bureau and department chiefs who are given judicial powers.

The chief justice pointed unerringly to a growing evil, a threat to the survival of democratic government. There already are in our federal government chiefs who have the power to make decisions that are not reviewable by the courts. Thus they have, within their field, the powers of tyrants. That is not democracy and it is not a healthy growth within democracy. Chief Justice Hughes performed a service in pointing out this phase of political reaction.

SPIRIT OF TRADE UNIONISM.

Throughout the whole nation—and in Canada as well—thousands of unemployed workers are deriving support from trade unions. Millions of dollars have been spent by unions to maintain their unemployed members.

In this period of depression organized labor has written a chapter that fits in with the fine story of human helpfulness that has threaded its way through all the vicissitudes of the race.

Wage earners, themselves none too well supplied with necessities, are by the million taxing themselves to support their needy brothers. Here is magnificent heroism, the milk of human kindness flowing in a great river of generosity.

Again America owes a debt to its great labor movement—a debt about which it knows little, but of which historians later will write glowing and imperishable chapters. The wage earner who does not belong to a union misses the opportunity to share in this epic story.

GOD'S WORD

A Weekly Comment on a Text From the Bible

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XV.
CONCERNING ALMS

The essence of every sin is selfishness. On the other hand, our love for God awakens within us a love for the things of God, and the impulse of the one who loves God is to forget self and manifest his love toward God through sympathy, consideration and helpfulness to the world of men about him. At all times, alms are an outpouring of man's better nature. To the Christian alms are of the essence of his righteousness. Now the first characteristic of righteousness, as Jesus teaches us in the Sermon on the Mount, is inwardness. In giving alms we ought to give them with the spiritual desire to help one of God's creatures and not merely as a duty; we ought to feel that in helping one of our fellow-creatures, every one of which is a child of the Heavenly Father, we are honoring God and not ourselves by the mere act of giving. Why do I say this? For an answer, in your New Testament turn to the concluding verses of the 25th chapter of Matthew and read through our Lord's graphic word-picture we call the Parable of the Last Judgment (vss. 31-46): "I was an hungered and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me drink, I was a stranger and ye took me in." This is the most simple, searching and impressive statement ever given utterance to of man's duty to man, symbolized in our treatment of our Lord. Here is the assurance that what we have done for the needy we have done for the Judge Himself. But at this point the symbolism ceases and we are brought face to face with the real meaning of our helpfulness toward our fellowmen: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Then Jesus again takes up the use of symbolism to give us the reverse of this picture: "I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink, I was a stranger and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not." And without a pause He once more drops the symbolism and says: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." What we neglect to do for those in need is accepted by the Judge as slights of Himself. Thus we break the spiritual link between God and us. God is a spirit and the finest honor we render Him is manifested in a spiritual sense: our love for Him and all that belongs to Him. Therefore our helpfulness to His needy children has as its real essence spiritual love. The basis of our alms-giving must be inward, spiritual love for God and His creatures. Then our alms-giving is in the name of the Father and not an act of our own and to our credit alone. Our alms then flow from our hearts and are not from our worldly hands; they are part of our righteousness; we are honoring God through honoring the least of His children.

WM. L. MOSS

When alms-giving is not motived by an inward spiritual urge Jesus knew the temptation was always present in men to satisfy their innate vanity and love of self by an ostentatious display of their liberality, their alms becoming a mockery of genuine righteousness. Men would be fooling themselves and others, but most certainly they would not be fooling God.

FLORIDA SEEKS RECOMPENSE.

Those who have not been too immersed in other things will remember the embargo on Florida citrus fruit caused by what we were told was a visitation of the Mediterranean fruit fly.

The embargo has gone the way of all things and the fruit fly, so we are told, has gone likewise thither.

An army of thousands of men found employment in chasing the hated fly out of Florida's otherwise hospitable sunshine. Vast groves were destroyed, even as in an earlier time vast groves were destroyed in a great war on fruit cancer.

But in that earlier day the orchardists took their losses and liked them. Not so today. Today there is organization. Organized Floridans are battering at the doors of congress, asking restitution, or recompense, for ruined groves. And many a congressional ear is attuned to the clamor, inclined at a receptive angle, so that no orchardist may be offended.

The debate still rages as to whether there ever was a fruit fly menace. But the orchardists are in no doubt about what happened to their fruit and their groves. They are asking payment. They are organized. The fight will be worth watching. When you are organized your chance of getting something is pretty good, whether fruit grower in a fruit growers' organization, or a wage earner in a trade union.

JUSTICE BY INDIRECTION

A Miami, Fla., judge has just freed two men arrested for carrying a gun because they were held under a law devised for a special purpose and so framed as to leave the door open to authorities to arrest and hold honest men along with rascals. The extent to which such a law could be used against union men, particularly in strike time, is obvious.

Perhaps the framers of the ordinance sought to achieve a difficult justice by this indirection. But the judge points out that injustice may be done as easily, reading a good lesson to legislators.

In Minnesota the state legislature enacted a law making it possible to put newspapers out of business. The legislators sought to stop so-called scandal sheets, but they opened the door to persecution of all newspapers. Sooner or later the law will be repealed.

Justice is not to be had by devious methods. Justice must be had by methods that justice can sustain. Otherwise prejudice, bigotry, hatred, have their day and shambles replace orderly court rooms.

NEW LAW MUST BE TESTED

It is beginning to be clear, that like all other legislation supposed to be for the benefit of labor, the prevailing rate of wages bill now in congress will have to be tested—if it becomes a law—before its advantages, if any, can be known. Sponsored as an administration measure, in harmony with the famous White House wage maintenance agreement of over a year ago, defects appeared in it as soon as it came before the senate committee. But Secretary of Labor Doak served peremptory notice that if any amendments were proposed, the administration would withdraw its sponsorship.

No penalty is attached by the bill to any violation of its terms. However, since it proposes to prescribe part of the conditions of a legal contract with the government, it may be presumed that any contract drawn without these provisions would be null and void—which might be penalty enough, if so declared by a court of competent jurisdiction.

The fact that the bill provides that it shall not be effective until after 30 days from its passage leaves an "open season" for contractors, and for the departmental officials who are alleged to have been favoring contracts and contractors going against the terms of the White House conference agreement.

This will be just another one of those cases where "eternal vigilance" will have to be the price of whatever gains labor may make in the everlasting battle between the private greed of a few and the larger benefit of the many.

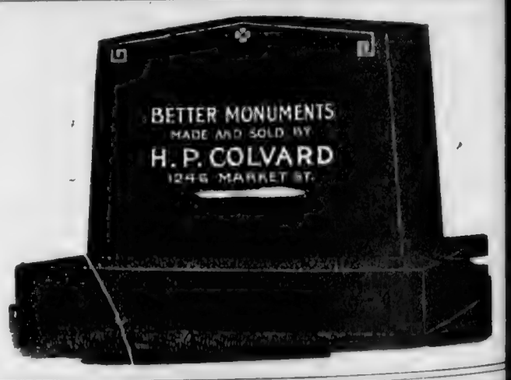
Desiring to Serve on Your City Commission

PRIMARY MARCH 17, 1931



To The Taxpayers
— of —
Hamilton County

Unusual conditions confront the County.

The delinquency date for the 1930 State and County Tax has been deferred from March 1, 1931, to June 1, 1931, by the State Legislature.

The County did not anticipate this when its budget was made, and unless a very considerable part of the taxpayers pay their taxes as usual on or before March 1, the County will be forced to borrow a large sum of money, the interest on which will increase the tax burden on all.

Under this temporary law, the 1930 tax will bear interest at 6% for March, April and May, and the saving of this is an inducement to those who find it at all possible to pay their taxes on or before March 1, besides helping those less fortunate (as well as themselves) by keeping the tax rate down.

Respectfully,
ALVIN SHIPP, Trustee.

MILITIA WILL BE CALLED OUT IF RICH IGNORE IDLE RELIEF

Philadelphia, Feb. 26.—"If the rich continue to refuse to contribute to unemployment relief it will be necessary to call upon the state militia to preserve order," declared Mayor Mackey in a radio address.

A relief committee is endeavoring to raise funds to give employment to thousands of workless in this city.

The mayor said many rich contribute comparatively small sums and then rush to Florida for the winter. The poor, he said, have contributed to save the situation thus far.

"I am not an alarmist and I am not overemphasizing what I know to be facts," said the city official. "No one wants to see martial law proclaimed here, but I know whereof I speak when I say that if the Lloyd committee should break down and cease to function because of the failure of people to contribute from their funds for relief it would be absolutely impossible for the police force of Philadelphia to contend with conditions.

"Up to the present time a great proportion of the relief funds have been contributed by the working class. Not one-tenth of our citizens have responded, and it is a lamentable fact, but none the less true, that many of our wealthy men and women have failed to respond while many others who are rich and well able to do so have contributed insignificant sums.

"Some of them give $100 to the Lloyd committee and then go to Florida for the winter and the poor man stays here. I say to you that it is the poor man who has saved the situation up to this time. In other words, the poor man is protecting the interests of the rich man because the poor man is sympathetic."

Mayor Mackey said it was estimated that there are at least 250,000 persons, including 50,000 children, in the city who are without the bare necessities of life.

CHICAGO LABOR CHIEF ATTACKS WAGE CUTTING AS SOCIAL PERIL

Interests Now Promoting Lower Pay Levels Deserve Severest Public Condemnation, as Their Selfish Action Is Endangering Welfare of Millions, Fitzpatrick Declares.

By JOSEPH A. WISE.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Wage cutting by "open shop" corporations in the Chicago area was deplored by John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, in a statement made to International Labor News Service.

"Victims of wage cutting by 'open shop' employers have made complaints to the Chicago Federation of Labor, but we can do little about it except to make the facts public," he said. "The unions have their hands full taking care of their unemployed members, and cannot of course give relief to or act in behalf of these wage earners who have neglected to take advantage of their opportunities to join a union of their crafts during prosperous times.

"We deeply sympathize with many of the destitute unemployed who are not members of organized labor. Many of them of course are the victims of their own folly in failing to become members of the unions when they had a chance. However, it is reasonably sure that a large majority are from those industries which have successfully resisted effort to persuade or compel them to recognize the right of collective bargaining.

Unions Maintain Pay Levels.

"The trade unions of Chicago have not been unmindful of the promises made by industrial and business leaders and by the officers of organized labor at the conferences held at the White House several months ago. The Chicago unions have endeavored in every way to maintain the status quo.

"Generally speaking, our efforts have been to preserve the wage scales, hours of work and working conditions as they were prior to the present depression. Union employes have given us co-operation to that end, but the wage slashing of 'open shop' employers, many of whom were obligated by promises made by their representatives at the White House conferences, is causing unrest and dissatisfaction that may lead to future difficulties. There is reason to believe that that is the ultimate object of those who are in a position to enforce the agreements made at the White House conferences, but who now are either tacitly agreeing to or actively engaged in surreptitious wage slashing and efforts to sabotage the trade union structure.

Union Employers Praised.

"On the whole the union employers with whom the Chicago trade unions have had contractural relations for many years have displayed a fine spirit throughout these trying times. Recently there has been some unrest on the part of a few of the union employers, but not of a dangerous character thus far.

"One union employers' organization has made complaint over unfair competition and hinted that a reduction in the wage scale would be acceptable, but it is not likely that the issue will be forced. The union employers in this particular industry did remarkably well during prosperous times, many of them going from nothing to affluence. They simply forget for the moment that it is incumbent upon them to take the lean with the fat along with the wage-earners.

Wage Cuts Condemned.

"Business, financial and industrial leaders now engaged in promoting or actually making wage cuts or lengthening the hours of labor should receive the severest public censure. Their selfishness and lack of social vision are endangering the future welfare and happiness of millions of human beings. American standards of living must be maintained and bettered rather than to be brought to the Asiatic level."

Pale and Weak

"I THINK Cardui is a wonderful medicine, for I improved greatly after taking it," says Mrs. A. W. English, of R. F. D. 4, Roanoke, Va. "When I was just a girl of 13, my mother gave this medicine to me, and it did me a great deal of good. I was weak and run-down. After I had taken Cardui awhile, I felt much better.

"In 1924, my health was poor. I felt miserable, and hadn't enough strength to do my housework. It took all my willpower to keep up. I was pale and weak.

"I got Cardui again and took it. My improvement was wonderful. I can recommend Cardui to others, for my health was so much better after I had taken a course of the Cardui Home Treatment."

Cuban Censorship Brings Sharp Note

New York.—The Press Congress of the World, meeting in this city, protested against press censorship in Cuba, as ordered by President Machado. That official has smashed trade unions and jailed workers. He extended autocracy to the press, and is now informed that this is "an archaic, ineffective method of righting a wrong."

"Censorship of newspapers in any form disturbing or restraining dissemination of news, to say nothing of suppression of all such publications, is inconceivable in this day of enlightened education," the Cuban president was informed.

"No matter what the objective may be, the continued suppression of Havana newspapers is not merely undesirable, but unwarranted."

Old-Age Pension Plan Not Political Issue

Washington.—Fourteen governors have declared this year for the old-age pension system, said Senator Dill, of Washington. He said this issue is non-partisan because eight of these governors have democratic affiliations, six republican and one farmer-labor.

"I know of no movement in this country that is more worthy of support and which is more important to encourage to provide a fund by which the aged poor may have the comforts of life among their friends in the communities in which they have lived," said Senator Dill.

"The experience of states which have adopted old-age pensions justifies the claim that it costs no more to provide for the aged poor by means of pensions than by providing county poor houses or poor farms."

28 NEW YORK CITIES ARE SERIOUSLY HURT

New York.—Unemployment conditions are serious in twenty-eight cities in this state, according to a report by Gov. Roosevelt's commission on unemployment problems.

In twelve cities conditions are "moderately serious," and "slight" in nineteen cities.

Funds are not "seriously lacking," it is stated, "but public relief is usually inadequate to the needs of the recipients." There are numerous instances of concealed suffering.

The commission says the situation "may for a time become more acute," and they recommend that the state help, particularly by increasing employment by advancing public work.

Appropriations to communities by the state is not favored, except as a last resort.

INFANCY WELFARE OPPOSED IN HOUSE

Washington.—The infancy-maternity bill, passed by the senate, was declared unnecessary and an invasion of local autonomy in health administration by witnesses before the house interstate commerce committee.

The bill provides that the government shall duplicate amounts set aside by the states for infancy-maternity care.

Miss Charlotte Rowe, representing the Women Patriots of Massachusetts, declared bills of this kind are "an invasion, an affront, to the spirit of the people."

Efforts are being made in the house to link this bill with a rural health proposal. Friends of infancy-maternity charge trickery.

Thanks, Friends!

I want to express my heartfelt appreciation for the fine reception given by members of Organized Labor to my announcement in last week's issue of The Labor World.

Many expressions of approval and assurances of support have encouraged me to believe that I will be among the leaders in the balloting for city officials March 17.

Again I thank you, and ask that you speak to your friends about my candidacy.

BIG NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN FOR UNION LABEL IN APRIL

In a letter to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, John J. Manning, secretary of the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, announces there will be a big nation-wide campaign for the union label, shop card and working button conducted by the Union Label Trades Department during the month of April.

All national and international unions affiliated with the department have been invited to take an active part in this campaign in order to stimulate interest in the products and services of their members. These organizations have been requested to communicate with their local unions, instructing them to have committees appointed to conduct an active campaign in the various cities in April.

All central bodies affiliated with the American Federation of Labor have been requested to take an active part in this campaign and to appoint committees to carry out a program outlined by the Union Label Trades Department. The names and addresses of the chairmen of such committees are to be sent to John J. Manning, 202 A. F. of L. building, Washington, D. C., so that he can communicate with them and supply them with free literature.

The co-operation of all members of organized labor and those interested in maintaining the American standard of living is solicited in this campaign.

The call for the campaign is signed by the executive board of the Union Label Trades Department, composed of George W. Perkins, president; Matthew Woll, first vice-president; Charles L. Baine, second vice-president; Joseph Obergfell, third vice-president; A. A. Myrup, fourth vice-president; Charles P. Howard, fifth vice-president, and Secretary Manning.

JURIST PROTECTS FREE PRESS; DEFENDS NAMING EVILDOERS

Washington, Feb. 10.—How can free press be possible if a state law permits an equity judge to padlock a newspaper on the ground that its articles are defamatory?

This query was submitted by Associate Justice Brandeis, of the United States supreme court, to lawyers who are defending the Minnesota newspaper "gag" law.

The court is hearing an appeal from an injunction issued three years ago against the Minneapolis Saturday Press. The order was based on a state law providing that any paper which publishes articles that are "malicious, scandalous and defamatory" is guilty of a nuisance and may be enjoined.

Minnesota has criminal libel laws, but politicians who were being exposed by the Saturday Press induced the legislature to pass the "gag" law. This permitted equity to set aside constitutional guarantees of a free press and trial by jury.

Deputy Attorney-General Markham, of Minnesota, was defending the law when he was interrupted by Justice Brandeis.

"In these Saturday Press articles," said the jurist, "the editors state that they seek to expose combinations between criminals and public officials in conducting and profiting from gambling hells. They name the chief of police and other officials.

"What the Saturday Press did seems like an effort to expose such a combination. Now, is that not a privileged communication, if there ever was one? How else can a community secure protection from that sort of thing if people are not allowed to engage in free discussion of such matters?

"Of course, there was defamation," continued Justice Brandeis. "You cannot disclose evil without naming the doers of evil. It is difficult to see how one can have a free press and the protection it affords in the democratic community without the privilege this act seeks to limit."

KANSAS WILL STUDY CORPORATION FARMS

Topeka, Kan.—The house of representatives passed a resolution which instructs the state attorney-general to study corporation farms with the objective of having the charters of these organizations forfeited.

The resolution states that "corporations engaged in the business of farming are not encouraging agriculture in Kansas but, on the contrary, are replacing individual farmers of Kansas and depopulating the state."

"I would have such dizzy spells, and such bursting headaches, until I could hardly go. But after taking a few doses of Black-Draught, I would feel just fine. ENTRAL BODY WILL ENTERTAIN OFFICE-SEEKERS

ndidates to Address the Workers Monday Night.

SSION OPEN ONLY TO LOCAL UNIONISTS

en Break Assured to "Point With Pride" or "View With Alarm."

This "pointing with pride" and viewing with alarm" thing eginning of the present torrid unicipal campaign will burst nto full flower Monday night at Central Labor hall, when the arious candidates have been inited to appear and present their espective claims for the votes of rganized workers of the city.

Chattanooga Trades and Labor ouncil several years ago adopted a policy of having as its uests just prior to each and very election all local candiates, devoting the whole of one ession to addresses by the ofce-seekers. "Candidates' night" t Central Body has become increasingly popular, and seldom it that an aspirant for political ffice fails to take advantage of e opportunity to speak to organized labor members. It is onsidered certain, therefore, that omething like a score of visitrs will be on hand Monday ight, and while this will necesarily make the time of each adress limited, it is believed that ach one will have ample opporunity to "speak his piece."

It is stressed that the meeting ill be open to members of loal unions only. This does not ean that the audience will be onfined to delegates to Central ody, but any bona-fide member f any one of the locals is welome, and in fact is urged to atend. The point is, however, hat it will be organized labor's rivate entertainment, and it will e impossible to entertain the eneral public.

The speakers will be guests of he workers, and will as usual be hown every consideration. An even break" will be given to all, nd positively no heckling will e allowed at any stage of the roceedings. It is further promsed by officials of Central Body hat no collection will be taken, o pies or red lemonade sold and o cakes auctioned. However, if mong the office-seekers there hould be one who has thought-ssly annexed to his hip a little omething "for the stomach's ake," he might doubtless find ome among the audience who ould not be averse to testing he quality of same, after the eeting adjourns just in the inerest of scientific research, of ourse.

President M. H. Ortwein, of entral Body, will preside, and he session will be called to orer promptly at 7:30. It is sugested that any candidate not on hand at that time, when the ames will be placed in a hat nd drawn, may have to wait unthe early comers have finished.

No formal invitations will be ent out, notices in the press beng, as usual, regarded as sufficient.

ilding Trades Council to Hold Important Meet

Business of unusual importance ill be brought before the Buildg Trades council at its regular eeting next Wednesday night, cording to announcement by E. McDaniels, business manager the council, and it is hoped at all delegates will be present take part in the discussions. Mr. McDaniels said Thursday at the council is faced with a mber of problems as indicaone are that building operations ll shortly begin on a large ale. He declared a large amount work is in prospect when once ctivities begin, and it is the purse of the council to be prepared ake every influence to secure ch work for the building trades filiates.

The meeting Wednesday night ill be held at the usual place, 2 East Seventh street, at 7:30.

HIGH POLICE OFFICIALS FAIL TO SMASH TEXTILE WALKOUT

(By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelhia, March 5.—A general strike swept through nonunion carpet and other textile mills in this city. More than 3,500 employes walked out of half a hundred plants because of poor work conditions.

Police officials immediately assumed the role of strikebreakers and ordered the arrest of pickets. Officials of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers and other trade unionists were called to police headquarters and were imperiously asked: "Who ordered this strike?"

The police officials said they were issuing orders to clear the streets to prevent gatherings and picketing of any kind; that the streets of Kensington (a mill suburb) "would be kept clean as a carpet."

The unionists refused to be intimidated. They declared that these orders would prevent workers from striking from any cause, no matter how just.

"That is what is meant; call it what you like," was the reply.

The unionists later called on Major Schofield, director of public safety, and demanded that illegal arrests cease. The major was uneasy and appeared unwilling to admit that former statements were made.

The terrorism of police heads was checked by Magistrate Costello, who released 392 pickets. They were charged with "disorderly conduct." The court's action is considered a repudiation of Schofield's anti-picketing order. The strikers formed the largest body of defendants ever brought before a local court. When they were assembled at a police station the police turned on the radio and the strikers sang popular songs and the national anthem. The police themselves and Governor Pinchot were cheered. There were boos and hisses when Schofield's name was mentioned.

Magistrate Costello, in releasing the pickets, told them to "obey the orders of your union officials, respect the police, keep within the law and there will be no arrests."

The unionists declare that Schofield has political aspirations and he believes that strikebreaking will appeal to low-wage elements in this city.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE IS APPARENTLY CHECKED

February Shows Slight Improvement in Alarming Trend, But Reported Gains in Wage Cuts Bring Warning From President William Green.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, March 5.—Reports on wages and employment in January and February received by the American Federation of Labor give both a note of encouragement and a signal of danger, according to President William Green, of the federation. Commenting on the report, Mr. Green said:

"Our reports from trade unions show that the rapid increase of unemployment was apparently checked in February, but at the same time comes a report from the department of labor that wage cuts in January were nearly three times as numerous and affected nearly twice as many employes as in any month since the depression began. In January, 335 of the firms reporting to the department of labor reduced wages, and the cuts affected 43,000 employes; the largest number of firms reducing in any previous month was 133 in August affecting 24,729 employes.

"This movement to reduce wages at the very moment when business depression appears to be reaching bottom is most untimely. Wage reductions did not cure business depression in 1921. Depression lasted twelve months after the 'liquidation of labor.' A prominent industrial executive says, 'A general reduction of wages would set back the impending recovery by at least two years.'

Pay Cuts Undermine Standards.

"Wage reductions are not like price cuts, for workers are human beings. Reduce their incomes and you cut away the market for industry's product. More than this—you undermine social standards and eventually degrade human life. Already workers have borne the brunt of the depression with losses from short time work and unemployment, with hunger, worry, illness, physical and mental degeneration. Workers' incomes today are 37 per cent below the level in factories and 21 per cent below on railroads. Wage cuts project these losses into the future, and lower living standards and buying power for a long time to come. Have the warnings been in vain? If wage cuts continue, we will limit our ability to pull up quickly from this depression.

"The federation unemployment report this month adds weight to the evidence that we have reached the bottom of depression. Reports from 2,192 unions with 803,000 members show a decrease in unemployment affecting .7 of 1 per cent of the membership in the first half of February. Our weighted figure for the per cent out of work in January was 19.8, in the first half of February 19.1. This is the first check in the rapid rise of unemployment since October. Now, with this first suggestion of improvement, is no time to cut wages. Workers' buying power will be an important factor in developing the spring seasonal advance into sustained recovery."

600 Negroes Imported in Effort To Break Longshoremen's Strike

(By International Labor News Service.)

New Orleans, March 5.—The river front presents a wartime scene, police officers with riot guns, deputy United States marshals patrolling the wharves, and tugboats bristling with armed guards, steaming slowly up and down the majestic Mississippi river, guarding approximately six hundred nonunion workers, the majority of them negroes, imported from Mississippi to break the strike inaugurated by the white and colored longshoremen, who have refused deplorable conditions and a drastic cut in wages.

Arrests by the score have been made by the militarized police under the command of Colonel Hu B. Myers, an ex-army officer brought to this city by Mayor Walmsley. The work that is being attempted in the port, T. J. Darcy, president of the white longshoremen's union, said, "is being done by a motley gang of riff-raff, consisting of a few Filipinos, Mexicans and bums gathered up from the flophouses about the city, none of whom could do a day's work if he wanted to."

"None of the so-called 'loyal workers' is at work on any of the ships in port," Mr. Darcy's statement said. "Our men are out 100 per cent, and they are standing up like men to protect their rights."

Conciliation Commissioner Frederick Canfield, of the department of labor, said a second conciliator, W. H. Rogers, was due here from Washington. Strike leaders again conferred with him at the DeSoto hotel, Mr. Canfield said, repeating their willingness to arbitrate. The vessel owners refuse to meet the representatives of the United States government and say they are willing to fight it out on the present lines.

Non-Union Woodworker Asks Aid Against Wage Slashers

(By International Labor News Service.)

Chicago, March 5.—A nonunion woodworker, having read stories in reference to wage cuts broadcast by International Labor News Service, has written a letter of appeal to the Federation News, official publication of the Chicago federation of labor, urgently requesting that something be done to stop the ruthless wage slashing of a large furniture manufacturing company which is named in the letter.

The letter, which fairly illustrates the conditions under which unorganized wage earners are compelled to labor in the Chicago area, follows, in part:

"During the last three years our wages have been cut 20 per cent each year. From this you will readily gather that our wages are 60 per cent lower now than they were three years ago. It is impossible to live decently on the wages that our employer is paying us at present.

"First-class woodworkers are making as low as $2 a day, which consists of nine hours' duration, and they are working at top speed all the time. Some of our sanders are drawing checks from $15 to $20 per full week. How can a married man live on such a small return for specialized activity? If we complain the bosses just laugh. Their slogan is, 'Do it or get out.' Surely there is some way we could get a square deal. Could not some of the labor officials help us?"

COMPENSATION URGED.

Oklahoma City—Gov. Murray has asked the state legislature to create a state workmen's compensation fund. He suggests that $150,000 be appropriated to set up the fund.

BUS QUESTION TO BE AIRED AT MASS-MEETING

Public Gathering Called for Tuesday.

PROMINENT MEN TO ADDRESS CITIZENS

Rail and Express Employes Sponsor Affair at Memorial Auditorium.

A public mass-meeting, "for the purpose of acquainting the people with the insufficient taxes being paid by commercial trucks and buses, and the damage heavy-laden vehicles are doing the highways, at the expense of the taxpayer," will be held next Tuesday night, March 10, in the main hall of the Memorial auditorium, under auspices of the Railroad and Express Employes of Chattanooga, an organization formed some time ago for the purposes outlined above, and numbering among its members employes of practically every railroad entering Chattanooga, as well as of the express companies, all branches of the service being represented.

Hon. Sam J. McAllester and Atty.-Gen. A. T. Stewart, of Winchester, will be the principal speakers, and a large number of prominent citizens have been invited to attend, including Senator Chambliss, Representatives Payne, Coleman and Chamlee, Mayor Bass and Judge Cummings.

The meeting is the culmination of a movement begun several months ago to bring out the facts with reference to various privileges enjoyed by the bus companies which the members of the organization believes should be regulated. A resolution calling for regulation of the buses was passed recently by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and it is understood legislators from various sections have been petitioned to take note of the alleged inequitable and damaging use of the highways by the bus companies.

Discussing the meeting called for Tuesday night, a member of the organization sponsoring it said Thursday to a representative of The Labor World:

"The meeting is to held for the purpose of acquainting the public with the insufficient taxes being paid by commercial trucks and buses, and the damage heavy-laden vehicles are doing the highways, at the expense of the taxpayer.

"The general public is very much interested in this question. The speakers and the chairman are outstanding men, and in order to take care of the crowd the main auditorium has been secured and the amplifier system will be used.

"There is no question in Tennessee that is giving the citizens more concern at this time than that of commercial trucks and buses. The people are beginning to realize the importance of seeing that the highway traffic should be properly regulated and limited as to weight, etc."

Prof. Spencer McCallie will preside, and the invocation will be delivered by Rev. C. G. Hounshell, pastor of the Ridgedale Methodist Episcopal church.

The meeting will be called to order promptly at 7:45. It is announced that there will be no admission, and no collection will be taken.

The Labor World speaks for the entire local movement in expressing to Brother Ruggles sincere sympathy in his great loss.

LABOR AGENCY BILL PASSED; HOUSE REJECTED SUBSTITUTE

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York, March 5.—The house, by a vote of 182 to 84, declined to accept Secretary of Labor Doak's substitute for the Wagner national employment agencies bill. The house passed the Wagner bill by a viva voce vote.

The Wagner bill, strongly urged by the American Federation of Labor, passed the senate last May. It follows the scheme of other federal-state legislation by providing a 50-50 division of costs where states set up employment agencies. A federal director general shall be placed in charge of this work. President Hoover, on numerous occasions during the last ten years, declared for a national employment agency system. The Wagner bill is the first time such a plan has been authorized. A. F. of L. officials resisted every attempt to have the Doak substitute accepted.

The National Association of Manufacturers opposed the Wagner bill, but other opposition did not develop until recently.

Congressman Cooper, of Ohio, said the Wagner bill has been carefully considered "and now within ten days of the close of the session they come in with a substitute."

The Doak bill merely provided for the creation of a third assistant secretary of labor, who would have charge of the United States employment service.

Congressman LaGuardia quoted testimony by Mr. Doak before the judiciary committee that all his bill would change from present conditions would be to create an additional office in his department. "Are you going to fool American labor with anything like this (Doak) bill in the closing days of the session?" asked Mr. LaGuardia.

"The manufacturers' association," continued the New York congressman, "thought they had this (Wagner) bill defeated, but when they saw that this house was restive and wanted an opportunity to vote for this bill, they cooked up the substitute."

Congressman Graham, of Philadelphia, led the fight in the committee and in the house against the Wagner bill. He resorted to the unusual parliamentary procedure of proposing an amendment to that measure by offering the Doak bill. This was rejected, 84 for Doak amendment and 182 against.

WAR ON LABOR DECLARED BIG BOOST TO COMMUNISM

A. F. of L. Head, in Cleveland to Back Union Waiters, Points Out Unreasonable Attitude and Tactics of Some Employers Tend to Develop Rebellion Toward Society.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Cleveland, O., March 5.—Unreasonable attitudes on the part of some employers, as exemplified by the war waged on union waiters and waitresses by the big Cleveland hotels, are giving a powerful boost to communism in the United States, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, declared here in an address delivered in behalf of the locked out union workers.

Union waiters and waitresses, members of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' and Beverage Dispensers' International Alliance, were locked out last July when they refused to sign "yellow dog" contracts. Union musicians and engineers walked out in support of the culinary workers. Since then, city officials and numerous prominent citizens have endeavored to settle the trouble by arbitration, but the hotel managements stubbornly refused to discuss the matter.

"Everywhere we hear business men discussing in apprehensive tones the 'soviet menace,'" President Green began. "Now let me point out something.

"It is just such an attitude as that of the Cleveland hotels, just such unreasonable tactics, that tend to develop the communist spirit.

"It makes men rebel against the social order that allows employes of many years' standing to be cast out of their jobs because they refuse to sign contracts that would leave them helpless and a prey to whatever conditions might be brought into existence.

"Let me tell you," the labor leader went on, "that the old Russian aristocracy would be greatly pleased if it could deal with trades unions now."

Discussing the unemployment problem, Green said the federation is giving more thought to this question than to any other, "because it is an absolute necessity for us to prevent any recurrence of such a situation as that we are passing out of now."

Green said substantial progress is being made by labor in organization of textile workers in the south, but that the field there "is difficult to conquer because of the activity of communism in ground made fertile by poor living conditions."

Consumers Research Tells How To Get Most for Your Money

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, March 5.—For a long time practical people have been looking for some agency to which they could turn to get the new low down on commodities which are highly touted in advertisement and selling talks. That agency has arrived and is growing at a phenomenal rate. It has over 10,000 members now and is on a going basis.

The organization is known as Consumers Research, Inc. Its object is "to provide unbiased information and counsel on goods bought by the ultimate consumer." It takes reports made by the government, its own technical information and makes this available to subscribers. Any one may join by the payment of $2 membership fee. The information is confidential to members.

Recently 1,000 members attended a meeting in the metropolitan area to enthusiastically support Stuart Chase, F. J. Schlink and the other directors in the work. The National Association of Advertisers has taken note that an agency has arisen that is taking the bunk out of advertising and selling talks. It already has six full-time workers making tests and information available to consumers.

From its facts one can find out which motor car gives the best performance for the money invested, which radio gives the best service, which electric toaster gives you the brownest toast for the least current, why inferior electric light bulbs cost you at least $2 in extra current in comparison with tested bulbs, why certain tooth cleaners are bunk, which marmalade is the best for the money, and so forth. You can sometimes discover that the least expensive and least boosted article is the best. That's why there is a prospect that from now on the well-informed consumer may get his money's worth.

Economic Depression Brings New Outlook

New York, March 5.—The economic depression in this country has resulted in new popular outlooks, declared Prof. Halvdan Koht, Swedish educator, on departing for his home after a several months' stay in the United States. He lectured in several universities.

"I felt strong optimism when I was here before," said Prof. Koht. "Your present depression has had a strong psychological effect that seems to have gone deeper into the souls of the people. They talk as though unemployment had come to stay and that this depression calls for a new social order, although no definite program has been found to bring about a renaissance."

Prof. Koht said he observed a more strict caste system here. He noted, however, that "university intellectuals" in the United States are sympathetic with the labor movement. The contrary is true in Europe, he said.

COMPENSATION LAW HOLDS CONTRACTORS

Trenton, N. J.—The New Jersey court of appeals upheld the 1924 amendment to the state compensation law which provides that contractors placing work with subcontractors shall be liable for compensation due employes of the latter in the event of the subcontractor's failure to carry workmen's compensation insurance.

BONUS LOAN BILL BIG SETBACK TO 'OPEN-SHOPPERS'

Will Help to Maintain Wage Standards.

LABOR-HATERS DUE FOR A SEVERE JOLT

Distribution of Huge Sums Will Enable Idle to Carry On.

By JOSEPH A. WISE.

The bill just passed by congress granting further loans to World war veterans is a tremendous setback to the "open shop" and financial interests which have been plotting and planning to smash American wage standards. The loans, if expedited promptly, will greatly aid the unemployed to withstand the "open shop" offensive which many believe is in the offing. That no doubt accounts for the wails of anguish which are going up from gentlemen who like to be known as captains of industry and wizards of finance.

It is conservatively estimated that $60,000,000 will be distributed in the Chicago area, which includes all of Illinois and the great Calumet manufacturing district of northern Indiana. It is probable, however, that the amount will be much larger than that. There are at least 350,000 war veterans in this area. Of these 75,000 to 100,000 carry union cards. About 75,000 availed themselves of the former very limited loan provisions of their adjusted compensation certificates. Under the new act of congress the veterans can make further loans averaging about $275 each.

Big Buying Rush Expected.

The grocer, the baker and the candlestick maker may expect an immediate rush of business as soon as the boys collect and there will be a big falling off in the apple peddling on the streets.

The only fly in the ointment is the announcement of the veterans' bureau that only the neediest will be paid first. That sounds like a joke and indicates that the bureau heads will tie up and retard payments with a lot of silly paper work and red tape. No veteran is going to be sucker enough to step up and go into hock unless he needs the money. In the last analysis the loan provisions as passed by congress is a Shylock set-up and the veterans are well aware of that. Those seeking the loans now will simply be acting under necessity and prayerful that the next congress will wipe out the compound interest acting under necessity and prayerful that the next congress will is only a hope, however, and those who do not need the loans will be reluctant to go into hock. That is common sense.

Depression Harmful To Children's Lives

Washington.—Unemployment's disastrous effect upon children was stressed by Miss Grace Abbott, director federal children's bureau. She referred to studies made by her bureau in the last depression in cities of more than 50,000 population.

"Over four-fifths of the families were in debt for food, rent, fuel, medical attendance and other necessities," she said. "When the father eventually secures work, their families have a debt burden to meet.

"In some of these families money for food was secured at the cost of permanent injury to the health of the mother and the neglect of children.

"Unemployment, then, because it means a lowered family standard, anxiety and dread, the loss of savings and mortgaging of the future, has a direct and disastrous effect upon the welfare of children."

Boston Printers Divide Up Work

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, March 5.—Under the leadership of Boston Typographical union (Local 13), a campaign has been launched to provide employment for those members of the local who are totally unemployed, or who are unable to get more than a day or two of work each week.

The local executive, headed by Leo F. Greene, president, has introduced a plan for a five-day week. Under this plan, the members employed steadily are urged to lay off a day each week, and thus give employment to the members not so fortunate. However, there is nothing compulsory in the movement. The decision as to whether he will give up the day will be made solely by the individual member.

JUST LOOKING FOR WORK.

The complete extinction of the New York Sunday and Morning World and the sale of the New York World by trustees of the Joseph Pulitzer estate to the Scripps-Howard interests, headed by Ray Howard, has thrown most of the 2,800 World employes out of work. The now idle World employes made a strenuous attempt to form a stock company to take over the World but failed at the last moment to "swing the deal." Had they been able to purchase the newspaper it would have kept off the streets over 2,500 editors, reporters, printers, pressmen, office employes, truckmen, etc. But the hand of fate was against these breadwinners. So today they walk the streets of New York, or other cities to which by now part of them may have scattered, and along with the thousands who have long been out of employment of any kind, they have no future before them—except to keep walking, looking for work.

BROWN SEEKS SYMPATHY.

Editor Labor World:

I'm sorry to say that I don't feel so good this week as I have been feeling. I have lost my "inspiration" for one thing, and I wish you'd insert the enclosed ad for me and charge to my advertising account. I believe in advertising. Just look how much us "common people" and the great "unwashed" of this city have found out about the various candidates since they've been so extensively advertised in our daily papers! And just look what it has done for the school fund, in the payment of poll taxes! Never before in the history of our fair city has that school fund bulged so, on all four sides, with poll taxes! And it owes it solely to this great campaign of "advertising!" But, all the same, that's one thing that disturbs my comfort. It has given me a most excruciating pain in the neck, and I feel sure you feel likewise about it. You can't pick up your radio any time, much less your newspaper, and not find a "candidate" on the air, and the air so full of mud that you can't see the candidate! I hope you enjoy it! I can't say I do.

And then, this week, you know, the president vetoed the Muscle Shoals bill, and that pretty near put me in bed! You know Shakespeare or Solomon—or was it Ingersoll?—who said that "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick?" Well, I've been hoping and praying and "waiting" for ten or fifteen long, weary years for congress or someone to solve that cussed problem, and when this compromise was agreed upon, I thought sure we'd get some action for our money, sink to that river bed, and my hopes ran high and joyous that, at last, maybe, we might get some power or light current at something less than nine times its real cost! But, alas! Mr. Hoover, after he said, partly, that he would make an exception of this project, has calmly reneged on his Elizabethton speech and vetoed the bill, and my poor heart is nigh busted with disappointment. I hope you fully appreciate my feelings on this matter. If you ever had, as I have, any occasion to buy any commercial fertilizer, you certainly would appreciate any sort of feelings in this matter.

And now—we come down to the soldier bonus bill, and the best fight the government made, to keep from letting go one or two more billions of dollars! They let go a measly eight mor'n that, in a rush for something that never done us a mighty whit of good. What the hell were they kicking about? Won't they get about 90 per cent of it back and not have to pay that other half? And can't they get every dollar they need to pay it at interest rate of 3 1/2 per cent—and they and are charging the poor devils 4½ per cent compound? What in thunder are they making about? I wish I had two or three million dollars. I'd be glad to put up those certificates on the same basis. I might want to run for office some time!

This is that ad I want you to insert, as cheaply as possible, as I don't care to go to any great expense to recover this lost inspiration of mine, and I certainly won't pay any reward for it. I just hate to lose anything, not that I have any Scotch in me (or any other kind!).

"Lost, one badly used "inspiration," quite old and badly frayed. It is permanently attached to an unreconstructed sense of humor, which is of no value to any one. Finder may keep that for his trouble and will please return the inspiration to The Labor World office, where I have left my many thanks and appreciation with the editor." H. F. B.

FEBRUARY, 1931.

The month of February of this year was, probably, one of the most eventful since the close of the World war. It has been a month of widespread, intense suffering, with little transpiring during the course of the month to alleviate the pangs of those who suffered. And in many other ways, too, February was a memorable month.

During February the unemployment situation reached its peak, not only in regard to the numbers unemployed but in respect to their sufferings. Those laid off a month or two before and with small bank accounts either found their funds gone or fast dwindling.

Not until February did relief to any marked extent come to drouth victims. And then it came slowly and painfully, the relief given only partially solving the problem.

A drop in food prices, noticeably flour and flour products, dried beans and eggs, came during the month, but there was no marked decrease in rents despite the prevalent unemployment.

The month witnessed an unbelievable number of bank officers climaxing their breaches of trust by committing suicide.

February also saw the Danville strike become a matter of painful history—at least for the present. At Danville, as elsewhere, the flu raged during the month and added immeasurably to the suffering of the strikers.

In politics, Hoover vetoing the soldiers' bonus bill, King Alphonso asking men to form cabinets to their own liking to help him govern Spain and then tripping them up in the dark as they went about forming their cabinets, and "Big Bill" Thompson and Judge Lyle slapping each other on the wrist in Chicago were about the only events of this nature that are worth mentioning.

All in all, it was a busy little month.

GANGSTERISM'S INFLUENCE.

The appearance of Al "Scarface" Capone on the first pages of newspapers during the past few weeks brings to one's attention again that gangsterism continues to give the predominant color to news emanating from our larger cities. With shame Americans have had to recognize the fact that gang outlawry is deeply entrenched in the fabric of the life of some of America's biggest cities.

Although it is acknowledged that gangsterism is defiance of the laws safeguarding public affairs, as well as affecting economic life in a detrimental way, few see one angle of gang-rule that, because of those whom it touches, should stiffen the backbones of law-abiding citizens and drive them to the point where an enraged public opinion will get the situation in hand and end the gang evil. The insidious influence of gangsterism on the youth of America is what is referred to here.

The youth of this country cannot be expected to grow up amidst a life in which an evil like gangsterism prevails to so large extent without being influenced by it. Gangsterism, having assumed the magnitude it has, is a too powerful force in American life of today for us to hope our boys and girls can go on and on living in an atmosphere contaminated by it and not be influenced by it.

America has too many problems facing her, problems requiring not only older heads to attempt to solve, but younger minds and younger shoulders to take up where the older minds and shoulders are forced to leave off because of advancing age. We can't afford to see any of our manpower corrupted and devitalized by any destroying force. After the present depression is dispelled the ranks of industry, from the humblest toiler to the most powerful industrial executive, has before it one of the biggest jobs that ever faced a generation of men: Readjustment of the industrial world in the light of what has been revealed to us by our present predicament.

THE PASSING OF FITZGERALD.

Harry R. Fitzgerald, main owner of the Danville cotton mills, was the biggest figure in his town. Outside of his town he was little known until he elected to fight against the wishes of the employes of a union. By holding them in battle for four long months he became nationally known. Then heart failure put a period to his dream of empire, whatever it was.

Fitzgerald was a man of queer traits. He must have had persistence. Born deaf and mute, he learned to speak. He made himself boss by something more than weight of money. Some light had drifted into his brain, for he thought it necessary and advisable to be "good" as he saw it. But not enough light had drifted into his brain to give him the idea that it was necessary to take account of the wishes of others. With him, it seemed, employes were employes. They were there to be bossed, but treated with some sort of consideration, always, however, falling short of getting their consent.

Had Harry R. Fitzgerald got just a little more light he might have been classed as a really great man. He might have shone nationally as a light in a dark industry. Perhaps, had he lived, that time might have come, for surely he did not fight through four months of strike without finding out that there were forces in the world of which he hadn't known.

The passing of Fitzgerald will bring the Danville mills back into something of the limelight brought upon them by the long strike in which 5,000 men and women were fighting for a minimum measure of decency, for now the controlling voice must change in some manner not yet clear.

THE MISNAMED BONUS BILL.

It is called a bonus bill, but it isn't a bonus bill. The bill permits veterans to borrow more money on their certificates. Veterans desperately in need can hock their certificates and stave off tragedy.

To a fellow at the end of his rope $250 is a fortune. That the government will take 4½ per cent compound interest is on the other side of the picture. It somehow takes the starch out of the word "bonus." But, be those things as they may, the bill will help desperately needly families and will put money in circulation.

Those reasons, in the minds of many, weigh above all reasons brought forward on the other side.

BANKERS WON'T LEARN.

Ground work for a general wage reduction movement is attempted by another banker—Rome C. Stephenson, official of the American Bankers' association—in an address to the business policy forum of the College of the City of New York. A similar suggestion was recently made by Albert Wiggin, chairman board of directors of the Chase National bank, New York City, the largest financial institution on the North American continent.

These statements, if unchallenged, are preliminary to a massed attack on wage scales. It is necessary, before an open move is made, to create a new "atmosphere," as the public has been educated to the value of high purchasing power. The first essential is to swing the public from an accepted belief that high wages is a lasting prosperity base. This would be accomplished by sending up "kites" on the need for lower wages. These "kites" will be noticed by employers' economists, newspaper editors and other so-called "molders of public opinion."

Banker Wiggin says high wages do not make for prosperity. He revives the ancient economic heresy that low wages decrease costs and increase employment. Banker Stephenson objects to installment buying that has resulted, he says, "in a tremendous volume of automobiles, washing machines, electric refrigerators and endless other products." He says installment buying means inflated credit, but he opposes high wages that would make it possible to substitute cash buying. He pleads that he does not favor reducing living standards, but he does not explain how he maintains contrary positions.

Mr. Stephens says "high wages can be paid only as long as the means is produced to pay them." This commonplace statement, that non-thinkers class as wisdom, ignores the nation-wide industrial machine that is rusting because people can not buy mass-production output.

In Mr. Stephenson's home city—South Bend. Ind.—a magnificent automobile plant is idle. Why? His remedy is to reduce wages, to lower purchasing power, that would affect every citizen in his community.

The same theory applies to every other activity and every other community. He would enforce low purchasing power on those employed, continue a glutted market and expand unemployment.

These bankers, who would revive the bread basket standard of living, learn nothing. They ran the industrial machine into the ditch, brought untold suffering and misery to millions of workless. They are now sending up "kites" to prepare the public for a condition that will make matters worse.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XVI.
TREASURES ON EARTH AND IN HEAVEN (Mt. 6:19-21)

WM. L. MOSS

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." — Mt. 6:19-21.

From the beginning of His earthly ministry Jesus was faced with the task of imparting ineffable life-truths to simple people. That He fully appreciated the situation and felt keenly that if He was to succeed in His mission He must clothe His teaching in such form as would permit His hearers to grasp the meaning of what He taught is manifested clearby by His constant use of figurative language. Hence a large part of His teaching as the multitudes who listened to Him heard it and we who today read it consists of realistic language filled with delightful imagery such as we have in the passage quoted above. By the use of this language crowded with living imagery Jesus' utterances were lifted completely out of the class of mere rhetoric and given a piquant flavor of realism anyone could understand.

In the very beginning let us divest our minds of the common but mistaken half-truth that only "poor folks" listened to Jesus while He was teaching. This half-truth leads to but one inevitable conclusion when we study Jesus' words, and that conclusion is Jesus quite frequently talked just to hear His ears ring! Had Jesus limited His contacts to those whom the world has always regarded as "the poor" many of His sayings would lose their force. That Jesus did not narrow His acquaintance and relationship to any one class of men is a fact that helps give His teaching its tremendous magnetic force. When Jesus got on the subject of "worldly possessions" there was always among His hearers some who, by reason of their possessions, would have found it to their soul's safety had they taken heed to what He was saying. Money is a power that enslaves men when it is valued and pursued for its own sake. When the mind and heart look to it for guidance and its influence is permitted to make the mind and heart serve its own chosen ends it then becomes one of the instrumentalities that defeat the Kingdom of God. It was against such a soul-absorbing, inordinate love of wealth for its own sake, a love that puts wealth first in men's lives and leads them to regard it, and it alone, as the be-all and chief end of their existence, that Jesus raised His voice. "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." It is inevitable that this will be so.

Jesus did not dread poverty as we do; He knew it could be a blessing in disguise. And the poor are far less liable to feel that this world is all there will be to it for us. So taking as His form for all men this tendency of the poor man to go through life with an awakened spiritual nature instead of forgetting spiritual values and spending his time in accumulating the mere apparatus of living, Jesus taught that the real requirements of a full rounded human life are few, and if one will but seek them they are not hard to find.

Painful Condition

"When I was just a girl at home," writes Mrs. B. F. Riggan, of Baird, Texas, "I took Cardui for cramping and pains in my side and back, and it helped me at that time.

"After I was married, I found myself in a weak, run-down condition. I suffered a great deal with my back, which was so weak it hurt me to get up or when I would stand on my feet. I fell off in weight.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

Girl Shot Dead, 3 Others Hurt, In Mill Strike

Crowd of Stroudsburg Workers Forces Arrest of Non-Strikers Accused of Firing Fatal Fusillade.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Stroudsburg, Pa., March 5.—The wanton killing of a girl striker at the Mamouth hosiery mills and the wounding of three of her eight companions in an automobile have stirred Stroudsburg and aroused intense indignation among citizens here. The girl was killed and her companions were wounded by a volley of shots alleged to have been fired by employes of the Mamouth mill who did not strike when the walk-out was declared three weeks ago.

The shooting occurred when the automobile, returning from a dance, stopped near a house occupied by Clark Miller and Robert Arnold, who refused to join the strike. The car was stopped when something went wrong with the lights and two of the occupants got out to adjust them. Miller and Arnold fired a shot in the air and the machine sped down the street. A volley of shots followed and the car stopped.

Shots Are Fatal.

When Miller and Arnold, joined by Raymond Bago, another hosiery worker, reached the machine, they found Alberta Bachman, 20, badly wounded. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Elsie Bachman, 25, was shot in the foot and two men with them, Walter Van Auken and Russell Hastie, were also wounded. Miss Bachman died in a hospital two hours later with three bullets in her body.

Miller, Arnold and Bago were questioned by the police, but were permitted to go to work as usual when the mill gates opened the next morning. A crowd of strikers gathered outside and warned Deputy Sheriff Brewer to arrest them or the strikers would go inside and make the arrests themselves. Brewer then took the three men to jail.

Men Found Armed.

The police reported that Miller, at the time of the shooting, had a high-powered rifle, Arnold a revolver and Bago a shotgun. The two wounded men were peppered with buckshot.

The dead girl was one of thirty-five pickets arrested last week and released the next day after they had agreed to follow Sheriff Clarence Werkheiser's orders limiting picketing to ten persons. The other five girls in the automobile with her were strikers, but Van Auken and Hastie were employes of another mill.

WORKLESS INSURANCE STUDY FAVORED IN N. Y.

Albany, N. Y.—An investigation of unemployment insurance should be made before legislation is attempted, said John M. O'Hanlon, secretary New York Federation of Labor, at a hearing on the Hastings unemployment insurance bill.

The National Association of Manufacturers is in favor of switching this insurance to private companies before the question gets beyond their control. Before any compulsory system is adopted, said representatives of the manufacturers, "there should be a great deal of experimentation by industry of various plans."

Harvard Professor Urges Labor To Seek Voice in Management

(By International Labor News Service.)

Boston, March 5.—M. J. Landis, a member of the faculty of Harvard Law school, Boston, which is operated by Harvard university, is a firm believer in labor being given an opportunity to share in the direction of industrial companies.

Prof. Landis advocates organized labor mapping out an intensive campaign, aimed at forcing industrialists to give labor its proper place on the board of management of every manufacturing firm. He proposes that the American Federation of Labor take the initiative in such a movement. He feels the industrialists owe it to the primary producers to give them representation on the directorates and management boards of each of the companies hiring labor, and that each worker should share in the profits of the firm which employs him.

Mr. Landis congratulates the American Federation of Labor for its work in endeavoring through legislation to have "yellow dog" contracts and injunctions declared illegal, but declares the work should be continued to the goal he stipulates, viz., labor being allotted the right to share with capital the management of any industry.

Prof. Landis delivered a recent address before the Boston Central Labor union, and took the opportunity to urge that the central labor body play a prominent role in leading the fight for participation by the workers in the industrial direction.

Stimson Refuses To Hear Protest Of Anti-Fascists

Italian Delegation Denied Opportunity to Offer Written Charges Against Mussolini's Ambassador to United States.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, March 5.—Declaring that as a result of radio talks made by himself he had received 50,000 protests against the court martial of Gen. Smedley Butler, devil dog who took his fling at Mussolini, Dr. Charles Fama, heading a notable delegation of Americans of Italian extraction, came to Washington from New York this week to offer to Secretary of State Stimson a memorial which the secretary said he could not accept.

The memorial demanded recall of the Mussolini ambassador, Count Giacomo De Martino, and charged that the Italian boss had created a pro-Mussolini propaganda machine in the United States that did not stop short of the use of violence.

Dr. Fama, a practicing physician in New York, later in the day was the guest of the American Friends of Italian Liberty here, where he made his statement about the Butler incident to show the strength of anti-fascist sentiment in Washington.

Change in Sentiment Seen.

It was predicted that the coming year would witness a marked turn in sentiment away from the Italian dictator.

Secretary Stimson flatly refused to see the delegation headed by Dr. Fama and the New York physician said that this confirmed the suspicion most of the American public has had ever since the butler court-martial case, namely, that the present administration is pro-fascist. Dr. Fama declared that it was the duty of the secretary of state to see any group of responsible American citizens and that he would carry his fight against the Italian ambassador to congress.

The members of the delegation said that the chief evidence against Ambassador Martino was a speech he made before an Italian school at Nutley, N. J., on Dec. 14 when he described as "assassins and renegades" Representative Fiorello La Guardia, of New York, and a number of other anti-fascist members of the New York Order of the Sons of Italy.

Machinists Approve Workless Pay Plan

Washington.—The International Association of Machinists calls attention of Pennsylvania lodges to the Hoopes unemployment insurance bill, pending in the house of representatives of that state.

General Vice-President Conlon, in a letter to these members, says the bill "is in line with the policy adopted by the International Association of Machinists at their Atlanta convention held in September, 1928."

The bill provides that the state shall administer unemployment insurance by means of an unemployment indemnity board. The state, under the bill, will appropriate eighty million dollars ($80,000,000) to this fund for the initial term beginning June 1, 1931.

Employers shall contribute an equal amount by a uniform percentage of their payrolls, to be fixed by the state board. Unemployed shall receive, after the first week, 50 per cent of their weekly wages and 10 per cent additional for a wife, 5 per cent for one child and 10 per cent for two or more children under 18 years who are dependent upon him. Indemnity shall not exceed $25 a week, nor be less than $12 a week.

The unemployed are protected from being called upon to do work where a strike exists or to perform work for which he is not fitted or work located at an unreasonable distance from his home or at wages lower than rates prevailing for similar work in the place of employment.

Felt Bad After Eating

"BEFORE I started taking Black-Draught, three years ago, my health was very bad," writes Mrs. C. C. Carson, 945 Concord St., Beaumont, Texas. "I suffered constantly from constipation. I had headache when I got up in the morning, and I felt dull and sluggish. I hardly ate a meal that my food agreed with me. Frequently I would have gas on my stomach, and felt awful.

"I read about Black-Draught, and I thought it might help me. After I had taken it a little while, I felt much better. It relieves constipation. I keep it on hand so when I need a laxative I will have it. In the three years I have been taking it, I have never found anything as good for constipation."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

"United We Stand; Divided We Fall!"

O'BRYAN BROS. TURN BACKS ON LOYAL WORKERS

Twenty Years' Co-operation Is Ignored.

DUCK HEAD PRODUCTS BECOME NON-UNION

Wages Slashed and Hours Lengthened Without Notice to Employes.

Unwelcome news comes out of Nashville this week, detailing the most unfortunate action of O'Bryan Bros., manufacturers of Duck Head overalls and work garments, who, after twenty years of co-operation with organized labor, very suddenly decided to break off relations, slash wages, lengthen hours and join the opponents of labor by operating a non-union concern.

The notice came, according to a letter from union officials, without any warning whatever, the long-standing agreement being repudiated and the new policy of wage-slashing, long-hour, non-union operations placed into immediate effect.

Union officials declared that Duck Head products have been built up to a national reputation by the fact they were made by skilled union labor, and by the constant boosting of the labor movement in all sections. Local union officials recall that at the annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor in Chattanooga last May a large delegation from the O'Bryan employes were given every courtesy by the delegates assembled in order to display their garments and advertise Duck Head products.

This co-operation, however, appears to have been ignored by the O'Bryan people when they believed it possible to market their product without the assistance of the organized workers, and it is declared that all possible appeals to the management were unheeded.

The letter explaining the situation, received by The Labor World this week, follows:

We desire to inform you that Local Union 133, United Garment Workers of America, of Nashville, Tenn., were working under a union agreement with O'Bryan Bros., of this city, makers of Duck Head brand men's and boys' overalls, unionalls, work coats, pants and play suits, from June, 1911, to January, 1931.

During this period of the union agreement this firm enjoyed the patronage of union labor, which helped to make the Duck Head brand of work clothes a product of national reputation. These garments were made by skilled union labor and bore the union label of the above organization.

On Monday, Jan. 26, just before quitting time, without a moment's notice, this firm repudiated the long standing union agreement and put into effect a cut in wages from 25 to 33 1/3 per cent, and increased the hours of labor from eight to nine hours, which is a very drastic step, and is contrary to the present sentiment of the best minds of this country, who are endeavoring to solve the problem of unemployment and create jobs for the unemployed, and to speed on recovery from the present depression.

It is obvious to note that the management of this plant has taken advantage of the present condition by enforcing this drastic cut in wages and increasing the hours of labor.

Owing to the present foregoing conditions the workers found themselves unable to resist the firm's mandate, returned to work the next day, withdrawing the union label, and appealed this case to our international union, also to the labor movement of this city and state, and every effort at conciliation has been exhausted by the committee of the Nashville Trades and Labor council in conjunction with the president of the Tennessee State Federation of Labor and the general organizer of the U. G. W. of A., also his honor, the mayor of our city, and they being unable to reach any satisfactory adjustment, left us with no other course to pursue but declare the Duck Head brand of work clothes and non-union products, which was endorsed by the International Union of United Garment Workers of America and the Nashville Trades and Labor council. It is up to you, brothers, to repudiate the action of this firm by giving us your moral support and prevent them from destroying our splendid organization of over 400 men and women. If there is any Duck Head brand work clothes sold in your vicinity, please appoint a committee to visit the merchant and inform him that as union men you can't purchase these products until such time as this firm will reinstate the union agreement. Remember that no garment is union made without the union label of United Garment Workers of America. When you buy union made garments you are striking a blow to the unfair employers who are endeavoring at this time to reduce wages and lengthen the hours of labor.

ARE THESE HARD TIMES FOR BANKS?—WELL, LOOK AT 'EM!

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, March 12.—Only twelve of the sixty-two banks in New York City paid a smaller profit to their stockholders in 1930 than in 1929, according to bank reports just published here.

The total cash dividends paid by these in 1928 was $87,765,250; in 1929 it was $123,561,000; and in 1930 it was $143,357,000.

Of this amount, more than 50 per cent was paid in cash dividends in 1930 to four of these great banks, the Chase National paying $27,450,000; the National City bank paying $22,000,000; the Guarantee Trust $18,000,000, and the First National $10,000,000.

The four next in order were: Irving Trust, paying $8,000,000; the Bankers Trust, with $7,500,000; the Bank of America, $6,619,000; and the Manufacturers Trust, $5,500,000. These four total approximately another 27 million dollars.

These eight leaders paid out a total of over 105 million dollars in cash dividends, of the total of 145 millions paid out similarly by the entire 62 banks of New York City.

The increase in dividends over 1929 was 16 per cent; over 1928 it was 63 per cent.

Committees All Over Nation Named to Aid in Label Drive

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, March 12.—John J. Manning, secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, reports that he is receiving communications from the union label campaign committees being appointed all over the United States and Canada and that much interest is displayed in the campaign which takes place during April.

It is the hope of the Union Label Trades Department that all organizations will launch individual campaigns at this time as it is a rare opportunity to secure the co-operation of the entire American labor movement.

This campaign should not be left to a few organizations to carry on, Mr. Manning said. He added that all organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor should endeavor to reap the benefits which will be the reward of those participating in the campaign.

WANT IMPROVED PENSION LAWS

Mail Carriers to Seek New Legislation — Lichtenstetter Re-elected Secretary.

Comes M. A. Lichtenstetter, active local trades unionist and official of the Letter Carriers, with a somewhat belated report of the convention of the state association held in Knoxville Feb. 22. Proceeding, apparently, on the theory of "better late than never," "Lich" declared the convention was one of the most successful held by these employes of Uncle Sam in many years.

Chief among the resolutions adopted by the carriers, said Mr. Lichtenstetter, was one favoring retirement of these workers after thirty years' service, regardless of age. Other important items on the calendar for future activities included movements for increased pay and equalizing the compensation of small-town carriers with those in the cities.

A resolution changing the date of the annual convention from Feb. 22 to May 30 was passed after some debate. In a contest for next year's meeting between Memphis and Jackson, the latter contender finally surrendered and Memphis was selected.

Few changes were made in the list of officers, the following being selected to serve during the coming year:

George W. Mullins, of Murfreesboro, re-elected president; A. F. Barnett, of Jackson, re-elected vice-president; M. A. Lichtenstetter, of Chattanooga, re-elected secretary, and J. L. Smith, of Knoxville, re-elected treasurer. S. L. Youree, of Nashville, was re-elected state organizer; H. M. Casidy, of Memphis, was recommended as national state vice-president, replacing Oliver P. Matthews, of Humboldt. D. R. Whaley, of Knoxville, was elected on the executive board to replace W. A. Myers, of Chattanooga. Other members of the board re-elected were: R. G. Warner, of Nashville; J. M. Derryberry, of Columbia; B. C. Stone, of Lebanon, and M. G. Veasey, of Memphis. J. F. Morgan, of Nashville, was re-elected to be the delegate at large to the national convention.

Banker Wins Presidency of Danville Mill

Pritchett Chosen by Directors to Succeed Late Harry Fitzgerald, While Company Lawyer Is Named Assistant.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Danville, Va., March 12.—At a meeting of the board of directors of the Riverside and Dan River Cotton mills, President Pritchett, of the First National bank of Danville, was elected president of the mill company, with Malcolm K. Harris, mill lawyer, as assistant to the president. Pritchett succeeds the late Harrison R. Fitzgerald.

There has been no announcement of any change in the labor policy of the company, and it is assumed that the policy which has been established, of taking on the old workers as fast as the mill could be put in readiness for operation, would be continued, without reference to the union membership of the workers.

Miss Matilda Lindsay, who has been here throughout the life of the union, is attending a conference of the Woman's National Trade Union league at Greensboro, N. C., this week-end. This conference is with special reference to labor unions throughout the south, having a number of southern speakers. Miss Elizabeth Christman, national secretary of the league, will also attend the conference during its closing days.

Labor Men Hear Office-Seekers

Regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night was given over exclusively to candidates for the various city offices, and every aspirant before the primary next Tuesday, with the exception of the communist candidates, was present to state his claims for office.

As usual, each of the visitors was accorded courteous hearing, and the varying degree of applause was the only outward indication of favor toward the various speakers.

The large Central Labor hall was crowded to the doors with local unionists, many being forced to stand around the walls and in all available space. President Ortwein presided, with E. L. Blair drawing the names from a hat and each speaker being allotted five minutes.

Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, delivered a short talk after all candidates present had been given an opportunity to present their cases.

Mrs. Garber Goes To Final Reward

Mrs. Mary Ann Garber, mother of Paul B. Garber, well-known local trades unionist, passed away last Friday morning at her home on Camden street. Mrs. Garber came to Chattanooga in 1883, and had been a teacher in the local schools continuously since 1889, until she became ill a year or more ago. She was married in 1883 to John W. Garber, and the following children survive: Mrs. Agnes L. Porter, of Cripple Creek, Va.; Mrs. Anna Cooper, of Akron, O.; Paul B. and John W. Garber, of this city.

The Labor World joins with hundreds of sorrowing friends in expressing to Brother Paul and other relatives of the deceased lady heartfelt sympathy and condolences in their great bereavement.

SURVEY SHOWS UPWARD TREND FOR BUSINESS

Indications Point to Check in Depression.

WAGE REDUCTIONS RETARD PROGRESS

Next Few Weeks Will Tell Possible Duration of Slump.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, March 12.—After eight months of business decline, some of the trade indicators are beginning to turn upward and it seems likely that the decline has been checked and that the bottom of the depression has been reached, the March monthly survey of business of the American Federation of Labor says. "The next few weeks," the survey says, "will tell whether revival will start now with spring activity or wait for several months. There are no clear signs of an upward start yet."

"The vigorous rise in stock market prices last month," the survey states, "is due to a growing spirit of optimism, but is not based on actual business improvement. It has the effect of spreading optimism still further, and several increases in production can be traced directly to the more cheerful spirit resulting. But the foundation is shaky."

Big Drop in Farm Income.

The report reviews the farm situation, stating that the general depression had been made more severe by a decline of 20 per cent in the farmers' income. Of the efforts of the farm board's stabilization corporation to maintain American prices above the world market, it said that if the board is forced to sell surplus stocks accumulated at present prices there would be a loss of $60,000,000 on cotton holdings and $20,000,000 on wheat holdings.

"As matters stand now," the survey said, "the farm board must either have new appropriations from congress to buy the surplus crop again this year—an endless and impossible process—or it will have to sell its holdings and let prices come down to world levels. The board has intimated that it will not stabilize 1931 crops, and the price already has fallen somewhat, but not to world levels. The board has begun selling wheat."

Sign of Hope Seen.

Hope is seen in the survey in the fact that whereas last year unemployment rose steadily from September through February, this year reports from 803,000 union members show that apparently the rise has been already checked—a month earlier than last year. "This is cheering news indeed," the survey says, adding:

"Though union reports this month give further evidence that the bottom of depression may have been reached, they show unemployment still at peak levels. The improvement is so small as to be negligible for the millions out of work. There is no question that unemployment will last on at nearly its present high level for several months and will be a serious problem for the rest of the year. Competent economists are even looking forward already to a winter almost as bad next year. Our problem now is to extend plans for work and relief which in many cases had been calculated to end in April."

Key Industries Gain.

Key industries are increasing activity, the report says, noting that steel plants which were running at an average of 30 per cent capacity when the year opened were now at 52 per cent; that more orders had been coming from the automobile industry since mid-February and that demand for pipe and railroad track supplies had been coming in with the spring weather. Production also had been higher, it says, in the textile, food, stone, glass and cement industries, and the leather goods industry held its own.

"These industries," it says, "are leading, but many others are still lagging. Electric power production, a good indicator of general activity, has not shown sustained advance for industry as a whole. An encouraging fact is that there were fewer bank failures in January. Department store trade improved in January, showing that those who can afford it are more ready to buy."

Epidemic of Pay Cuts.

The report directs attention to an epidemic of wage cuts, which it severely condemns. It is declared, however, that despite an alarming increase in wage cuts, they have been few in this depression compared with 1921. Of the wage situation, the survey says:

"Midwinter and midsummer, industry's two dull seasons, are the times when most wage cuts occur. Last summer in July and August wage cuts were worse than in any previous 1930 month; 133 firms reduced wages. Cuts then declined to 57 in December. But January has brought a virtual epidemic of wage reductions in spite of all the warnings against lowering workers' incomes. In January 335 firms cut wages, over twice the number in any 1930 months, and nearly twice as many wage earners (43,000) were affected. The cuts were severe, averaging 10 per cent. These figures are from reports of the department of labor.

"At first glance it appears that the warnings of labor and business leaders have been ignored. But in reality even the January wage cuts affected only a very small proportion of industrial firms, far less than in the 1921 liquidation of labor. In January, 1931, only 2.6 per cent of the reporting firms cut wages, while in the worst 1921 months 18 per cent reduced and the number cutting wages ran above 6 per cent for nine months. In all, 92 per cent of the reporting firms cut wages in the worst twelve months of the 1921 depression and only 7 per cent in 1930-31. We know there have been 'hidden' wage cuts in 1931—firms laying men off and rehiring them, at lower wage rates—but even including these, wage reductions in this depression have been few in comparison with 1921.

Pay Cuts Serious Matter.

"To reduce workers' incomes at this time is a serious matter. The spring busy season is just ahead—a particularly favorable time for the start of business recovery. Much depends on workers' ability to buy. If industry finds a demand for products recovery will develop. But by reducing wages manufacturers cut away their markets. In 1921, industry continued at very low levels for more than a year after the first drastic 'liquidation of labor.' This year a prominent industrial executive believes that wage reductions may postpone recovery for two years. We cannot afford to encourage depression forces.

"Workers have already borne the brunt of depression with losses from part time work and unemployment, with hunger, worry, illness, physical and mental degeneration. Wage cuts are not like price reductions, for workers are human beings. Reduce their income and you undermine social standards and eventually degrade human life. Workers' incomes at present are 37 per cent below the 1929 level in factories and 21 per cent below on railroads, due to unemployment and part time work. Wage cuts project the evils of depression into the future."

GREEN DEPLORES PRESIDENTIAL VETO OF UNEMPLOYMENT BILL

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued the following statement regarding the veto of the Wagner unemployment exchange bill by President Hoover:

"The working people of the United States are deeply disappointed over the president's veto of the Wagner unemployment exchange bill. The reasons offered for the exercise of the presidential veto are unconvincing and unacceptable. Because of the deep interest which labor had in this measure the refusal of the president to approve it is regarded as a direct and severe blow to working people in the industrial sections of our country who are unemployed and are forced to seek work.

"Labor concentrated its efforts in support of this measure and after three years of constant effort finally prevailed upon congress to enact the measure into law. Congress voted in favor of the measure by a most decisive majority but the president nullified this commendable action through the exercise of the presidential veto.

"The federal government agencies which have existed have failed utterly. Very little if any help has been extended to millions of workers who, during the past ten years, have been displaced through the introduction of mechanical devices. Men and women who not only suffered from unemployment but suffered, in addition, from a destruction of skill and training acquired through a lifetime of service, have been forced to seek employment without the aid or help of society or the government. The failure of the federal government to assist in this tragic situation has been notorious. Now, when an aroused public opinion supported a practical, constructive unemployment exchange bill and the congress of the United States enacted it into law and, as a result, hope was revived in the hearts of the unemployed and their friends, the president vetoes the bill and, in doing so, advises labor that the federal employment service, which has long been an admitted failure and which has rendered practically no service, is to be continued and is to be the only federal assistance which the unemployed workers can have or expect.

"Working men and women, whether employed or unemployed, have been bitterly disappointed over the exercise of the presidential veto. The unemployed, particularly, will feel that the government has failed them. In the midst of most trying and distressing unemployment situations they have shown great patience and loyalty. Surely, they were entitled to the help and assistance which the plan embodied in the Wagner bill would have afforded them. They now find themselves in a most hopeless and helpless condition."

Daniels Declares He'll Not Reduce Employes' Wages

"When I Cut Salaries, Daniels Family Will Be Eating Hard Tack," Says Former Secretary of Navy, Now Editor.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Raleigh, N. C., March 12.—"When I cut the salaries of my employes, the Daniels family will be eating hard tack." This is the prompt answer of former Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, editor of the News and Observer, when asked if he expected to follow the example of his evening contemporary, the Raleigh Times, and cut the salaries of the men and women who work on his newspaper.

Employes of the local evening newspaper, which is owned by John A. Parks, who has made considerable money in recent years by buying and selling newspapers throughout the south, have been given a 10 per cent cut in their salaries. Employes who hold membership in the Raleigh local of the International Typographical union have accepted a reduction in working hours in lieu of the 10 per cent cut. They are now working seven instead of eight hours a day.

ADWELL HEADS BLDG. TRADES

Local Council Elects New Officers and Prepares for Season of Activity.

L. T. Adwell, president of the local Plasterers' union, was honored Wednesday night by the Building Trades council when that body named him as its chief executive officer. Mr. Adwell has been active in the local movement for several years, and has displayed unusual aptitude for solving the many perplexing problems incident to the promotion of trades unionism in a time of great industrial and economic stress.

The council apparently was determined on the selection of seasoned officers all "down the line," and those named to serve with President Adwell are all men of experience and judgment. Z. B. Bender, "warhorse" of the Carpenters, was elected financial and corresponding secretary; E. E. Crosby, of the Electricians, is the new treasurer, and E. E. McDaniels will retain his old position as business representative of the council.

An executive board will be elected at next regular meeting Wednesday night.

President Adwell asked The Labor World to state that an urgent invitation is given the president of each building trades local to attend the next regular meeting, to assist in planning a program of activity pending the expected opening of spring building activities. The council meets at 7:30, at 11½ East Seventh street, and any local building tradesman, it was said, is welcome to attend any session.

OIL COMBINE UPHELD.

St. Louis, Mo.—Merging of the Standard Oil Company of New York and the Vacuum Oil company was approved by three judges of the federal court of appeals. The concerns have a capitalization of more than half a billion dollars. They were units of the old Standard Oil company that was dissolved by the federal supreme court in 1911.

The judges said that "the intent and purpose of the merger is solely to meet the normal and natural business necessities of the two companies, brought about by the development of, and the changed business conditions in, the industry."

3 LABOR BILLS GO THROUGH AS CONGRESS QUITS

Thousands Benefited by Final Action.

PREVAILING WAGE LAW IS IMPORTANT

Veto of Wagner Bill by Hoover Surprise to Progressives.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, March 12.—Four bills of outstanding importance to labor were passed by both houses of congress before final adjournment by time limitation, three of which became laws, and one which was killed by executive disapproval.

Of these three were signed at adjournment, while one remained for presidential action.

Two of the winning bills affect thousands of wage earners in government service throughout the country. One gives postal workers the 44-hour week, while the other gives the Saturday half holiday to all other government employes, including mechanics employed in naval yards and arsenals throughout the nation.

Prevailing Pay Bill Passes.

A third of the winning quartet establishes the local prevailing wage as the wage to be paid by all contractors on government work. While the bill passed and signed was not labor's bill, but was a purely administration measure, sponsored by an interdepartmental agreement, carrying no penalty and not going into effect for thirty days after passage, its sponsors say it will remedy the evil. If it accomplishes that purpose it will end a wage-cutting scandal that has swept government works from coast to coast. The labor movement regarded the measure as in any event a "step in the right direction," and did not oppose its passage, knowing it was "this bill or nothing," as Secretary of Labor Doak virtually put it.

The bills named in the foregoing were signed by President Hoover.

A fourth important labor measure passed by the congress was the Wagner bill for a national system of unemployment agencies, in co-operation with the states. The bill was vetoed by the president. Another Wagner bill, providing for advance planning of public works, was signed by the president some weeks ago. Still another Wagner bill, for the collection of more complete labor statistics, was signed last year.

Labor Bills Lost.

Losses of labor measures in congress included:

Failure to consider the anti-injunction bill.

Failure of the Vestal copyright bill, sought by a group of international unions, in co-operation with others.

Failure of the Kendall bill. This was a bill to give treasury department officials the language which they said they needed to stop the importation of products of convict and forced labor.

The Muscle Shoals bill, adopted by both houses but vetoed by the president. The senate failed in an attempt to pass the measure over Mr. Hoover's veto.

The amendment to the radio bill to give labor a cleared channel was lost in the jam at the close of the session.

Other bills favored by labor but lost in the last minute jam were the immigration bill and the Jones maternity aid bill. The alien seamen's bill was lost.

"Yellow Dog" Policy Outlawed in Arizona

Phoenix, Ariz.—The governor signed a bill, passed by the Arizona legislature, that outlaws the "yellow dog."

The measure is along lines of the Wisconsin law, which declares an agreement that compels a worker to forego membership in a trade union is against public policy.

Indianapolis.—The governor vetoed an anti-"yellow dog" bill that passed the house 75 to 1 and the senate 41 to 1.

The veto was rejected by the house, 59 to 26. Corporate influences took their last stand in the senate where the vote was upheld, 25 to 19. This lacaked one vote to overturn the veto. The near-victory has inspired organized labor.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What southern state reduced working hours for women last year?

A.—Louisiana, whose legislature reduced maximum working hours from 10 to 9 a day and from 60 to 54 a week with certain exceptions, applying to women in specific industries and outside of the larger cities.

Q.—Are there trade unions in North Africa?

A.—There are a number of unions in Morocco, affiliated with the French labor movement. A central organization has been formed and it reported the movement for organization is growing.

* * *

Q.—What member of the United States supreme court helped in the settlement of a big strike?

A.—Justice Louis D. Brandeis, who drew up the protocol arrangement ending the big strike of workers in the women's garment trades in New York City in 1909. He was not then a supreme court justice.

Q.—Who was William Benbow?

A.—An English radical, agitator and pamphleteer. He is credited with being one of the chief originators of the idea of the general strike, and a pamphlet which he wrote in 1832 was influential in bringing on the great walkout of 1842, called the first general strike.

* * *

Q.—What trade union was the first organization in the United States to fight the ravages of tuberculosis?

A.—The International Typographical union.

Q.—Has Mexico a workmen's compensation law?

What Next!

Words never formed by human lips and spoken by a voice that never existed were heard recently in the London office of an American film company. It was a synthetic voice, invented by the young Englishman, E. A. Humphries, who reproduced word sounds by copying the impressions from the sound track of a talkie film. He chose the words "all of a tremble" and by analyzing the "peaks and valleys" of the sound track was able to dissect them into their various sounds. Afterward drawing them separately on cardboard strips and joining the strips together to form the words, he photographed them on a celluloid film which when run through a talkie projector reproduced the words in a deep bass tone.

MRS. JEROME JONES PASSES.

Hundreds of friends throughout the country will share with Jerome Jones, of Atlanta, the shock and grief resulting from the sudden passing of his helpmeet Wednesday. Associated Press dispatches Thursday noted the death of Mrs. Jones, who was a native of Tennessee and who was educated in the Nashville schools.

Mr. Jones, as editor of the Journal of Labor and for many years southern representative of Samuel Gompers, is widely known as one of the most powerful speakers and effective writers on economic questions in America, and the addition of a charming personality has won a legion of warm personal friends who will hold for him now a full measure of that heartfelt sympathy which is the bond of genuine brotherhood and love.

PREVAILING WAGE SIGNIFICANT

Congress has ordered that federal construction contracts provide that the successful bidder shall pay the prevailing wage rate of that locality. Where the contractor and government's construction officer cannot define such wage, final decision shall be made by the secretary of labor. The bill was approved by the A. F. of L.

Men may differ on the effectiveness of this measure in every case, and fine-spun theories may be evolved, but none can dispute that it breaks a new social path. The value of prevailing wages on government work is unquestioned, except by a certain class of employers.

The effect of this measure cannot be limited to federal construction. Government rejection of the hoary economic theory that wages should be set by "the law of supply and demand" is of far-reaching consequences.

The government accepts the prevailing wage theory, that can be set higher and higher by trade union agitation. The government gives notice that its construction work will not be done by employers who consider labor a commodity that can be "bought" on the auction block. New standards must be applied; a new ideal must be accepted by federal contractors if they would secure government work.

The new law is a challenge to those employers and economists who cling to beliefs that fitted into our pioneer life, but are unsuited for this age of organization and social consciousness.

JUST A LITTLE STRANGE.

Al Capone has been sentenced to six months in jail for contempt of court. If the crime is contempt of court six months is too much. If the crime is composed of all the acts committed by the Capone gangsters in Chicago the court is merely indulging in nonsense, or worse.

Meanwhile in Philadelphia Director of Public Safety Schofield, whose anti-strike activities had brought hot condemnation, switched attention by raiding a couple of big clubs, wherein much liquor was confiscated.

By this spectacular stunt Schofield stopped a lot of critics who think now that he is a great man because he raided a club of which he is a member, forgetting all about what he did to strikers.

The ways of courts are strange. The ways of some officeholders are strange. And likewise the ways of some other people are strange.

HOOVER OUGHT TO VETO THIS, TOO.

Metropolitan Life Insurance company advertises: "Beware of March, the danger month." And the National Casket company counters, likewise in advertising: "March, the month of opportunity."

Phoney Experts

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

It is a common failing of men whose vocation keeps them much in the public eye to permit themselves to be "quoted" by newspapers in their columns on almost any and every subject, regardless of what its nature may be or whether the one interviewed knows anything at all about it. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, a few days ago, so we learn from the morning newspapers under a New Orleans date line, played the role of one of these phoney experts when he permitted himself to be quoted as saying some "profound" things about the present depression. His high-sounding and seemingly economic-wise language did not fool those who look for some kind of meaning in the words any speaker uses! Mr. Butler is quoted as saying present economic conditions came about in the "natural order of things." Now, whether he means by the "natural order" the gyrations of the planetary system or the prolific increase of baby boll weevils was not made clear by the speaker. Mr. Butler closed his interview with the hope for an "early turning point" in present conditions. Even the scantily-clad newsy, grumbling at his lost paper sales, could make this last remark, and make no claims for "smartness."

"CAMPUS SOLDIERING" ON DECLINE.

In the last three years compulsory drill in colleges and universities has been on a marked decline, having been dropped entirely or made an elective course in eight of the country's more important institutions of higher learning. Recently the University of Cincinnati became the latest large institution to abandon "campus soldiering." A dozen national organizations, including the Federal Council of Churches and the National Education association, have, ever since military drill was made a compulsory course in the country's high schools, colleges and universities, protested any such innovation. Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists, etc., have also added their voices in protest to the idea of our educators systematically instilling in the minds of the country's youth a taste for war, which is the inevitable result of daily military drill and military instruction. Now that "campus soldiering" is suffering a decline among our more representative institutions of learning, a public opinion that did not heartily approve of the idea from the beginning will most likely crystallize and demand that military drill and instruction be dropped in American educational institutions, especially in city high schools which, even without military drill or other military instruction, have full enough curricula.

RUSSIA'S CONVICT-SLAVES.

Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, in a letter recently to Secretary of State Stimson, won the nation's applause when he asked that agents of the treasury department be dispatched to Russia to investigate a charge heard in many parts of the world that lumber exported from that country to the United States was produced by forced labor. In his letter, Representative Fish said in part: "It is a national disgrace that any of this murderous harvest, soaked with human blood, can still be permitted, through inaction on the part of our executive departments, to enter the United States and compete with free American labor in violation of and degradation of humanity." Following Mr. Fish's letter further disclosures of conditions prevailing in Russian convict-slave camps have been made, the number at present incarcerated in these camps being estimated by a writer in Moscow, in a letter to the New York Times, at around a million. The American Federation of Labor has declared that over a million American workers will be thrown out of employment and the National Lumber Manufacturers' association estimates American timber will depreciate $2,000,000,000 unless the dumping of soviet convict-slave lumber is stopped by the authorities at Washington. It is understood that steps looking to that end have been taken and they should be determinedly and decisively pushed regardless of whether the present depression continues or abates.

JESUS AND MONEY

"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XVII.

TREASURES ON EARTH AND IN HEAVEN (Mt. 6:19-21)

Jesus regarded life as the supreme opportunity for all men doing a lifework, and He taught that everything which will influence the development of our lives Godward should be diligently sought.

WM. L. MOSS

His ideal for men was that inwardly and outwardly they should be "rich toward God," meaning the prayer-life, high aspirations, love and generosity is men's real daily program. The Master approached social life from within, through awakening the spiritual nature of each individual, and this viewpoint reveals social life not as the end of life itself but the means for bringing about God's kingdom on earth—making the race of mankind God's children in works and thinking, as well as in name only. Jesus taught the real foundation of life is not material but spiritual possession. If we accept His viewpoint we are at once faced by the attention-compelling question: "Does the money we possess fulfill a moral purpose?" We must bring our worldly gains forward, not to be thrown to the four winds or scattered among the poor as a salve to our conscience, but to be put to the test of whether our gains are at all times being used for the greatest good among the most people. If, after our own needs are taken care of, our money cannot be proved to be fulfilling some continuous good, some lasting service for the greatest number, we are withholding it from others. Thus the self-indulgent rich (of whom Ruskin said their wealth should be called their "ill-th" because it is not well but ill with their souls), the hoarder and the pursuer of wealth, are seen as the enemies of God.

Jesus explained that we are to lay up for ourselves "treasure in heaven" rather than "treasure on earth," because:

1. Wealth leads us to gratify an infinite number of questionable desires—desires for gratification of self, and through them we are unfitted for the unselfish life of God's Kingdom. 2. Wealth dulls our sense of a need for others. We become unwilling to meet others on the level where there can be normal intercourse to give and take. Genuine friendship is one of the great factors of the Kingdom. 3. Sincerity is the soul of life and wealth breeds in us an attitude toward the world that is artificial and insincere. The Kingdom of God is grounded on sincerity among men. 4. Wealth is diverting. The accumulation and care of riches takes a man's time and leisure. "Where your treasure is," said Jesus, "there will be your heart"—and Sherwood Eddy has well pointed out that by our "heart" Jesus means here our interest, our attention, our growing concern. 5. There is but one supreme end for all life—whether it is the life of a rich man or a poor man—and that supreme end is the service of the Kingdom. There is but one fundamental decision for the possessor of a life to make—the decision whether through that life they will serve God in and through His Kingdom or whether they will serve mammon, the world of selfish personal gain.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

In recent years there has been a tendency in the press toward sycophantic flattery and adulation of the president of the United States. One or two of the Washington papers are conspicuous offenders in this regard, but it is in evidence in other newspapers, notably in those of reactionary mind.

A particularly flagrant example of the tendency to speak with bated breath of the president was given by the grandmotherly Evening Star of Washington, in reporting the New Year's day reception to the public at the White House. Telling how two men who had come early in the day to be first in line to greet the president had been invited to have breakfast with him, the Star said that the two men were ushered into the "august presence" of the chief executive. The Star further said that the men were invited to a breakfast, not of food for the gods, as one might expect from the account, but of plebian scrambled eggs, bacon, hot rolls and coffee.

Flattery and adulation of the president seem to be part of the effort to exalt the presidency at the expense of the legislative branches of the government. The idea seems to be to break down confidence in congress. At every opportunity the president is praised and it is subtly suggested that he is more apt to be right than is the national legislature. The tendency toward president-worship, which has been in evidence in the last decade or two, is anti-democratic and has no place in a democracy.

Many state legislatures now in session will consider measures to bring about greater safety on the highways. The problem will require the use of all possible resources if it is successfully to be solved and the number of automobile accidents reduced to a minimum.

According to William BroSmith, vice-president of the Travelers Insurance company, effective prevention work has been done through the National Safety council, the teachers in thousands of schools and the police departments of hundreds of cities. During the past decade special effort has been given to teaching children the fundamentals of safety, with the result that, during a time when the death rate for automobile accidents has been steadily increasing among adults, it has been on the down-grade among children of school age.

It seems high time that adults followed the example of children and absorbed the common-sense knowledge that makes for safety on streets and highways.

The dwindling ranks of the liberal press have been further depleted by the passing of the New York World, evening and morning. Daily newspapers are becoming more and more purely business institutions, intent primarily on making money. The newspaper with ideals and principles and which steadfastly fights for the welfare of the masses is becoming a rarity. The situation offers a splendid opportunity for the labor press, which can take full advantage of it if given the enthusiastic support of the labor movement.

Distribution of the tremendous amount of "idle money" held by corporations, far in excess of their reasonable or expectant needs, as an aid to restoring prosperity, is advocated by Betram O. Moody, vice-president of the First National bank, Amherst, Mass., in writing in the American Bankers' Journal. This is referred to as "idle money" because it cannot be invested permanently and is being held in the form of bank deposits, call money or short-term securities.

Considering what the results would be if the corporations with excessive cash resources were to distribute the money to stockholders, Mr. Moody says that probably $1,000,000,000 could be released by this action. He sees first a reduction of money held by corporations in banks and a like increase of money held by individuals. Collateral loans at the banks would be released, he says, and then would come buying of securities, reduction of mortgages on homes and, best of all, a great increase of buying power for the purchase of necessities and luxuries of all kinds.

Mr. Moody's idea seems good, but why, oh why, should the "idle money" be given to the stockholders, whom he calls the "legitimate owners" of the surplus profits? Why shouldn't the money be largely distributed to the employes of the corporations, who are far more the "legitimate owners" of the money than the stockholders? The workers have been the largest factor in the production of the "idle money" and in many cases, they have been receiving unfairly low wages, while the stockholders have been receiving fat dividends. Distribute the "idle money" to the workers in the form of increased wages and the results will be even more beneficial than the results seen by Mr. Moody if the money should be distributed to the stockholders.

PENSION BILL PASSED.

Boise City, Idaho.—The governor signed an old-age pension bill passed by the state legislature. The measure applies to persons over 65 years of age who have no income up to certain amounts.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

Sense From Congress

The distress among our veterans is mainly due to unemployment. In this crisis our government ought to serve the veterans who are suffering from unemployment by means of general legislation which would extend aid to all unemployed.—Representative Charles A. Eaton, of New Jersey.

I maintain that the best national insurance we can provide is to keep America worth fighting for, to help those who cannot help themselves and to care properly for those who have fought our country's battles.—Representative Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma.

American standards cannot be maintained, and free American labor cannot be employed, if the government of the United States fails to provide protection against importation of commodities produced by slaves and convicts.—Senator Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon.

We boast of our advance in civilization. We point with pride to our educational institutions. The story of our industrial and economic progress is marvelous. Side by side with this bright picture of man's progress and hopes for his future is the sad story of men who are out of work, willing to earn a living and unable to do so. Those who hope for permanency in our institutions can and must face the solution of the unemployment problem. Unless it is solved, the suggestion is not out of place that the destruction of society and government will become inevitable.—Representative William A. Pittenger, of Minnesota.

War burdens are never equitably adjusted.—Representative James A. Frear, of Wisconsin.

TO REGULATE AGENCIES.

Indianapolis.—Representative Watson proposes that the state legislature limit fees charged by employment agencies to 15 per cent of the first month's earnings of a worker after he secured employment.

RUSH OF WAR VETERANS TO BORROW ON BONUSES SHOWS MANY IN WANT

President's Assertion That Only Few Need Help Disproved by Many Thousands Who Seek Loans Immediately Following Passage of Loan Bill in Congress.

By JOSEPH A. WISE.

Chicago, March 12.—The tens of thousands of World War veterans who stood in line in "sets of fours" from early morning until late at night the day following the final passage of the so-called bonus loan bill, awaiting their turn to apply for a loan, and who have since besieged the regional offices of the veterans' bureau in great numbers, was a thunderous answer to the assertion of President Hoover in his veto message that only a small number of the veterans were in want and that these were being cared for by the various communities.

President Hoover took pride in pointing to the fact that only a small fraction of the total number of veterans were living on charity. It was alleged at the White House that only 10,900 Chicago veterans had applied for charity this winter, and, along with similarly situated veterans in other parts of the country, that these were being "adequately" cared for.

The "Adequate" Care.

If lining up in a dark alley in a slum neighborhood night after night in order to obtain a bowl of soup and some bread, or a pan of hash or beans, followed by a flop with a good chance of becoming lousy, and then to eb routed out at 5 o'clock in the morning and served paste called oatmeal, some bread and imitation coffee, and then to tramp aimlessly about all day—if that be "adequately" taken care of, then the President of the United States is right.

The "chow" being dished out doesn't come within a mile or two of regular army "chow" and the flops are far from what they ought to be.

If the breaking up of homes, the placing of children in orphan asylums, the mother in a poorhouse or on a cheap job, while the father sleeps in a flop joint operated by the charity trust—if that means being "adequately" cared for, then the president is right again.

Men Long Out of Work.

President Hoover stressed the fact that a majority of the veterans are able bodied and able to take care of themselves. Any one viewing the lines of men outside of the various places designated as application centers for loans could see that readily. The trouble is that these men have been out of work for months and months, their savings gone and their credit exhausted. The 10,900 in Chicago who have applied for charity does not include all of those who are in need. Other thousands have managed to get by without appealing to the charity trust. The loans now applied for will, when received, stave off this necessity for a few weeks longer.

Of course the war veterans who are wage earners are on all fours with all other wage earners. All have endured the same hardships, with the difference that the war veterans are now able to collect some of the wages due them since the close of the war. President Hoover made the strange statement in his veto message that it meant the veterans would be borrowing on an insurance policy. The pieces of paper which the veterans hold are called "adjusted compensation certificates." That is a rather fancy name, but each certificate is an acknowledgment by the government that it did not pay the soldiers enough wages during the war and promising that each soldier will be paid $1 a day additional for each day served on this side of the water and $1.25 a day additional for each day served in Europe. The certificates call for payment in 1945, by which time many thousands of the veterans will be dead.

Interest to Eat Up Pay Due.

The government now says that the veterans can borrow one-half of the wages due and pay 4½ per cent compound interest on the loans. This ineerest rate will just about eat up the balance of the wages due by 1945. This is a slick arrangement and is in line with other bunko schemes that congress has sawed off on the veterans in the past.

It would be interesting to know how much pressure the National Association of Manufacturers and the big financial interests of the country brought to bear upon President Hoover to induce him to send that very peculiar veto message to congress. It is a certainty that the hundreds of millions of dollars now being loaned to the war veterans is a serious interference with the plans of the "open shoppers" to slash wages, and it is reasonable to assume that the resistance to the passage of the bill was very largely inspired by those interests.

FOREIGN LOAN POLICY IS OPPOSED BY SENATE

Washington.—The department of state was censured by the senate when that body declared (Glass resolution) that the department "should desist from the dangerous practice of involving the United States in any responsibility for foreign investment loans floated in this country."

The senate, last June, asked the department of state on what ground such action was taken. The department justified its action by article 2 of the constitution and by the revised statutes.

The Glass resolution makes the sharp declaration that a "careful inspection" of these authorities "discloses no single sentence which, explicitly or implicitly, authorizes the action taken by the department of state with respect to the flotation of foreign investment loans on the money markets in the United States."

INSURANCE ABUSES UNDER STATE PROBE

Albany, N. Y.—Gov. Roosevelt appointed a committee to study medical treatment afforded injured workers who are beneficiaries under the workmen's compensation law. The purpose of the probe is to correct abuses pose of the probe is to correct abuses. Private insurance companies that write workmen's compensation maintain their own clinics and to keep down costs discharge workers before they are fit to resume employment.

Eighteen per cent of New York compensation insurance is covered by the state compensation fund, the remainder by private concerns or self-insurers that are interested in profit rather than the injured workers' welfare.

Tom Hall Recommends Henson Schoolfield

for the City Commission

March 10, 1931.

To My Friends Among the Voters of Chattanooga:

As many of you Chattanoogans are aware, I have often been accused of being a man of a single purpose, to-wit: the advancement of the Union Labor Movement, and while that is partially true, I want it known that I am also interested in clean civic government and the election of clean, high-class men to public office. I always try to vote for the best man in any race, although there are times when I have found it hard to select the most favorable candidate for public office. In the present race for the City Commission, however, I haven't had the least trouble. I've looked over the field, and have picked for myself four candidates for the City Commission, and I have headed my list with HENSON SCHOOLFIELD.

I am for HENSON SCHOOLFIELD above all others in this race for a number of reasons, one of which is because of the fact that I am a resident of St. Elmo, and understand that Henson, although living in North Chattanooga, has recognized the fact that we of St. Elmo are without a candidate in this race, and has adopted us, and if elected will see that we get our just share of public improvement. Another reason that I am for Henson Schoolfield above all other candidates is that I believe he is closer to the laboring man than is any other candidate for a place on the Commission. I am not saying that the other candidates would be without interest in the laboring classes and their welfare, but I believe that Henson Schoolfield, through his long experience in the practice of law, has come to a better understanding of the workingman's viewpoint than have any of the other gentlemen now running. Henson knows the ways of the working man; he knows his needs and recognizes his wants. He is honest, impartial and able, and the working classes of Chattanooga, both men and women, may look to him with perfect confidence to fight their battles for them if he wins a palce on the Commission. I unhesitatingly indorse his candidacy and hereby appeal to my friends of the labor movement — a movement with which I have affiliated for forty years — to go to the polls on March 17 next and cast their ballot for a friend of labor HENSON SCHOOLFIELD.

TOM HALL,
Former President of the Central Labor Body.

Commissioner Bryan submits his record and asks for an endorsement of the same. He cites his three terms in the Tennessee Legislature and his term as Commissioner of Fire and Police as a record of his fairness to Labor. To those who do not know his Labor Record he refers them to the Labor Leaders of this city.

In asking for your vote and influenece in the Primary of March 17th, as a member of your City Commission I hope you will weigh my claim fully and consider my candidacy solely on my record in office.

I served three times in the Tennessee Legislature, once in the Lower House and twice in the State Senate, and was elected by my fellow Senators as Speaker.

In my record, both in the Legislature and as Police and Fire Commissioner of this city I have endeavored to do my duty to the public and tried to be fair on each and every question affecting the welfare of labor.

To those who do not know me, I refer you to Paul J. Aymon, President of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and to any other leaders of organized labor.

EUGENE BRYAN.

New Orleans Policemen Do Best To Break Longshoremen's Strike

(By International Labor News Service)

New Orleans, March 12.—The militarized police of New Orleans, under the direction of Col. Hu B. Myers, late of the United States army, and incidentally brother-in-law of Mayor Walmsley, whose actions were responsible for the collapse of the street car strike (and it might be stated that Mayor Wamsley was elected by the votes of the laboring men and women of New Orleans), has entered heartily into the strike of approximately 6,000 longshoremen and are doing all in their power to assist the vessel agents who are attempting to reduce wages from 85 cents an hour to 60 cents, and in some cases lower.

The latest edict by the warlike superintendent of police is that pickets must be restricted to four men on each corner, and that each picket must wear some sort of identifying badge.

This is in order that the police may keep a close watch on the union men and at the same time allow the non-union men an opportunity to keep a safe distance from the pickets.

Shippers are protesting, as demurrage is being charged owing to the inability to load and unload cargoes.

An effort is being made to secure a walkout of the teamsters and all labor assisting in any capacity at the river front.

The longshoremen's strike is by far the most disastrous as far as business is concerned in the history of the city.

The daily newspapers are printing only small stories, which are being placed in obscure corners.

135,000 FEDERAL WORKERS GET YEAR-'ROUND HALF HOLIDAYS

Twenty Year Struggle Crowned With Success When Congress Sets Pace for Private Employers—Union Spokesmen Get Effective Help From Congressman F. R. Lehlbach.

Organized labor scored one of its most notable victories when congress during the closing days of the session rushed through legislation giving a Saturday half holiday to government workers outside the postal service, says the current issue of Labor. The bill was signed by President Hoover and became effective at once.

About 135,000 employes are affected, exclusive of about 157,000 in the postal service who obtained a half holiday earlier in the session when the Kendall bill was adopted.

The only exceptions to the year-'round Saturday half holiday now are government workers in the Panama canal zone and field agents of the department of the interior.

Only 39 Hours in D. C.

Under the new order, thousands of workers in the District of Columbia, who have had the seven-hour day for years, will have a work week of 39 hours, giving them a status that is probably not duplicated in the world.

It was no mean achievement that during a period of depression labor leaders were able to convince congress of the necessity and wisdom of setting a pace for private employers by reducing working hours, thus providing jobs for additional workers.

The result was due entirely to the effective teamwork among the various groups of union employes, supported by the entire labor movement.

The opposition was real. Postmaster-General Brown openly opposed the postal workers' bill and other executive officials were equally unfriendly, if less vociferous.

The budget bureau estimated that the two bills would cost Uncle Sam $27,000,000 a year. Leaders of the employes scouted that suggestion. They argued that increase in production would more than compensate for the shortening of hours.

Banked With Flowers.

Members of Washington locals of the National Association of Federal Employes showed their appreciation of the fine work done by President Luther C. Steward and Secretary-Treasurer Gertrude M. McNally by banking their offices, in Labor's building, with baskets of flowers.

N. P. Alifas, president of District Lodge No. 44, International Association of Machinists, was also deulged with congratulations. Columbia Machinists' Lodge No. 174 made him an honor guest at its meeting and covered him with flowers and praises for his good work.

Alifas drafted the original bill which extended the half holiday to laborers, skilled and unskilled workers and mechanics in the navy yards and arsenals. In that form it passed the senate and was sent to the house committee on civil service.

Vote Was Unanimous.

There, under the leadership of Chairman Frederick R. Lehlbach, of New Jersey, ably supported by Congressmen Dallinger and McCormack, of Massachusetts, and Gibson, of Vermont, and, of course, with the hearty approval of Mr. Alifas, the terms of the measure were broadened to take in thousands of other civil service employes.

The vote in the house on the final show-down was unanimous, but up to the last minute, many of the labor leaders feared the bill would be caught in the legislative "jam."

Seventy-five congressmen signed a petition circulated by LaGuardia, of New York, urging the speaker to entertain a motion to suspend the rules. Secretary Frank Morrison, of the A. F. of L., headed a delegation which urged Longworth to co-operate. Secretary of Labor William N. Doak gave a helping hand, and Mr. Alifas addressed a powerful appeal to aall the members. It is generally believed that a personal plea by Lehlbach finally swung the speaker into line.

When the bill came before the house, Wood, of Indiana, denounced it, but left the chamber before the vote was taken.

Everyone voted for it, and a few minutes later the senate accepted the house amendments and the legislation was on its way to the president.

Although labor sponsored the movement and has been fighting for it for years, Lehlbach is entitled to a large share of the credit.

His contribution crowns twelve years of very helpful service to government employes while he served as chairman of the civil service comtee, a post which he is resigning to become chairman of the committee on merchant marine and fisheries.

Boss Can't Break Union Agreement

New York.—Supreme Court Justice Levy here ruled that a dress manufacturer in New York cannot evade his obligation to employ union workers by withdrawing from an employers' association that signed an agreement with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union.

The court issued a temporary injunction against Lady Rejane, Inc., a corporation that resigned from the Affiliated Dress Manufacturers' association and then replaced organized workers with non-unionists.

Justice Levy restrained the corporation from violating its contract, from continuing the lockout and from directly or indirectly sending goods to be manufactured into garments to any person or firm that does not conduct a union shop.

The order also prevents the defendant company from manufacturing or producing garments at any establishment which does not employ union workers, whether such shop is operated by defendant or any other person or firm.

"The injunction is a just answer to any employer who seeks to evade contractural obligations," said David Dubinsky, secretary-treasurer of the international union.

FARM RELIEF LOANS WILL AVERAGE $200

Washington.—The $45,000,000 appropriated by congress for loans to farmers will average $200 each, if past experience may be taken as a basis for the estimate, according to G. L. Hoffman, of the department of agriculture.

The loans are intended to permit farmers to buy fertilizer and food for live stock.

The senate appropriated $15,000,000 to loan farmers to buy food for their families, but this was defeated by the house. The senate then voted $25,000,000 for farmers and city workers. This bill is being discussed in the house.

Seeks Promotion to

City Attorney

JOE W. ANDERSON

I have served as assistant under the last three City Attorneys and am now seeking promotion on my record. During this period of more than eleven years the city has quadrupled in area and more than doubled in population. During the past five years the increased work resulting from the annexation of new territory, and the many street widening and extension programs put on by the city, has required practically all of my time. As a result of my service as assistant I have become familiar with the many duties and responsibilities of the important office of City Attorney. I am familiar with the large amount of important pending litigation in which the city is a part.

I am confident that the work I have done, and the experience I have had during these eleven years, has qualified me to fill the office of City Attorney.

During the time I have served as assistant I have tried to render a faithful and efficient service to the city and to deal fairly and courteously with all those having business with the legal department.

I naturally have an ambition to serve the public as City Attorney. I submit my claim for promotion on the record made as assistant during the past eleven years.

On account of the work of the legal department being unusually heavy at this time I will be unable to see as many of the voters as I would like. However, I expect to see as many between now and the primary as I possibly can without neglecting my duties.

I respectfully request those who are not familiar with my qualifications for the office of City Attorney and the character of service I have rendered the city to investigate my record, and I refer them to any present or former members of the Board of Commissioners, to the present or any former City Attorney, to any of the Judges of the Courts of Hamilton County, or to any practicing attorney at the Chattanooga Bar.

I was a charter member and served as the first president of the local lodge, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Express Division. I carried an active card for many years after leaving the Express Company, and now hold an honorable withdrawal card.

F. L. DIXON ...FOR... CITY JUDGE

I am appealing for the support of Organized Labor on my record of many years' friendship and sympathy with the cause.

I am not an "outsider," having been a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and at one time secretary-treasurer of the local at Coalmont, Tenn., in this District 19.

Your active interest in my race will be appreciated.

F. L. DIXON.

Holbert Reviews Record on Labor

Gives Complete History of His Relations With Organized Workers as Manufacturer of Union-Label Overalls.

J. F. Holbert, candidate for the City Commission, reviewed his record as an employer of Union Labor, and in a clean-cut statement to the organized workers at Central Labor Hall last Monday night expressed his friendship and sympathy in the following speech:

I organized the first Union Overall factory ever in Louisville, Ky., and so far as I know there has been no Garment Workers' Union there since I left that city.

In less than one week after I took charge of the Chattanooga Overall Company in 1907 I organized Local 187 of the U. G. W. of A., which remained in existence until I quit business in 1922. During all these years I employed nothing but Union labor and always paid Union wages according to price lists furnished by the U. G. W. of A. These prices were inspected and watched by a shop committee elected by members of the organization.

All Union labels were kept under lock with the only key in possession of a label secretary appointed by the Union, and only given out when the goods were cut and ready for the operator. Their misuse was practically impossible. I never had any labor trouble and never refused to sign and willingly carry out any Union wage scale ever presented to me, but often paid more than the Union scale which I considered too low, especially on suspenders and coats. Ask any of my former employes.

In 1919 I sold my factory on William street to Miller Manufacturing Company and was in no way connected with it thereafter. Three years later Millers had labor trouble in Texas and their plant here was called out in a sympathetic strike on June 12, 1922, but returned in a few days. They were called out a second time on July 19th. My factory was called out on Aug. 14, 1922, and I quit business.

Those girls who remained with me, and several who came back believing it unfair to leave me with thousands of dollars worth of unfinished overalls on hand, continued working at Union prices and Union hours until these goods were completed.

I opened the Union plant in Ridgedale solely for the benefit of my former employes who had lost their positions. W. A. Moreland, a life-long Union man, was placed in charge of the factory, with Miss Eunice Walters, a Union girl, in charge of office and employes. This plant was built and operated by Union labor only; ask W. A. Moreland or any of the employes. My plant was always operated eight hours per day and five days per week, and held a record of 100% in factory and working conditions signed by a State Factory Inspector.

Compare the wages and working conditions in my factory with those of today. I have always fought starvation wages and believe such has been the cause of many good girls falling by the way, who otherwise would have become the queens of happy homes. Many a good boy has gone wrong because of an insufficient income to keep him in respectable society.

I would rather stretch forth a helping hand and save a few boys and girls from the cruel grasp of a green-eyed monster than to have the highest office in the gift of man. Yes, I am criticized for taking care of some of my old employes; I am; six families of them; and why should I not? They were faithful to me and I shall remain faithful to them regardless of any condemnation it may bring upon me.

I have no suggestions to make and no rocks to throw at any one, but if I were running an overall factory today I would run a Union plant.

The following statement is self-explanatory:

February 26, 1931.

I started to work for Mr. Holbert in 1911 at the Holbert Overall Factory on Sidney Street. Stayed there until it was sold out on October 23, 1919. I stayed with Miller Manufacturing Company which was a Union Shop, until August, 1921.

When I left the Miller Company and went to Mr. Holbert at the factory in Ridgedale, which he had opened up for some of his old employes which had been dropped out from the Miller factory, I was made foreman of the shop. I stayed with the J. F. Holbert Overall Factory until I was called out by the strike on August 14, 1922.

From my official position as foreman, naturally I had supervision over all the employes in the shop. I know it was operated on the Union Scale, and under all conditions required by the Union, and had the 100% approval of the State Factory Inspectors.

To my certain knowledge, there was no violation of any Union Rules. All materials were cut and made up by the operators in the shop alone, and we used the regular labels assigned to us in the shop. Anyone familiar with the garment working rules will know that it is impossible for anyone outside of the Shop Committee to secure any of these labels. The Shop Committee was in full control of issuing the labels. They were kept under lock and key and were in their possession at all times, being issued as the demand required.

At the time of my appointment as Foreman, I was a member of the United Garment Workers, Local 187. During my services as Foreman, I know that all Union Rules and working conditions were complied with.

W. A. MORELAND,
Ex. Pres. of U. G. W. No. 187.

MRS. N. A. LAWSON,
Ex. Secretary.

We the undersigned members of the Shop Committee approve of the above statements in all details.

MRS. LARA JOHNSON,
MISS ANNA EDWARDS,
Shop Committee.

To the Readers of The Labor World:

In view of the above-stated facts, if you can conscientiously support my candidacy for the City Commission it will be greatly appreciated.

Sixteen Nations Speed Up Public Work to Aid Idle

Eleven Billion Dollars Appropriated for Great Construction Programs, With United States Spending Two-thirds of Sum.

Washington, March 12.—Fifteen nations, besides the United States, have adopted the policy of speeding up public construction works for the relief of unemployment. A total amount of $11,000,000,000 for all public works is planned. The total amount in all countries to be spent in 1931 for road construction is estimated at approximately three billion dollars; of which amount two billion dollars will be spent in the United States alone. Of the eight billion to be spent on other public works, the United States will also spend two-thirds.

Great Britain has a five-year plan for road construction, and plans to spend a total of $131,000,000 on this, having appropriated the sum of $8,000,000 on Jan. 15 to start the work immediately. The expenditure of $38,000,000 this year on trunk lines, with $6,000,000 additional on "unclassified" roads is contemplated there.

Canada has launched a $20,000,000 road building program of relief highway construction, allocated to the various provinces.

Italy announced an extensive public works program, including road building; and in August of 1930 it was stated that this would involve the employment of from 45,000 to 60,000 men in road building alone. The number employed on all works in January, 1931, was 305,840 men.

France announced in January the appropriation of an addition to its regular highway budget of 100,000,000 francs, specifically for the relief of unemployment.

Denmark, in 1930, passed special legislation for the expenditure of $40,000,000 over a five-year period on public works, largely to relieve unemployment, including some $10,500,000 for road building.

Greece, Serbia, Hungary, Austria, Bulgaria, Czecho-Slovakia, Germany, Poland, Turkey and Austria have all increased their budget appropriations on road construction.

Porto Rico is applying $1,000,000 of direct relief funds on road work, and in the Philippines a $6,000,000 appropriation has been made for an extensive highway program, to relieve the unemployment situation there.

"Lame Duck" Bill Dies in Deadlock

Washington.—Senator Norris' "lame duck" amendment to the constitution is again defeated. The bill passed the senate, but an amendment in the house by Congressman (Speaker) Longworth provided that the second session of congress would be limited. The two bills were referred to conferees of both branches. Senate conferees refused to accept the Longworth proposal. They pointed out that a small group might tie up all legislation in the closing days of the second session.

The fight will be renewed at the next session of congress.

Under the present system, defeated lawmakers who have their eye on federal patronage, dictate national legislation for several weeks. Half a hundred congressmen defeated last November held office until March 4. It was their vote that made it possible for the administration to block direct relief for industrial unemployed and drought victims.

Home illumination by lighting systems affording the same diffusion as daylight and providing the essential ultra-violet rays now derived only from the sun itself or artificially from the so-called sun lamps, are about to be made available. Its marketing is expected to provide great stimulus to manufacturers of electric lighting equipment and may revolutionize the science of illumination.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

The United States women's bureau says that the dilemma of a state which, with advanced laws designed to regulate the hours and conditions of employment of its workers, must watch the egress of certain valued industries to states where less rigid protection prevails, is illustrated in the case of Massachusetts and its cotton industry. The bureau goes on to say an awareness of conditions on the part of state officials is indicated by a report of the industrial commission in December, which urges the legislature to pass no new laws further restricting the cotton mills "until the laws of competing states attain the standards of Massachusetts," recommending further that the legislature "take such action as may be conducive to secure the standardization of labor laws in all states and especially to bring about the adoption by all states of a 48-hour law similar to the law in effect in Massachusetts."

The industrial commission might have added that strengthening of the labor movement in states where it is weak would be the best methods for obtaining standard labor legislation for all states.

Miss Mabel Boardman, secretary of the American National Red Cross, says that the organization will soon be feeding 1,000,000 hungry persons.

This does not take into consideration those being cared for by numerous other sources in cities and towns. Bread lines have not been enumerated and soup kitchens not counted.

Harrowing scenes are reported from various points of the country but there is a general and tacit arrangement with many newspapers to play down or even ignore all stories of the widespread suffering. This policy will not help the situation in the least, but will greatly retard measures to remedy the conditions.

Why can we not develop political and business leaders big enough, brave enough and humane enough to bring out the truth as to causes and offer something that will strike at the roots of this nation-wide malady?

CONGRESSMAN COOPER DIES IN WASHINGTON

Washington.—Congressman Cooper, dean of the house of representatives and stunch friend of organized workers, suddenly died in this city. His long service as a national lawmaker was marked by an unvarying stand for progressive and humanitarian measures.

"The passing of Congressman Cooper is a loss to organized labor and to every other forward looking citizen," said William Green, president A. F. of L.

Edward Nockels, at the request of Mr. Green, represented the A. F. of L. at the funeral in Wisconsin. Mr. Nockels has been attending sessions of the recently-adjourned congress as a representative of the A. F. of L., to secure a cleared channel for labor's broadcasting station WCFL.

TRADE UNIONISTS PASS ON.

San Francisco.—John Bell, former president International Union of Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers, suddenly died at his home near Corley, a short distance from this city. He served as president from 1925 to 1929. He was succeeded by William T. McSorley, the present incumbent.

Albany, N. Y.—Charles J. Grace, well-known member of the Plumbers' union, died at his home in this city. He served many years as general vice-president United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters.

Pottsville, Pa.—John Strambo, for twenty-one years vice-president District No. 9, United Mine Workers, died in a local hospital. He lived in Mahony City and was one of the best known trade unionists in the anthracite industry.

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union made goods and service.

To the Readers of The Labor World:

Several weeks ago I announced my candidacy for the City Commission, and the response has been very gratifying. It has given me unusual pleasure to note the splendid reception given my candidacy by the members of Organized Labor in Chattanooga. I believed then that my attitude toward the ambitions of those who toil merited favorable consideration, and the prompt, generous and widespread assurance of support which has continually come to me from your ranks has more than justified that belief.

It has been impossible, of course, to personally see every voter, but those who know me best have aided materially in carrying my message to all the people.

I was born in Chattanooga forty-four years ago, and my sole ambition is to honestly, courageously and efficiently serve the entire people of the city of my nativity.

I want to again express my deep appreciation to the many friends who have stood so loyally by me in this campaign, and urge that you keep up the good work until the last voter has cast his ballot on next Tuesday.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

As the column goes into print, Earl Van Arsdale is still aspiring to become an engineer; Ralph Miller is looking for ways and means of putting over the convention; Bill Krug is telling the world that he's glad to be well again; Sandy is planning on slipping out and beginning his season's golf; and almost all of the members are regretting that new quarterly cards will be due next month.

* * *

Melody Lane welcomes as new members of the ol' order Ira Summers, Jr., and Allen Brown. Ira plays a mean piano and has been the means of a number of Chattanooga girls developing a new love for music by hearing him on his broadcasts over WDOD. Allen joins Johnny Mahoney's band as second trumpet, teaming with Marion Liner, Chattanooga's original cave man. Allen plays a sweet trumpet, reads well and should make good. His only drawback is that he was formerly a pupil of Uncle John, the ol' caddy master.

Speaking of new faces, we are glad to welcome Frits Balzar to our local for an indefinite stay. Frits is an accomplished violinist and director and we are most pleased to have him.

Song writers have been leaving the United States for most of their numbers lately. South America surely is responsible for "Lady, Play Your Mandolin" and the "Peanut Vendor." England would start a war if the king heard the "King's 'Ossea."

Raymon Pryor, the little boy with the big voice, introduced quite a novelty over radio last week when he sang the first part of a song and then stopped. Raymon says he was only showing a little consideration as the audience seemed to have had enough.

* * *

Jimmy Johnson continues to jump from one local band to another. We expect him next week to be lining up with Jimmy Edwards.

Robert McMahon has moved his domicile to Cleveland, Tenn., for the present. He manages, however, to get down here for his weekly engagement.

constipation

"I had a stubborn case of constipation after a very severe spell of grip," says Mr. John B. Hutchison, of Neosho, Mo. "When I would get constipated, I'd feel so sleepy, tired and worn-out.

"When one feels this way, work is much harder to do, especially farm work. I would have dizzy headaches when I could hardly see to work, but after I read of Black-Draught, I began taking it. I did not have the headaches any more.

"When I have the sluggish, tired feeling, I take a few doses of Black-Draught, and it seems to carry off the poison and I feel just fine. I use Black-Draught at regular intervals. It is easy to take and I know it helps me."

This medicine is composed of pure botanical roots and herbs. Contains no chemicals. In 25-cent packages.

Coal Miners' Families Ask for State Relief

Fairmont, W. Va.—Representatives of miners in northern West Virginia, at a meeting in this city, instructed Van A. Bittner, representative United Mine Workers, to remind the governor and other state officials of the need for state relief for coal miners' families.

Mr. Bittner informed these officials that widespread distress is due not only to the depressed conditions of the coal industry, "but to un-American wages paid those who are employed."

"The Salvation Army, the Red Cross and other welfare organizations, as well as county courts," he said, "have been doing everything possible to relieve distress, but they are hopelessly unable to take care of the situation."

The trade unionist sgugested that the legislature appropriate $150,000.

"As a matter of principle," said Mr. Bittner, "we do not believe in a system of doles by the state government, however, when starvation faces men, women and children, we cannot stand on principle. It is our duty to relieve suffering.

"You must agree with us that these conditions are a disgrace to our country, the richest in the world."

Gov. Conley replied that he "shall be most happy to approve any reasonable legislation along the lines indicated."

Bills have been introduced in both branches of the state legislature authorizing relief.

Unsanitary Homes Feature N. Y. Life

New York.—Authority to improve the "uncivilized" housing situation in this city was urged at a symposium on "Health and Housing" at the Academy of Medicine.

"In this city about 88 per cent of the citizens are tenants, leaving only 12 per cent, in addition to the owners of the tenanted houses, who pay local taxes direct," said George McAneny, president Regional Plan association.

"It is not easy," said Mr. McAneny, "to arouse interest in public expenditures or housing improvement among those who either do not know that they actually pay taxes or who are unaware of the amounts they pay.

"A man paying a rent of $85 a month may grumble over a federal income tax of $15 or $20, while quite indifferent to the municipal budget toward which he is contributing indirectly in local taxes about $204 a year."

Dr. Edward T. Devine said that more than 2,000,000 persons in this city live in unhealthy, disease breeding homes. Thousands of tenements, he added, are "not fit for animals, yet thousands of families live in them."

TRADE UNION OFFICIAL GETS 3 MONTHS' LEAVE

New York.—"Ben" Schlesinger, president International Ladies' Garment Workers' union, has been given a three months' leave of absence to recover his health, which was shattered by last year's local general strike in the dress industry.

The garment workers, led by Schlesinger, fought off communists and hostile employers, but the bitter contest undermined the union executive's health.

WORKLESS PAY STUDY APPROVED BY SENATE

Washington.—The senate approved Mr. Wagner's resolution for a special committee to make an investigation of unemployment insurance.

The committee is instructed to report to the senate next December on American and foreign experience with both public and private unemployment insurance systems and the results achieved by each.

OLD AGE PENSION WINS IN COLORADO

Denver.—The state legislature passed an old-age pension law that was urged by organized labor. The measure passed the house with but one dissenting vote. Indigents over 65 years of age, who have lived in the state fifteen years, will be paid not less than $1 a day. The law is mandatory upon county commissioners.

FARMERS' AND WORKERS' BUYING POWER DROPS

New York.—Agriculture income for 1930 dropped 20.8 per cent from 1929, according to Standard Statistics company of this city.

Based on prices recently prevailing and assuming aggregate yields similar to those of 1930, income in the current year would be reduced to about $9,300,000,000.

Estimates on decreased buying power of industrial workers range from seven to eight billion dollars.

FORMER I. T. U. OFFICER DEAD IN MINNEAPOLIS

(By International Labor News Service.)

Minneapolis, Minn., March 12.—J. W. Hays, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical union from 1906 to 1928 and former president of the Union Label Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, is dead here. The burial was on Feb. 28. He would have been 71 years old on March 18.

Born at Van Kleek Hill, Canada, in 1860, Mr. Hays went to work in woods and mills when he was 12. He became a printer in 1878 and joined the International Typographical union in 1882. Before being elected secretary-treasurer, he was an organizer and vice-president of the I. T. U., resigning as vice-president to accept the secretary-treasurership.

WESTERN BUSINESS MEN OPPOSE LOWERING WAGE

San Francisco.—The California State Chamber of Commerce declared against wage reductions. Similar action at the recent convention of Associated General Contractors in this city is approved.

The chamber of commerce "deplores as economically unsound any lowering of wages or exploitation of labor in this period of unemployment," and "pledges its support to all efforts to maintain a living wage for construction labor."

AMERICAN EXPORTERS HARMED BY SOVIET OIL

New York.—The collapse of the American oil industry with consequent unemployment, has been aided by the low price of Russian and Rumanian oil which has caused American exports of oil to drop 20 per cent.

Gasoline on the Black sea, it is stated, is selling for 3½ cents a gallon. Export prices for American oil at Gulf coast terminals ranges around 5½ cents.

FARMERS ARE ADVISED TO PLANT LESS WHEAT

Washington.—Wheat growers were warned by Samuel R. McKelvie, of the federal farm board, that they must cut production 25 per cent or government stabilization operations cannot continue.

The federal farm board is convinced that American farmers cannot afford to grow wheat for export, McKelvie added. Russian exports, he held, may be greatly expanded next year and have "a seriously depressing effect on prices."

INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS ABOLISHMENT CONVICT-CONTRACT SYSTEM

Report Reveals Most Shocking Conditions.

FEMALE PRISONERS ENDURE TORTURE

Inhuman Punishment of Unfortunates Exists in Tennessee Penal Institutions. Prison Labor Contractors Listed by Hanly.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, March 19.—The general assembly reconvened on Monday after a recess of forty-five days. Another recess will be taken on Saturday to May 25. This recess was taken to give the committee investigating the state's affairs time to complete its work. The resolution calling for this recess was adopted after a hard fight.

Immediately after the resolution calling for the recess was adopted a resolution was introduced providing for the dismissal of the two lawyers retained by the investigating committee. This resolution provoked another bitter and acrimonious debate. It was defeated by an overwhelming vote.

The recess committee that investigated the penal institutions of the state, through its chairman, Representative W. Y. Boswell, of Morgan county, made its report. This report revealed shocking conditions in the main prison at Nashville and in the branch prison at Brushy Mountain.

There is a hosiery factory in the woman's building in the penitentiary at Nashville. The committee found that female prisoners who failed to perform tasks were handcuffed and chained to a wall. Their feet barely touched the floor. They were kept in this position for as long as nine hours.

The report also revealed that male prisoners were brutally beaten with a big leather strap for failure to perform tasks set by the representatives of the prison labor contractors.

The Gray and Dudley company, of Nashville, manufacture the George Washington stoves and ranges in the prison at Nashville. The Liberty stoves and ranges are also produced in this prison. Salant & Salant, of New York, make the Uncle Sam work shirt in a prison factory in the penitentiary at Nashville. This firm also has a contract in the reformatory for boys here to manufacture Uncle Sam work shirts. This firm also sells to merchants throughout the country work shirts with the firms' names on labels which are sewed on the shirts.

The committee recommended that the contract system be abolished and the state-use system be installed. Six hundred copies of this report were ordered printed.

No labor measure has been considered and none will be considered until after the recess.

President Green Unable to Accept Invitation to Address Joint Session Of the Tennessee General Assembly

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, will not address a joint session of the state general assembly, according to advices to The Labor World from Nashville Friday morning. It was said Mr. Green wired a personal friend in the capital city that it would be impossible for him to accept the invitation extended through a resolution adopted by the house Monday, the senate concurring on Tuesday of this week.

Nashville trade unionists are said to be disappointed that the labor chief is unable to accept the invitation.

The resolution inviting President Green to address a joint session was introduced in the house by Representative John P. Murphy, president of Nashville Trades and Labor council and of Typographical Union No. 20. He is well known both in Chattanooga and in the capital city, having been an active worker in the printers' union for forty-one years.

Senator Carl Larsen, of Shelby, also a veteran trades unionist, introduced the resolution in the senate, explaining that President Green had served three terms in the Ohio state senate, and one as speaker of that body.

The resolution, passed by both branches, was as follows:

Be it resolved by the house of the Sixty-seventh general assembly of the state of Tennessee, the senate concurring, That an invitation be extended by the speakers of the house and senate to Hon. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, to address the legislature in joint assembly during his visit to Nashville.

PROGRESSIVES MEET TO PLAN PROGRAM FOR NEXT CONGRESS

Utilities, Farm Relief, Tariff, Unemployment and Restoration of Popular Government Considered—Norris Denounces Labor Injunction and Poverty in Midst of Plenty.

Washington, March 19.—The address of Senator George W. Norris was the opening feature of the progressive conference called by progressive senators here. In it he made clear the position of those who called the meeting, stating that it was not in the interest of the political advancement or candidacy of any individual, and was not for the purpose of forming a new party. He referred to the hunger of millions in the presence of plenty, and the loss of the producers of food while the consumers are called upon to pay high prices. He referred to the hardships laid upon labor by court proceedings, and discussed at length the development and activities of the electric power trust in its effort to control elections and legislation in its own favor. He pleaded for a free government and looked to the conference to "take a great step forward in the solution of these troublesome problems."

In referring to the problems of labor, Senator Norris said:

No Prosperity for Toilers

"With food products rotting for the want of a market, starvation stands like an evil specter at the fireside of millions of humble homes. With unemployment driving thousands of honest laborers into beggary, the more favored classes of our citizens are living in riotous luxury with more money than they can possibly spend. Our boasted prosperity does not extend to those who toil either in the counting house, the factory or the farm.

"American agriculture, already suffering from a tariff which was too high on most of the products the farmer had to buy, was given a tariff by those who had promised to bring relief which was still higher and still more burdensome.

Labor Denied Relief

"American labor, suffering from the grinding evils of injunctive process, was promised relief in the last national campaign. But those who were victorious to a great extent on account of such promises, forgot, after election, the pledges which they had made and not only ignored them but frustrated every attempt which was made by the progressives in the United States senate to redeem the pledge and give relief to labor.

"We very properly boast of our freedom and point with pride to that recent period in our history when we struck the shackles of slavery from human limbs. But organized wealth has invented a new form of slavery by which the hands of labor are manacled in a new kind of involuntary servitude by means of judicial decree."

More than 100 independent republicans and democrats, labor leaders, economists, sociologists and publicists gathered at the conference to consider an economic and social program of legislation to be pressed in the next congress by the small group of insurgents who will hold the balance of power in both houses.

Utilities, farm relief, tariff, unemployment and restoration of popular government were on the program.

Philadelphia Churchman Exposes Hypocrisy of "Open Shop" Mills

Philadelphia, March 19.—The executive secretary of the Philadelphia Federation of Churches is one man who is not fooled by the expensive advertisements of anti-union full-fashioned hosiery employers in the Philadelphia daily papers. Dr. E. A. Palmquist, who has taken the time to learn the facts about this strike, and who has interested himself in a very practical manner in attempting to bring about a settlement, has written the following letter to the press of this city:

Sir:

An advertisement condemning strike picketing, which appeared in the city papers, was paid for by the open shop textile operators. They declared their concern for the poor unemployed. It may be interesting to investigate the extent of their interest. We may find they are more concerned with the desire to poison the mind of the public against organized labor than anything else.

In 1928, the unions agreed to accept a cut of 7½ per cent to 8 per cent in the average wage scale in the textile industry. What happened? Open shop textile manufacturers reduced prices and increased the working hours, thus forcing unionized mills to seek another reduction in the wage scale to meet the competition of the open shop mills.

In 1929, a wage cut of 15 per cent, for skilled labor, was accepted. This affected about 25 per cent of workers in mills. Again they were undercut by the open shops. In 1930 the unions accepted a third wage reduction, affecting all operators, from 12 per cent for unskilled to 40 per cent for skilled mechanics. The open shop textile operators so concerned for the "poor laborer" again cut prices.

The fact of the case seems to be that these open shop operators are trading upon two stubborn social facts. The first is, the more a man needs to work, the less of a wage he will accept. Therefore, this is the time to gouge the workingman. The second social fact upon which these philanthropists are trading is that in a time of depression the public is not in sympathy with a strike.

It should be recognized that there are open shops in which the laborers are given fair wages and due consideration, but it should also be said that organized labor has been and is the best agency to protect American labor from serfdom. Even now in many open shops men are working far beyond the legitimate number of hours.

(Signed) Rev. E. A. E. Palmquist.

PENSION BILL SIGNED BY COLORADO GOVERNOR

Denver.—Gov. Adams signed the old-age pension bill, which becomes effective Sept. 1 and is mandatory upon county commissioners to enforce.

The bill provides that indigent poor over 65 years of age, who have lived in the state fifteen years, shall be paid not to exceed $1 a day.

Central Body to Nominate Officers

Regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council next Monday night promises to be an interesting and busy session, chief item of interest being nomination of officers for the coming year. According to the constitution, names of aspirants are placed before the delegates at the second March meeting, to be finally voted upon at the initial April session. A full list of officials, and three delegates to the convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, will be selected at that time.

Interest in the latter race is expected to be somewhat keener than usual this year, due to the fact that the annual meet of the state body is expected to make history with the large variety of major problems to be acted upon. Another reason for a probably large field of candidates is that the meeting will be held at Jackson, and the labor movement in the county little West Tennessee city has a statewide reputation for entertaining its visitors in elaborate style.

An accumulation of routine matters for disposition Monday night is also expected, first March meeting having been turned over to the various candidates for city offices, no business being transacted.

"Pat" Swick Gets Into High Society

CLARENCE E. SWICK

It has ever been the contention of The Labor World that our old friend and fellow townsman, Clarence E. "Pat" Swick, now general secretary-treasurer of the International Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, was a guy with lots of brains.

Verification of this estimate comes in the current issue of the Typographical Journal, which records, through its Lafayette correspondent, the fact that "Pat" is now fraternizing with printers, and has even reached the point, according to said correspondent, where he is handing out "sage advice" to the typos.

That the Journal correspondent thinks well of our own "Pat" is indicated in the following, reprinted from his letter to that publication:

The old adage relative to the chain that is only so strong as its weakest link is more forcibly portrayed in the labor movement than any other medium. Lafayette Typographical union has been held intact on more occasions than one through the prestige and good-will of the International Painters and Decorators' union, which organization maintains international headquarters here. The affable "Southern Gentlmun," Secretary - Treasurer Clarence Swick, who so ably presides over the financial destiny of the painters' international, is ever responsive in his typical democratic way to local printers' requests for his sage advice.

IMPORTANCE OF STATE MEETING URGED IN CALL

Aymon, Birthright Ask Full Representation.

FEDERATION MEETS AT JACKSON MAY 4

'Many Perplexing Problems' Need Attention of Rank and File of Labor.

"Many perplexing problems which confront the workers, and which need the attention of the rank and file," is urged as a reason for full representation of central bodies and local unions at the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, called to meet at Jackson, Tenn., for three days beginning Monday, May 4.

The convention call, issued from Nashville headquarters of the federation this week, sets forth numerous matters to be acted upon, including unemployment, shorter work week, labor legislation, wage reductions and general political conditions in the state.

"A very serious state of affairs exists in the government of Tennessee," the call declares, "due to many bank failures and control of certain elements that are directly responsible for this condition," and it is added that "we should render every aid toward the recovery of our state from its present chaotic condition."

The call is signed by Paul J. Aymon, president, and W. C. Birthright, secretary-treasurer, and is as follows:

You are hereby notified that the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor will convene at Jackson, Tennessee, Monday, May 4, 1931, at 10:30 a.m., Moose Hall. The sessions will last about three days. The Southern hotel will be the official hotel headquarters, complete list of rates for the convention is a supplement part of this call. It is the hope of the convention committee that all delegates will use the regular hotel headquarters.

It is very essential that each central body and local union in the state be represented in this convention, due to the many perplexing problems which confront the workers and which need the careful consideration of the delegates to this convention. Unemployment, shorter work day and week, legislation and the endeavors of certain employers of labor to reduce standards, and a general review of the political conditions of this state. A very serious state of affairs exists in the government of Tennessee due to the many bank failures and the control of certain elements that are directly responsible for this condition of affairs. While your officers have pointed out from time to time both in convention and otherwise the control of our state government the fall had to come to convince many people; however we should as usual render every aid to the recovery of our state from its present chaotic condition to the end that the people will receive the protection in government and banking they are entitled to. These and many other problems will have your attention.

Trusting that your organization will be represented, and hoping to meet your delegate, we remain,

Sincerely and fraternally,
PAUL J. AYMON, President.
W. C. BIRTHRIGHT,
Secretary-Treasurer.

WORKERS TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR EFFECTIVENESS OF NEW "PREVAILING-WAGE LAW"

Prevailing Rate of Wage Law.

The following law provides that the prevailing rate of wages shall be paid in the construction, alteration and repair of any public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia:

AN ACT relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That every contract in excess of $5,000 in amount, to which the United States or the District of Columbia is a party, which requires or involves the employment of laborers or mechanics in the construction, alteration, and/or repair of any public buildings of the United States or the District of Columbia within the geographical limits of the States of the Union or the District of Columbia, shall contain a provision to the effect that the rate of wage for all laborers and mechanics employed by the contractor or any subcontractor on the public buildings covered by the contract shall be not less than the prevailing rate of wages for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil division of the State in which the public buildings are located, or in the District of Columbia if the public buildings are located there, and a further provision that in case any dispute arises as to what are the prevailing rates of wages for work of a similar nature applicable to the contract which can not be adjusted by the contracting officer, the matter shall be referred to the Secretary of Labor for determination and his decision thereon shall be conclusive on all parties to the contract: Provided, That in case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend the provisions of this Act.

"Sec. 2. This Act shall take effect thirty days after its passage but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract thereafter entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this Act.

"Approved March 3, 1931."

This act becomes effective April 2, 1931.

INTERNATIONAL BANKERS FIGHT FOR WAGE REDUCTION

Strive to Force Management Into Line for Low Pay. Financial Kings Seem Bent on "Deflating Labor" and Are Furious at Opposition of Industry's Spokesmen.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

New York City, March 19.—That a conflict of almost titanic proportions is raging over the issue of wage reductions, with international bankers on the one side and management on the other, is the boiled down essence of what I have learned here.

It is an almost astounding fact, unprecedented in the history of American depressions, that the greater portion of those identified with management and the majority of those concerned with speaking for management—notably editors—have taken an uncompromising stand for high wages.

The disquieting thing is that international bankers, with the great Chase National an outstanding figure in the little group of financial monarchs, seem lined up for wage reductions, which they prefer to call deflation of labor.

Hope for Big Profit Later.

Behind the scenes the story that is going around, true or not true, is that these bankers, standing adamant against anything like long term credits for the revival of industry, at properly low interest rates, are hugging their millions in the hope of later getting a return of no less than 15 per cent on the heaps of money now held in reserve.

It is of some significance that publications catering to the management end of industry, long led by Printers' Ink, now joined by the twenty-six powerful magazines in the McGraw Hill group, are standing for high wages and the maintenance of purchasing power.

Bankers Resent Opposition.

That the bankers who demand wage reductions are furious over the support given management in its more progressive and more modern stand by such publications as these is not precisely a secret, but it is by no means so well known that they have sought to give effect to their demands for support of the wage-cutting idea.

One editor said to me: "I am a capitalist. I want this system to work. I resent the damage being done by those who are so blind that they cannot see the value of adequate wages in making it work. There never was such a questioning of things. The blindness of those who, having hordes of money, would dictate to the active forces in industry, is our greatest danger. We must have purchasing power. To starve purchasing power is to starve the system and to invite disaster. We shall never stand for the imposing of an alien system. We have got to make this system work."

Labor Has Many Allies.

It is clear that labor, in its demands for measures of practical character that will make things work, never had so many allies in any previous crisis. Whether the banks, that can be numbered on less than the fingers of one hand, will be able to impose their will on industry, is the key question of the day in front offices as well as work shops.

Joseph Bush Weds Miss Nancy Bonner

"Love laughs at locksmiths," and also Joseph Bush, of the Typos, "don't give a happy" about business depressions, and such, for on last Saturday, March 14, wedding bells pealed out for Mr. Bush and Miss Nancy Lee Bonner, of Decherd, and they were united in marriage at the home of Rev. R. W. Selman, in North Chattanooga. Only a few close friends of the young couple were present to witness the ceremony, the engagement having been kept secret.

Mr. Bush is an employe of the Chattanooga News composing room, while Mrs. Bush is the daughter of George H. Bonner, of Decherd. They will reside for the present on Baker avenue, North Chattanooga.

Many friends will wish for them a long and happy life of married bliss.

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

Green Declares Labor Must Check "Jobs."

HOLDS BILL AS MOST IMPORTANT ENACTED

Government Will Spend Bilion in Next Ten Years on Public Buildings — Contractors Must Pay Living Wage to Employes.

Responsibility for effectiveness of the new prevailing-wage law, applying to government contracts, is placed by President William Green squarely upon the shoulders of any craftsman who may be employed on Uncle Sam's construction work, the federation president, in a letter received Wednesday by The Labor World, urging upon the workers to carefully investigate whether the prevailing wage rate is being paid on such work.

Mr. Green holds the wage bill to be one of the most important bits of legislation passed by the session just closed, and calls attention to the fact that the government will expend nearly a billion dollars in the next ten years in the erection of public buildings throughout the United States.

Labor's chief complaint in the past, says the federation executive, has been that government contractors paid the lowest wages possible, often importing laborers from other states and housing them in barracks until the contract is completed. In the event an agreement on the prevailing rate cannot be reached, it is pointed out, the department of labor decides and its finding is conclusive.

Any contractor or sub-contractor deliberately violating the provisions of the act may be forever barred from bidding on government work.

President Green's letter follows:

Washington, D. C.,
March 16, 1931.

Editor, The Labor World:

One of the most important bills passed by congress in the session just closed provides for the payment of the prevailing rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors. The bill was approved by the president.

In the event that an agreement cannot be reached on the wages to be paid, the department of labor decides, and the decision is final. In order that the law will be honestly enforced I urge the workers in every trade that will be employed on public buildings to carefully investigate whether the prevailing rates of wages are being paid.

The government will expend nearly a billion dollars in the next ten years in the erection of buildings throughout the United States. Heretofore labor's chief complaint has been that certain contractors secured government contracts and paid the lowest wages possible. Many of these contractors transport employes from other states and in many cases lodge and feed them in barracks until the job is completed. This law will eradicate that inhuman abuse and permit fair contractors to bid on government work. The law will be included in all specifications.

If a contractor violates the law the government can withhold monthly payments until the contractor obeys the legislation. Furthermore, a contractor violating the law once will have a black mark against him, and in the future he will not be regarded as a responsible bidder. It is therefore necessary for the wage earners employed on government buildings to see that the prevailing rate of wages is paid.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am,

Fraternally yours,
WM. GREEN, Pres.,
American Federation of Labor.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—When were fraternal delegates first sent by the American Federation of Labor to the British Trades Union congress and who were the delegates?

A.—In 1895. The delegates were Samuel Gompers and P. J. McGuire.

Q.—Of what workers was it said at the last American Federation of Labor convention that they were the only workers "who are supposed to be asleep and awake at the same time?"

A.—This was said of Pullman porters by A. Philip Randolph, of the Brotherhood of Pullman Porters. He told the convention: "Porters are supposed to have three hours of sleep when they are on the train, but they are also supposed to answer the bell whenever that bell rings. Consequently, Pullman porters are the only workers in America who are supposed to be asleep and awake at the same time."

What Next!

Announcement of a new process of refining beet sugar was made recently by Pierre Philippo, president of the International Sugar corporation. Philippo said it is an electrolytic and carbon method, is cheaper than the old lime and sulphur method and will permit the use of beet sugar in fruit packing in tins. The beet juice is put through the electrolytic and carbon treatment prior to boiling or evaporation. By elimination of lime and sulphur treatment the refined sugar is freed from mineral compounds, which heretofore have prevented its use in fruit canning in tin cans due to danger of corrosion of the tin containers.

Sense From Congress

One of the advantages specified by Prof. Ripley is that railroad consolidations would "eliminate great waste of energy, human and mechanical." In the same sentence he is quoted as saying that the consolidations referred to by him would benefit the workers on the railroads. From all the testimony which has been given it is impossible to reconcile these two statements. It is practically undisputed that if economies are to be effected, the largest percentage of these economies will be at the expense of labor.—Senator James Couzens, of Michizan.

OHIO OFFICIAL URGES EIGHT-HOUR WORK DAY

Columbus, O.—A public appeal to employes of Ohio to limit working periods to eight hours "whenever feasible" has been made by the state director of industrial relations, Thomas A. Edmondson.

The purpose, he said, is to distribute jobs among as many workers as possible and thus lessen unemployment. Shifts of ten hours or longer are being worked in some industries, according to the director.

"The eight-hour day is generally accepted as beneficial to labor and to employers, and most industries can adjust themselves to it," Mr. Edson said.

Bilious, Dizzy, Drowsy Feeling

"When I was a child, if I did not feel well, or if I had a cold, my mother gave me Black-Draught," says Mrs. Orpha Hill, of Wofford, Ky. "When I was married, it became a family medicine in my own home, as it was in my mother's.

"I take it for headache and especially for constipation. When I get bilious, my skin gets yellow and I have a very bad taste in my mouth, and a drowsy feeling all during the day. My eyes burn and I get dizzy, or my head is 'swimming.' When I take Black-Draught, it seems to drive the impurities out of my system and I feel fine. I am seldom without this reliable remedy."

GET BEHIND THE LABEL!

During April the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor will stage a nation-wide union label campaign. The co-operation of the entire American labor movement is being sought by officials of the A. F. of L. and they are placing great store on the help individual Unionists can gve during the campaign.

Here is a hint as to why every individual in every local in Chattanooga ought to help, and also an insight into how their efforts will do an immeasurable amount of good.

Organizers agree on the difficulty they have in getting unorganized men and women to realize that to unionize is to their best interests. Samuel Gompers in more than one speech mentioned the failure of unorganized workers to see that Unionism was the solution of their troubles. It has been said with truth that the indifference of unorganized workers to the great blessings inherent in unionization of their trades is nothing short of an economic tragedy.

Unionists can help keep before the eyes of unorganized workers the symbol of Unionism, the Union Label, and thus wield a psychological influence for the good of Unionism. They can talk the Label, ask for it and use it—let everyone be the sign that Unionism does exist—and the unorganized workers will not be long in recognizing that more of their friends than they might think are members of organized crafts. Unionists have much to be proud of, much more so than the unorganized worker, and they should seek every opportunity to show they are linked up in a common brotherhood with thousands of other Unionists, and that the little Union Label is the universal sign of this brotherhood.

If the organized worker wants the world to wake up to the fact that he is organized, then let the organized worker himself wake up to the fact that he has in the Union Label something that will speak volumes for him with very little effort on his part.

Unionists should endeavor to find the opportunity to keep before the eyes of department store clerks, laundrymen, public utility employes and others the little symbol of Unionism, the Label. A Union Label on an article always means money in some Union man or woman's pocket, good working conditions and self-respect. When you buy an article with the Union Label on it you not only fill a personal need, but you help in a direct way the great cause for which all Unionists are banded together.

Get in the Union Label Campaign when it opens!

OUR PRISON PROBLEM.

It will be with a sense of relief that the people of the nation hear the news that something is to be done about conditions in some of the northern prisons, especially those prevalent at Joliet, Ill. For some months past the public has been shocked from time to time by news of harrowing riots and bloodshed within the walls of some of our overcrowded prisons.

It is a matter for the state legislative committee now working on what is hoped will be a clean up of prison conditions at Joliet to decide just how far Warden Henry C. Hill is responsible for the riots, prison fires and bloodshed there, but it does seem strange that the Rev. George Whitmeyer the other day resigned his post of chaplain at that prison. Not only has the Rev. Whitmeyer resigned but he has voluntarily offered to go before the legislative committee and give, to use his own words, "the real facts behind the rioting."

This indicates somebody in an official capacity at Joliet, along with the prisoners themselves, will have to bear the responsibility for the riots.

A convict may have no other identity than a number, but he is still a human being. On the other hand, prison officials have some pretty depraved characters to handle—men who stop short of nothing in their lawlessness, inside or outside prison walls. But civilization cannot tolerate present conditions in some of our large prisons. Society must demand that prisons be conducted in such a way they will at least be a credit to rather than a reflection on civilized intelligence. If with all our boasted civilization we have failed to take care of life's unfortunates in such wise as to avoid the prison disorders of the last several months, then as a people we must apply ourselves to the intensive study of our penal institutions and seek to acquire the knowledge it is evident we lack concerning the housing and management of the criminally inclined.

OUR NEW PASTIME.

Our business depression probes are becoming the nation's leading industry. We are obsessed with "fact finding." Each venture is to be the last word and we breathlessly await the verdict. When the tumult and shouting dies we launch another investigation, with its chart, graphs, statistics and "comprehensive surveys." The depression cause is approached from every angle, except higher wages and shorter hours. The investigators discuss without end the difference between "overproduction" and "underconsumption." The latest economic phrase is parsed and dissected with the minuteness of a Middle Ages scholastic and new phrases are coined.

Of equal importance is tariffs, credits, the price drop in silver, the international situation, and adjustment of output to demand, called "stabilization." But never a word on the kernel of the situation—lack of buying power and consequent accumulation of commodities, followed by shut-downs.

These "fact finders" also ignore prevalence of the long workday. The Ohio director of industrial relations, only recently, called on employers in that state to adopt the eight-hour day "whenever feasible." The Wisconsin citizens' committee on employment favors a 50-hour week as a maximum for industries.

"Fact finders" act on the theory that the seven, or even the eight-hour, day is nation-wide. The contrary is true. Professional probers should cease skirting the edges of this problem. They should not be as babes on the ocean shore who timidly wet their tiny toes in the incoming tide.

There can be no lasting business recovery unless the nation's buying power is increased and the workday is shortened. Both plans will give employment to countless workers and all classes will be benefited. The value of these fundamental remedies is unchallenged, but their application is side-tracked.

Workers are hopeful that something will be handed them by numberless and bewildering commissions, investigations, probes and surveys. Each disappointment is forgotten as the wage earner is lured by another "final solution." And the depression continues because of low purchasing power and long hours that are not referred to.

Let us have less shadow boxing and more substance.

A Weekly Comment on a Text From the Bible

By WILLIAM L. MOSS

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XVIII.
QUARREL OVER AN ESTATE
(Lk. 12:13-16a)

WM. L. MOSS

"One of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. And he spake unto them a parable, saying . . ."—Lk. 12:13-16a.

In my study of the above passage I see two distinct points to be analyzed, neither of which happens to be the text we so often hear expounded, namely, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth." A study of the two points I shall bring out will give us a far richer historical insight into the Person of Jesus Himself and at the same time impart all—and because of the manner of our approach to the passage even more—that a study of the text "A man's life consisteth not," etc., could ever reveal to us. Both points that I see in this passage are of equal importance. The first is: A complete analysis of why Jesus objected to the man from the crowd asking Him to act as referee in an argument over an estate, and the second is: To what did Jesus point when He said, "Take heed, and beware of covetousness." This week we shall begin our study of the first point.

A social reformer demands that people change their minds. Jesus did not, in all His ministry, demand anyone change their minds—but He did preach that permanent betterment of man's earthly conditions must ever come through a change in heart. He was anxious for a life for its own sake—not for the changes wrought in it to His credit. Jesus knew the world was full of advise and its real dire need was for an awakening of the "creative impulse" in the moral field—therefore the outstanding contribution any human being can make to any social class of men is a regenerated spirit and its attendant good works! Jesus' attitude toward social life, then, resolves itself into this: Our real responsibility lies, not in our approval or disapproval of social reform, but in whether we are responsible for social reform being necessary! Thus Jesus struck for the first time in the world's history—either before or since His time—at the very root of social wrong! As Newman Smyth so well puts it: "Jesus carried the secret of character from the outside to the center." He narrowed things down to where external actions are dependent entirely on internal motives, hence morality becomes not something to be achieved throughout outward corrective measures, but is in every phase of social life a thing of individual intentions and spirit. From Jesus' viewpoint it is all a question of a life's relationship to God: is that relationship all that it should be or not? Make the individual good and social life, consisting of human life in the aggregate, will be above reproach. The Master did not attempt to fill the sandals of a social demagogue—a ringleader who had His own particular notions about classes and distinctions between classes, but taught as a spiritual seer—one who knew what was best for a man's soul, and if best for one man's soul, then best for all men's souls and therefore best for social strata!

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Lower living costs are hailed in some quarters as a great gain for the workers. It is true that the reduction helps those who have jobs, especially those whose wages have not been reduced, but it must not be forgotten that lower living costs are not of any great benefit to the man who has no job. Lower living costs help, but as the Labor Bureau, Inc., remarks, they are not sufficient to palliate the misery resulting from the present depression.

* * *

Perry W. Reeves, labor member of the federal board for vocational education, points out that there is no substitute for a lost job, except another job. He says that workers displaced by new processes and new machinery must be trained for other jobs and that if no such provision is made for displaced workers, something is fundamentally wrong with our industrial system, or with our public industrial training program. He's dead right and what he says can't be too strongly impressed on business and political leaders.

It looked quite as though there might be a nice little fight on in India, between the "little bowlegged philosopher who needs a set of false teeth" and the British Lord—possibly breaking out into some real riots. But the press reports that Lord Irwin and Mahatma Gandhi have gotten together on a working basis. Gandhi has been seen by the All-India Chamber of Commerce, with a suggestion that perhaps it was time to let business have a chance again. And Great Britain really had enough to attend to at home—and elsewhere. And so, and so—well, how many Hindus do you suppose will really want to make bitter salt out of sea-water, anyway? And as for the home-made thread and cloth: all a beautiful gesture—even if the cloth is good. It would not go very far, with the British-owned and India-owned looms in the mills ready to run. Let 'em spin and weave!

But Gandhi says, "We want ultimate independence!" Who better than Lord Irwin knows that the Indias have been heading toward independence ever since the day when Warren Hastings was impeached? The splendid posturing of the little Mahatma have been vastly effective in helping to produce the very essential unity of mind among the people of that variegated multitude, a few of whom really think far enough to desire to govern themselves. And the strict Britisher displayed in fine form the inexorable—nevertheless flexible—English law! It was a good show! And in another hundred years there may be enough of the population of India qualified—by the mere ability to read and write the same language—to unite intelligently on a program of self-control. Here's hoping!

Alien "Friends"

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Foreign-born residents of the United States during these hard times are leaving their adopted country faster than their brother aliens are coming in! Statistics covering the immigration situation and just made public by Washington inform us that in January a total of 21,566 aliens hastily packed their belongings and fled these shores, while but a little more than half this number, or 12,815 to be exact, knocked at the nation's doors during the same month seeking admission. Why this rush of our alien "friends" to flee this "land of opportunity" and return to their homelands? When economic conditions become as they are at present, why do our alien "friends" turn longing eyes in the direction from whence they came across the seas? To most of the immigrants admitted to the United States the land symbolizes wealth. Let economic conditions approach the stage where their chances to "make money" disappear or at least diminish and they are as ready to desert us as they were anxious a few months or years before to come into our midst. When our economic situation has recovered its stability many of these alien "friends" who now so eagerly book passage on home-going steamships will once more seek admission to this country. The odds are they will find a way to get in! But is it fair to American-born citizens, who stake their all on this land through foul and fair weather, through periods of delightful prosperity and gruelling depression, that they should be allowed to return? Is it fair, I say?

"HIGH STANDARDS."

Municipal housing experts in New York City paint a drab picture of living conditions in the world's metropolis. More than 2,000,000 persons live in disease-breeding homes and thousands of tenements are "not fit to house animals." Eighty-eight per cent of the people do not own their homes.

It is safe to say that the same proportionate conditions prevail in many other American cities.

These figures could be recalled by men who glibly talk about our "high living standards."

"Night after night I could not sleep," writes Mrs. Mary J. Roberts, 117 West Franklin St., Raleigh, N. C. "I would lie awake half the night. I was dizzy and weak, suffered frequently with pains in my side and small part of my back.

"When I was a girl, my mother gave me Cardui, and it did me so much good, I thought I would try it again. I took five bottles, and I feel like a new person.

NEW YORK WORKLESS NEED TEN MILLION

New York.—One thousand representatives of welfare and relief agencies unanimously voted to request the city administration to appropriate $10,000,000 to provide jobs for unemployed heads of families.

Citizens contributed $8,000,000 for this purpose, but this fund will be exhausted April 1.

The resolution states that the number of idle and part time workers in this city is equivalent to 750,000 totally unemployed. The monthly wage loss is placed at $30,000,000.

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union made goods and service.

WOMEN'S BUREAU HEAD DENOUNCES LONG HOURS IN SOUTH AS MENACE

Workday of Women Danger to Health and Progress, Miss Anderson Tells Industrial Conference. Points Out Low Pay Tends to Depress All Wages.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Greensboro, N. C., March 19.—"A low wage for women not only maintains a low standard of living for the women concerned, but in addition tends to depress the wages and living standards of all workers," insists Miss Mary Anderson, director of the women's bureau of the United States department of labor. "The effect upon industry is also disastrous, since the low purchasing power of wage-earners has a continuous constricting influence upon markets for goods."

Miss Anderson was one of the outstanding personalities on the program of the southern industrial conference of the National Women's Trade Union League of America held here March 7 and 8. In addition to speaking on women workers in the textile industry of the south, she contributed to the conference a striking series of graphs, maps and illustrated charts that grew out of extensive and careful research work.

"Industrial development in the south," said Miss Anderson in discussing women in industry in the ten southern states, "will show certain imperfections, just as cloth woven of partly defective material, until all employers realize the importance to both capital and labor of shorter hours, fair wages and good working conditions."

Discusses Southern Industry.

Miss Anderson stressed the industrial importance of the south to the whole country and the significant contributions of women workers to the progress of this section. She discussed the findings of a survey of woman's place in industry in the ten southern states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

"It is unfortunate," she felt, "that women, who constitute such a vital and indispensable factor both in employment and human relations in the south, are still, after a hundred years of industrial history in this region, working in so many instances under conditions characteristic of the initial stages of the factory system, when the fundamental necessities of the workers were so largely ignored.

"The danger of discussing the south as a section instead of as individual states must be guarded against. For example, although in the 40-year period from 1880 to 1920 the proportion of women in textiles had declined in three of the ten states, it had more than doubled in South Carolina, Kentucky and North Carolina.

Tobacco Workers Big Groups.

"Although the textile group constituted the greatest proportion of women in manufacturing in six of the ten states, in three others—Florida, Kentucky and Virginia—the largest groups of women were in cigar and tobacco factories. These numbers were largely responsible for the fact that in 1920 a third of the women in this industry in the entire country were in the ten states.

"The 'cheap labor' situation in the south was affected by the standards of an agricultural civilization which held sway for so long in this section. Moreover, the policy of paying low wages to women in mills is traceable to the fact that women first spun and wove by hand in the home without money payment."

Quoting figures compiled by the bureau of labor statistics, Miss Anderson revealed that the average full-time earnings of women in cotton mills in the several states in 1928 were as follows:

Alabama, $11.88; South Carolina, $12.32; Georgia, $12.77; North Carolina, $14.62; Virginia, $14.99.

The figures show a decrease in women's earnings in cotton mills in the period from 1924 to 1928 in Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia of from 4 per cent to 16.6 per cent. An advance of 4.5 per cent was shown in Alabama.

Long Hours Termed Menace.

"The long hours of women still prevailing in the south are a menace to health and progress, the laws limiting hours for women being strikingly backward in most of these states, which suffer when compared with other sections of the country in regard to hour legislation.

"Two states, Florida and Alabama, have no hour laws, thus permitting employers to work women whenever and as long as thy please. North Carolina allows an 11-hour day for women, and Tennessee a day of 10.5 hours in manufacturing. Six states—Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Georgia and South Carolina—a day of 10 hours. In the last two states, however, the law applies only to cotton and woolen mills. South Carolina sets 55 hours as the maximum in such mills and Mississippi the same limit in all manufacturing, while a 57-hour week is the maximum allowed for manufacturing in Tennessee. Five states permit a 60-houh week."

Fight in Ranks Of Miners Ended By Court Decree

Formal Order Signed by Judge at Springfield Lays Foundation for Peace in Illinois Coal Fields.

Indianapolis, Ind., March 19.—The foundation for peace in the ranks of the United Mine Workers of America in district 12, comprising the Illinois coal field, was laid March 6, when Judge Harry Edwards in the Sangamon county court in Springfield, Ill., signed a formal decree, ending the legal fight which has lasted for 15 months.

Terms of the decree provide that the international union, with headquarters in Indianapolis, is the only bona fide miners' organization on the North American continent; that John L. Lewis, Philip Murray and Thomas Kennedy are the duly elected and qualified president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the international union; that the international constitution adopted in March, 1930, is the constitution governing the miners' organization; that district 12 is a subordinate branch of the international union; that officers elected by the district in December, 1930, are the duly elected and qualified officers of the district and that the contract with the coal operators in Illinois was negotiated by the district officials.

The International Union of Miners, formed on March 10, 1930, at Springfield is without standing and does not represent the membership in the mine workers' organization, the decree states, and the slate is wiped clean in regard to dues and assessments paid to officials of the contending factions during the court battle.

Following the court decree all contempt of court cases instituted against John L. Lewis and district 12 provisional officials, as well as officials of local unions, were dismissed as was also a libel suit for $250,000 brought by A. C. Lewis, district 12 attorney, against President John L. Lewis.

Wage Cuts Opposed By Chicago Bankers

Chicago.—A warning against widespread wage cuts as an aid to business recovery is sounded by Business Observer, house organ of the Foreman-State National bank.

"The movement to reduce wages in the interest of business recovery appears to be unsound," the bulletin states. "By permitting wages to hold, while prices decline, purchasing power will be enhanced and such commodity prices as have already fallen beyond the general trend of prices will tend to be brought back in line, but only if wage costs entering into them are not reduced.

"On the contrary, if wage reductions were to become a widespread policy at the present time, it would undoubtedly intensify the commodity price recession, curtailing buying power still further and prolonging the depression."

Holmes Is Greeted By A. F. L. Head

Washington. — Associate Justice Holmes, of the federal supreme court, was felicited on the occasion of his 90th birthday by William Green, president A. F. of L.

Justice Holmes is known as "the great dissenter," and many of his minority decisions have been embodied into the law of the land.

President Green sent this message to the jurist:

"In behalf of millions of working men and women, I extend birthday greetings, and to this I add my personal felicitations. During all your many years of public service you have occupied a very large place in the hearts and affections of the masses of the people. Their admiration and respect for you has steadily increased to the point where you are held in the highest esteem by all those classified as common people. May you enjoy a happy birthday anniversary and may you be spared for many more years of usefulness and service."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

Election week is over and the business men of Chattanooga go back to work and the musicians go back to loafing. The only one who seemed to benefit from the election was Frank Worthy, who took Dick Liner's job for a night or two.

* * *

The executive board seemed to be quite elated, either by the coming of spring or by the election, and got "plum rash," as Cooper Null would say. They passed the ruling that no unionists are to perform free gratis over the radio station.

Cavern Castle, situated on the side of Lookout mountain and the homeplace of those two great Americans, Goofy Liner and Allen Brown, plans to "try out" a number of local orchestras and to give the winner a 52-weeks' contest with a two-weeks notice clause. Line forms to the right.

In only a few weeks the Peruchi Players will depart and Earl Van Aradale can begin putting all his time on convention plans.

* * *

Bill Krug seems to be completely "well again" and was duly received at the Bijou.

We hear that Ellis Goodloe, rival of Ware & Ware, Hardie & Caudle, et al., will this spring receive his degree from the University of Chattanooga. Bravo! Ellis.

Herman Dodds says that he's a long way ahead of Jimmy Johnson. While Jimmy talks about playing with the Rhythm Kings, Herman has already done so.

State Power Plants Urged in Wisconsin

Madison, Wis., March 19.—The state legislature passed the Loomis resolution for a constitutional amendment permitting the state to generate and distribute light, heat and power.

The measure is favored by Gov. Phil La Follette, son of the late Senator La Follette and brother of the present Senator La Follette.

The resolution must be approved by the 1933 legislature before it is submitted to the people.

The proposal has been bitterly contested by public utilities and attempted bribery of legislators was investigated by the senate, following charges by the governor.

TOO MANY PAPER MILLS BLAMED FOR IDLENESS

Montreal.—Paper companies built too many mills and unemployment is the result of this excess plant capacity, said John P. Burke, president International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, at its biennial convention in this city.

Asserting that there are at least 5,000,000 unemployed in the United States, Mr. Burke urged that if governments fail to provide work serious consideration must be given unemployment insurance.

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

An epidemic of sickness has struck the office. The following have been off from a few days to several weeks: J. H. Reneau, E. H. Dawson, J. R. Marshall, W. J. Griffitts, Frank Cook, Earl Miller, D. S. Spitzer, L. W. Lyons, C. E. DeRochemont and Subs Baker, Strader and Strickland.

R. M. Long was off Thursday attending the funeral of his brother-in-law, Squire T. A. Boone, who was shot by a negro hold-up man.

C. P. Connor was off a day or two attending to some planting.

* * *

F. W. Brooks was off a day on compensation. What he did is not known.

* * *

Hey, what is the difference between a bottle of whisky and a bottle of castor oil? Give it up? Well, one is a talkie and the other a movie.

* * *

Bids are going to be asked for the painting of the inside of the postoffice building.

* * *

Mr. Stewart was talking to a colored man who works for Davenport Bros. He was asked what they were going to do with that big building. He said maybe they would move the hosiery mill into it so the government could build the new postoffice. He was asked, "Have they bought it yet?" He says, "Yes, but they have not paid for it, have they? But they have mighty good credit." (Meaning the government.)

* * *

Supt. John S. Walker was off a couple of days farming.

* * *

We are looking forward to the summer Saturday short week day, which will be inaugurated soon.

* * *

A man was sent to the hospital and stayed quite a while. One of his friends met him and asked him if he was not pretty sick to stay so long. He says no; a pretty nurse!

* * *

T. H. Lane, of the Post, Cincinnati, O., who has been visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Lane, has returned to Cincinnati.

Inspectors are here checking up the Chattanooga postoffice throughout.

George W. Lewis Dies Following Major Operation

Complications Fatal to Legislative Representative of Mine Workers—Was Well-Known in Chattanooga.

Washington, March 19.—George W. Lewis, legislative representative of the United Mine Workers of America, and brother of President John L. Lewis, of the union, died here at Emergency hospital on March 11, from complications following an appendicitis operation. Mr. Lewis was stricken two weeks ago and operated on immediately. He was 44 years old.

Mr. Lewis is survived by his wife, his mother, Mrs. Thomas H. Lewis, of Springfield, Ill.; two sisters, Miss Hattie Lewis, of Springfield, and Miss Edith Lewis, of Albuquerque, N. Mex.; and five brothers, all closely identified with the labor movement.

President John L. Lewis was in Washington during his illness. Other surviving brothers are Dennis Lewis, of the United States employment service; Howard Lewis, a mine superintendent of Buckner, Ill.; Thomas Lewis, also a mine superintendent of Springfield, Ill., and Raymond Lewis, of Fort Wayne, Ind.

A native of Illinois, Mr. Lewis was educated in the public schools of that state, and for some time was associated with his brother John before he came here as legislative representative for the mine workers.

The body was sent to Springfield, Ill., for burial. It was accompanied by Edward F. McGrady, representing the American Federation of Labor.

Stationed in Chattanooga several months a few years ago, Mr. Lewis made many local friends, who will regret to learn of his passing.

Carmen Pay Tribute To Ollie D. Ramsey

Lookout lodge, No. 211, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, at its regular meeting last week adopted the following memorial to Ollie D. Ramsey, veteran member and official of the lodge, who passed away on Feb. 8, 1931:

"It is with deep regret that we are called upon to chronicle the death of Brother O. D. Ramsey, which occurred in Tucson, Ariz., on Feb. 8, 1931.

"Brother Ramsey was a consistent, loyal and useful member of Lookout lodge, No. 211, Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America. We knew him as a brother, a fellow-worker, and a friend, and we consider it a privilege to pay this tribute to his memory. We shall no more be greeted in our lodge by his smile; no more shall we receive his handclasp and look upon his face, but let us hope that in the great beyond whither we are all traveling, we may meet our comrade and friend who has preceded us.

"We realize that a valued member has departed from us, and we deplore the necessity which removed him from our midst in the vigor and strength of his early manhood, and at the height of his usefulness; and,

"Whereas in the death of Brother Ramsey, the B. R. C. of A. has lost a member who was an honor to his lodge, his church, and his community; and,

"Whereas, our long and intimate relation with him in the faithful discharge of his duties in this order makes it eminently fitting that we should record our deep sense of grief as well as our appreciation of his character.

"Brother Ramsey leaves to mourn his loss a loving wife and companion and two children. Brother Ramsey late in life embraced the Christian religion, and was affiliated with the Christian church. He was a good citizen valued in the community in which he lived.

"Therefore, be it resolved, that as a fellow-worker and an esteemed member of the B. R. C. of A., we shall ever hold in loving memory his services and counsel in behalf of this organization.

"Resolved, that we, his brothers, strive to emulate his virtues and cherish his examples as embodying the principles upon which our order stands.

"Resolved, that with deep sympathy for the bereaved family and relatives of our brother, we express the hope that this, our common loss, may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well.

"Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this lodge, and a copy be furnished to his family with the sincere sympathy of all members, and to The Labor World for publication.

Contract Is Upheld By New York Court

New York.—"Supreme Court Judge Collins' refusal to annul a contract between our brotherhood and the Bookbinders' Trade association is the best answer to scurrilous attacks on our organization," said John B. Haggerty, of Washington, president International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.

"Our contract is with these employers, whose 2,500 workers were unorganized," said Mr. Haggerty. "The contract was indorsed by our last convention and yet our Bindery Women's local, Mary Murphy, president, asked Judge Collins to annul the contract. The plaintiffs claimed that their "property rights" were affected.

The contract calls for a reduction of hours from 48 to 44 hours within a year, with a gradual increase in pay. The plaintiffs had no members in these trade shops. They refused to organize them, said President Haggerty.

Judge Collins ruled that the brotherhood infringed on no one's rights, "although perhaps, it might, with warrant, have taken affirmative steps to rebuke the local or its officers for interfering with the contract."

"This decision," said Mr. Haggerty, "answers slanders circulated among North American trade unionists that our brotherhood officials were attempting to form a company 'union.'"

MILITIA CAN'T BE USED TO GUARD STATE BANKS

Indianapolis.—The Indiana attorney-general ruled that the state militia cannot protect banks against robbery. The governor asked for an opinion on the legality of such action.

The attorney-general said that the use of state militia for this purpose was not contemplated by the legislature and that such use of the militia "would make of the guardsmen simply private watchmen."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand,
Divided we fall."

IN REPLY TO THE MOTOR CARRIERS FOR HIRE

A Statement by the Railroads of Tennessee

The Tennessee Passenger Bus Association, the Smith Motor Coach Company and the Passenger Motor Truck Association have attempted to deny many facts relating to their use of the highways. The purpose of this further statement is to correct some of their misleading assertions.

Bus fares do not represent the whole cost of bus transportation. Extra width and extra strength must be built into our roads to care for heavy motor buses and trucks. The excess cost of this, according to competent engineering estimate, is not less than $20,000,000 in Tennessee—twenty million dollars, or more, spent by all of us, motorists and taxpayers, in order that some may ride at a saving estimated by the bus companies as $1,300,000.

Buses did not contribute "41 per cent of the maintenance cost of highways they use," nor any other important part of it. Highway maintenance cost Tennessee in 1930 $2,679,467.29. The total tax payments of all sorts and for all purposes by certificated buses was only $300,000. Such part of this as is properly attributable to highway maintenance is but a tiny fraction of the cost of keeping up the highways they use.

What Buses Get for Their "Taxes"

Buses pay 11 cents out of each dollar of their total revenue for taxes. This covers taxes not only for general purposes of government, but also for construction and maintenance of highways they use. The railroads pay about 33 cents out of each dollar for taxes and the cost of owning and maintaining their roadway. But taxes, they claim, are 75 per cent of their net revenue. Railroad taxes (including roadway and maintenance costs) were more than twice their net revenue. On the basis of either gross or net revenue, it appears that bus taxes should be THREE TIMES what they now are, if they are to pay in proportion to the railroads.

Weight considered, buses pay much less in taxes than the private automobile. A light one-ton passenger automobile runs 15 miles on one gallon of gas. This is 15 ton-miles for a gas tax of 5 cents. A heavy motor bus, weighing ten tons, runs about 5 miles on a gallon of gas. This is 50-ton miles for a gas tax of 5 cents. Therefore the small car pays for the use of the highway more than three times as much tax per mile run as the bus. Yet each heavy vehicle damages the highway perhaps as much as fifty light cars.

Robust "Small Boys"

The Coach Company likens the buses to mistreated "small boys." They are indeed robust youngsters, 33,300 of them operating in the United States over a highway mileage greater than that of all the railroads carried five hundred million passengers in 1929. It says "one local Tennessee railroad paid a 60 per cent dividend last year." It failed to say this was not a cash dividend, but was simply an issue of stock representing improvements made on the railroad during many past years. The railroad referred to, earned net last year about one per cent on the value of its property. This Coach Company says it has paid but one small cash dividend. Its last annual report to the Commission shows it has assets of about $500,000; took in about $647,000, and earned a net income of $182,000. This was 52 per cent on its capital stock, and it paid a dividend of 66 per cent, or $170,000. Should not a substantial part of these large earnings have been paid to the State for use of highways costing more than $100,000,000? Every government land-grant made all railroads has been repaid many times, and they are still paying. Is it any wonder that this Coach Company wants to "Save the Buses for the People?"

The investment in a transportation enterprise includes not only the vehicles, but also the roadbed over which they move. The public of Tennessee has so far spared the highway motor carriers for hire the necessity of making an investment, except in vehicles. Instead of being appreciative to the State for the opportunity of doing such a large business with such a small investment, these commercial agencies complain at an attempt to collect enough from them for the use of the State's highways.

All Taxpayers, Including Railroads, Pay for Roads

Prior to 1923, roads were built largely from property taxes. The cost of roads so built is a large contribution to present highways. The railways, prior to 1923, contributed through property taxes to all roads. Since 1923, they have contributed every year directly to road taxes collected by the counties. This contribution for The N., C. & St. L. Railway alone, in 23 counties, now runs about $100,000 per year. The payment of all railroads in the State directly to road taxes would perhaps exceed the gasoline and license tag tax paid by all buses. The Federal Government pays $15,000 per mile on Federal-Aid roads. The railroads therefore through direct and Federa ltaxes have contributed large sums to highways used by their competitors.

Freight trucks for hire have not been discussed in detail because of the lack of comprehensive public information, but what has been said about passenger buses applies with greater force to such truck operations. Excluding the gasoline tax, common carrier trucks in Tennessee would have to pay many times what they now pay to equal the tax which North Carolina requires of them.

The Interest of the Private Motorist

The railroads are making this fight not only for self-protection, but in the interest of every private motorist and the public in general. They favor good roads, but are also interested that those who use them as a "place of business" shall pay fairly for the privilege. This should ultimately reduce the taxes on the ordinary motorist, or build more good roads.

The railroads more than any other agency have contributed to the State's development. They are always among the first which the country calls upon in times of disaster. They have done more for farm interests in the State than any other private agency. Recently they have contributed more than $250,000 in reduced rates to farmers in the drouth-stricken area of this section. They are now carrying without charge supplies to be distributed by the Red Cross. Some of them paid their taxes before March 1st, although containing a number of items which they believe are illegally assessed. WHAT HAVE THE BUSES AND TRUCKS DONE?

The railroads are only asking for equality of treatment with their competitors—they are entitled to no less. Buses and trucks for hire in Tennessee are paying practically no ad valorem taxes to counties; they are paying no part of the cost of grade separation; they are not under proper requirements as common carriers; and they are not paying an adequate amount for the one hundred millions dollars of State highway used as a place of business, nor for the more expensive road made necessary by their heavy, fast vehicles; nor for road maintenance. Bills are now before the Tennessee Legislature to protect the public interest. You should ask your representative to support them.

This Legislation, If Passed, Will Not Increase Taxes on Private Motor Car or Truck Owners

nor restrict their ordinary lawful use of the highways about their own business or pleasure. Railroads are not opposed to highway development. The private motorist and the railroad have a common interest in the preservation and proper use of highways. If they are to be destroyed by abuse before they are paid for, it will be the private motorist and the taxpayers, including railroads, who will have to pay for the rebuilding. If they are to be turned into "tracks" for vehicles that try to approach the size of railroad freight cars and coaches, not only will the railroad suffer, but the private motorist will find his use of the roads inconvenienced and endangered. The interest of railroads and private motorists in this matter is the same—more good roads, legitimately used and protected from abuse.

Central Body Hears Labor Officials

Declare Workers Must Present Solid Front.

REGULAR SESSION PROVES LIVELY

Number of Delegates Placed in Nomination for Officers, to Be Elected at Next Regular Meeting.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council were treated, unexpectedly, Monday night to addresses by several men prominent in the labor movement of the nation and the south when W. C. Birthright, general secretary-treasurer of the Journeymen Barbers' International union; H. H. Emmons, representing the Boot and Shoe Workers' International union; David Hanly, legislative chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor; John T. O'Connor, former president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor; Paul J. Aymon, president of the state federation and representative of the American Federation of Labor, and W. J. Vaughn, inspector for the state board of barber examiners in the Nashville district, dropped in unannounced. Only a fair-sized audience greeted the distinguished guests, some forty delegates being present.

Addresses of the visitors dealt with present industrial conditions, and each sounded a warning that sanity and co-operation must rule if the organized labor movement is to continue its progress through the present depression and be in sound condition when business returns to normal.

NOMINATIONS FOR OFFICES FEATURE.

Nominations of officers for the next year, election to be held at next regular meeting, constituted one feature of the session, and indications were that unusual interest will be shown in electing the men to direct the destinies of the local movement during the coming term. M. H. Ortwein, who is completing his fourth term as president of the body, was nominated for another term, but declined, calling attention to the fact that he had served for years and pleading lack of sufficient time to conduct the affairs of the office. E. E. McDaniels was nominated.

Others placed in the various races follow: For vice-president, T. R. Cuthbert; secretary-treasurer, Matt Gerlach; recording secretary, A. C. Austin; sergeant-at-arms, J. T. McKinnon (declined), Leo Lee. The foregoing offices make up the executive board. For doorkeeper, H. D. Lee was renominated. For trustees, George Forbes, C. R. Ruggles, E. E. McDaniels, J. G. Burkes, E. F. Steiner and W. L. Wergin. For directors of the Labor World, W. F. Lange, W. E. Stanfield.

Secretary Gerlach read the call for the convention of the state federation of labor, and nominations for delegate were made. Paul J. Aymon, M. H. Ortwein and T. R. Cuthbert.

Nominations for all offices will remain open until the date of election. The following special committees were appointed:

To work out plans for qualification of all members of organized labor in future elections: Felix Hamil, F. C. Berger and W. F. Lange.

To act on request of International Allied Printing Trades for co-operation in a campaign having to do with textbooks: W. L. Wergin, E. E. McDaniels, W. L. Gardner.

To prepare resolutions of sympathy for C. R. Ruggles in the passing of Mrs. Ruggles: J. G. Schrock, Matt Gerlach and R. M. Cooke.

Secretary Gerlach was instructed to wire condolences to Jerome Jones, of Atlanta, who lost his wife recently.

A large amount of routine business was also transacted, and officers and committees will be kept unusually busy during the next two weeks.

GAS TAX FOR RELIEF.

Indianapolis.—Gov. Leslie signed a bill that authorized the state auditor to make advance payment of gasoline tax funds to counties for unemployment relief.

REJECT OLD AGE PENSION.

Indianapolis.—Gov. Leslie vetoed a bill that would establish an old-age pension system at the option of the counties of this state.

GUESTS OF CENTRAL BODY MONDAY NIGHT

W. C. BIRTHRIGHT
Secretary-Treasurer Journeyman Barbers' International Union.

DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

JOHN T. O'CONNOR
Former President Tennessee Federation of Labor.

JUDGE MILLER TO BE GUEST CIRCLE CLUB

Jurist Will Address Members at Monday's Meeting. Full Attendance Urged.

Officers of Circle club are urging a full attendance of members at the regular meeting Monday night, two reasons being assigned for their particular desire to see the smiling faces of each and every member of the club. The first of these is the fact that the Hon. L. D. Miller, judge of the second division of criminal court, will be the guest of honor, and will deliver an address which no member can afford to miss. Judge Miller was scheduled to favor the club members with a speech several weeks ago, but was unavoidably prevented from filling the engagement. Another reason for the presence of every member at this particular session is a business matter of importance which will be brought up for consideration of those present. Officers declined to state the nature of this matter, but declared the interests of the entire club are involved in its disposition, and expressed the hope that all would participate in the discussions.

The club will meet at the regular place, the Paragon dining room, formerly Deuberry's, 11½ West Ninth street, and will be called to order promptly at 7 o'clock.

R. L. House Returns From Convention

R. L. House, veteran Pullman conductor on the Southern, returned this week from Kansas City, where he represented the Chattanooga local at the national convention of the Order of Pullman Car Conductors. Capt. House said that, while his organization is small numerically, it has shown fine progress and has proved of incalculable benefit to its members.

Capt. House was loud in his praises of Martin F. Ryan, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen and treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, who addressed the convention, and intimated that should the opportunity ever present itself, he (Mr. House) would be delighted to nominate the genial international official for president of the United States.

APPROVE AGED PENSIONS.

Charleston, W. Va.—The house of representatives unanimously approved senate bill No. 4 which will create an old-age pension for needy persons under 65 years of age. Maximum payment would be $30 a month. The measure now goes to the governor.

TOO MUCH WHALE OIL.

Washington.—Hunting whales by machine guns on "factory" ships has resulted in an overproduction, according to the department of commerce.

Two More Locals Pledge Publicity In Miller Matter

Two additional locals have reported pledges to assist in the campaign of publicity respecting the attitude of the Miller Bros. company department store, the management of which, after enjoying for many years the patronage of organized labor, refused to join its competitors and agree to union operation of its barber shop and beauty parlor.

Several weeks ago Typographical union, No. 89, unanimously adopted a resolution pledging 100 per cent. co-operation with Central Body in its campaign of publicity regarding the sudden "switching" of the Miller firm against organized labor, and this resolution has been submitted to each local in regular session for its consideration.

A large number of locals have heretofore reported concurrence in the resolution, and Monday night action was reported from Local 79, Soft Drink Workers, and Lodge 1450, Machinists, each of which organization voted unanimously in favor of carrying out its provisions.

The Miller concern has as yet shown no indication of receding from its announced position, and plans are being made to give even further publicity to the matter.

John Alpine Named Employment Chief

Washington.—John R. Alpine has been appointed special assistant to Secretary of Labor Doak. The new official will have charge of the proposed expansion of the federal employment service to administer the emergency fund of $500,000 appropriated at the last session of congress.

The money is intended to extend the activities of the employment service, which would be superseded by a federal-states system if the Wagner bill were not vetoed by the president.

The new official served as a vice-president of the A. F. of L. and as president of the plumbers' international for many years. Since 1921 he has been connected with the Grinnell company, of New York, manufacturers of fire sprinklers on buildings, with special relationship to employment questions.

SHUN BOULDER DAM, WARNS GOVERNMENT

Washington.—There is no work for mechanics and laborers at the Boulder dam project, according to a statement issued by the department of labor.

"The contract was let today, but preliminary work will not begin for ninety days," the department states. "Thousands of applications for work are now on file. More than 1,000 unemployed are already on the ground. Do not go there except on recommendation of the United States employment service."

CALL MEETING OF CARPENTERS STATE COUNCIL

Twelfth Annual Session of State Body to Meet at Jackson March 30-31.

Twelfth annual session of the Tennessee State Council of Carpenters has been called to meet at Jackson, Tenn., Thursday and Friday, March 30 and 31, according to W. E. Cheek, of Nashville, secretary-treasurer, a visitor in the city Thursday.

Mr. Cheek told a representative of The Labor World the officers' reports will show that in spite of the unemployment situation his organization has more than held its own throughout the state. Unemployment, he said, has naturally caused some losses in membership, but gains in other cases have more than offset the declines. Wage scales also have been maintained, he said, and the year's record as a whole is very satisfactory.

Practically every Carpenters' local in the state will be represented at the Jackson session, Mr. Cheek continued. A representative of the United Brotherhood will be the guest of honor.

Vance Stamps, of Knoxville, is serving his first term as president of the carpenters' body, having succeeded J. L. Carpenter, of Chattanooga, who headed the organization practically continuously from its formation in this city twelve years ago until the annual meeting here last year.

Express Sympathy For C. R. Ruggles

Sympathy for C. R. Ruggles, for years an officer in Local 299, Sign Writers, and in Central Body, who lost his wife recently, is expressed in resolutions prepared by a committee named Monday night, as follows:

Whereas, Mrs. C. R. Ruggles, wife of our brother and fellow-worker, was recently called to her final reward after a long struggle to regain her lost health; and

Whereas, Brother Ruggles has long been identified with this body as a delegate and an officer, and has been faithful to our movement and to his friends; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we extend to him and other surviving relatives our heartfelt sympathy in their great bereavement; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished the family of Brother Ruggles, and The Labor World for publication.

EMMONS STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF SUPPORTING UNION LABEL

The power of the union label was apparently uppermost in the mind of H. H. Emmons, representative of the Boot and Shoe Workers' International union, when that official addressed the regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night.

Mr. Emmons, visiting the city in the interest of his own organization, as well as the movement generally, gave some sound advice to local unionists, and brought out some points which every working man and woman, union or nonunion, might ponder with profit.

Mr. Emmons' address, in part, follows:

"The Central Labor union assumes that the wage earners of this great city would welcome more wages and a greater degree of industrial independence. This lies, to a great extent, with the workers themselves, who are urged continually to join the union and be a part of the movement for their betterment. The chief factor in bringing wages to their present level in most industries is the union; all workers in your city, whether in the union or not, enjoy conditions and wages that they would not have were it not for the active presence of your Central Labor union with its affiliated unions. Higher wages and improvements in labor conditions can be brought about only through the union. But the union must become stronger in order to carry on the good work, and it is the duty of all who are ambitious for better things, and particularly the obligation of union men and women, to apply themselves to increasing the power and prestige of the union.

"It is not enough, Mr. Union man and woman, that you carry a union card with paid-up dues; it is not enough that you attend your meetings and comply with union shop rules. You must do more than that in order to protect your own craft interest and fulfill your duty as a good member. When we speak of the union, we refer to the organized labor movement of this country, centralized nationally through the American Federation of Labor. The weaker unions of the federation are a menace to your own best interest, no matter how strong your trade organization may now be. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link and many of the nationals affiliated with yours in the movement are growing dangerously weak through lack of support, which they have a right to expect from you. The stronger you make the entire movement, the greater will be the backing to hold wages in every trade and to promote labor's cause in all its phases through the increased power of national unionism.

"As a maker of things at your trade, you probably go after all you can get through your union, but whatever success you achieve in this way is as nothing compared with the results obtained by turning your purchasing power into a solid force to lift up the whole movement. The intense competition among merchants forces them to heed any and all demands from the buying public. It would not require a large per cent of the trade unionists of your city demanding union made goods to compel every store, large or small, to carry full lines of articles made by union labor. This tactic alone in your city and state would organize hundreds of factories throughout the country in order to meet the demand of the dealers for union made goods. The application of the vast purchasing power of trade unionists to union label articles would create the greatest economic strength ever achieved in the world's history of collective effort.

"More and more the trend is for concentrated manufacture and chain store merchandising. Already the great bulk of articles is turned out by a comparatively few large corporations, none of which will employ union labor and will discharge any worker who joins the union.

"It will need but a little more of this getting together of capital to create a situation associated with union hostility when many unions will disappear for the reason that the members will have no place to work.

"But the Union Label can and will compel the largest corporation ever conceived not alone to abandon its union hostility, but to seek the union agreement in order to qualify to meet your demand for union made goods."

FEBRUARY CONSTRUCTION GAINS THREE PER CENT OVER JANUARY

By RALPH F. COUCH

Washington, March 26.—Construction activity increased 3 per cent in February by comparison with January.

Contracts awarded in February rose to $235,000,000 for all classes of construction in thirty-seven states, according to reports received by the F. W. Dodge corporation. The total of January contracts was $228,000,000. In February, 1930, the value of all contracts was $317,000,000 or $82,000,000 more than in the same month this year.

The gain in February, 1931, over the preceding month was due almost entirely to increased construction of residential building. This class of work rose from $54,000,000 in January to $78,000,000 in February, an increase of $24,000,000. In February, 1930, residential construction contracts totaled $75,000,000 or less than the same month this year.

Contracts for utilities and engineering work fell off $16,000,000 in February, 1931, in which month the total was $79,000,000 against $95,000,000 in January. Other classes of work declined about $1,000,000, giving February, 1931, a net gain of $7,000,000 over the first month of the year.

FACTORY EMPLOYMENT MAKES SLIGHT GAINS IN FEBRUARY

Washington, March 26.—Increases in factory employment in February are reported in surveys issued by the bureau of labor statistics of the department of commerce and the federal employment service.

Compared with January and based on returns from 42,383 establishments, the labor statistics bureau stated that the combined totals of fifteen major industrial groups showed an increase of less than one-tenth of 1 per cent in employment and an increase of 4.7 in payroll totals in February. These groups had 4,575,149 employes, whose combined earnings in one week were $113,623,246.

Increased February employment was shown in four of the groups: Manufacturing, 1.4 per cent; anthracite mining, 0.4 per cent; quarrying and non-metallic mining, 3.4 per cent, and hotels, 1.9 per cent.

Decreased employment was shown in each of the remaining eleven groups: Bituminous coal mining, 2.6 per cent; metalliferous mining, 4.4 per cent; crude petroleum producing, 2.2 per cent; telephone and telegraph, 1.4 per cent; power-light-water, 1.4 per cent; electric railroad, 0.8 per cent; wholesale trade, 1.4 per cent; retail trade, 3.2 per cent; canning and preserving, 1.3 per cent; laundries, 0.6 per cent, and dyeing and cleaning, 1.7 per cent.

In manufacturing industries payroll totals increased 7.5 per cent. These figures were based upon returns made by 13,377 establishments in fifty-four of the chief manufacturing industries in the United States.

PRISON CEMENT FACTORY.

The house also passed a free text books bill for children in grade schools.

CONGRESS GAVE HEED TO PLEAS FOR PROGRESS

Many Vital Measures Written Into Laws.

REPORT OF GREEN SHOWS ACTIVITIES

Representatives of American Federation of Labor Give Splendid Account of Stewardship.

The American workers gained an unusually large number of legislative victories during the past session of congress, despite the shortness of the session and the absolute necessity of debating many bills to permit the government to function.

Complete report of activities by the workers' representatives, with the results gained, is given in a communication to The Labor World this week, signed by President Green. Major victories were scored in many instances by the enactment into laws of remedial bills, and of no less importance to the toilers was the defeat of a large amount of proposed legislation regarded as inimical to the interests of the masses.

The report constitutes one of the most powerful arguments ever advanced for the efficiency and effectiveness of the American labor movement, and should be read and reread by every working man and woman in the United States.

It follows:

CONGRESS GAVE EAR TO LABOR.

Organized labor accomplished much while the last session of the Seventy-first congress was in session.

Despite the shortness of the session and the absolute necessity of passing many appropriation bills to permit the government to function and also farm relief measures, both houses of congress gave intense consideration to much of the remedial legislation proposed by labor.

For years we had urged the enactment of legislation that would require contractors erecting federal buildings to pay the prevailing rate of wages. Early in the session Senator Couzens introduced a bill providing for the payment of the prevailing rate of wages and the employment of local labor. This was placed on the appropriation bill as a rider but the house refused to give its approval.

Then a bill became a law providing for the prevailing rate to be paid on all public buildings in the United States and the District of Clumbia by contractors and sub-contractors. If the contracting officer and the contractor cannot agree on the proper wages to be paid the department of labor makes a decision and that is final. The bill was passed and signed by the president and the provisions of the law are being written in all specifications for public buildings.

Other measures that will have far-reaching effect are the Saturday half-holiday laws for more than 450,000 federal employes and the 44-hour week for 150,000 postal employes. When the proposals were first introduced they met with active opposition, but labor continued its agitation and the bills became laws. They will have a great moral effect on private employers.

Two of the three Wagner bills became laws after a most persistent agitation by labor. One of them provides for the advance planning of public works. In good times a commission will consider what public works are necessary and provide all the required plans and specifications. When there is evidence of a depression the plans will be carried out, thus giving employment to many thousands of workers.

The other Wagner bill which became a law provides for the collection of statistics regarding changes in employment, total wages paid, and the total hours of employment in the service of the federal government, the states and political subdivisions thereof. The Wagner bill to cre-

"Greedy and Money Mad Bankers" Roasted As Communist Aides

Washington, March 26.—Representative Hamilton Fish, who as chairman of a house committee investigated communism in America, told a radio audience this week that American technical experts sent to Russia will cost America a loss of a billion a year in exports very soon.

Congressman Fish said the American wheat export market has gone and that it will be followed by the loss of four other commodity markets, including cotton. He paid his respects to pinks and others who befriend communism or advocate recognition of the soviet regime. He said the Scripps-Howard newspapers, on Russian affairs, might as well be edited in Moscow by Stalin, and declared "the only thing American" about the American Civil Liberties union is the use of the word in its title. "Its motto," Mr. Fish said, is, "'My country, right or wrong, I'm against it.'"

"Greedy and money mad bankers" who are helping the soviets by credits and in trade relations were pilloried by Fish as helping world communism and the destruction of democratic civilization.

FRIDAY, MARCH 27, 1931

THE EDITOR'S GOOD; THE EDITOR'S BAD

Here's a Fine Combination of a Boost and a Knock—From James G. Schrock.

In connection with the following communication, The Labor World desires to acknowledge several similar complaints. The list of union labels published occasionally was furnished by our International Service, and for some reason possibly a half-dozen were not included. This paper does not have the "cuts" for these labels, and has no way of securing them directly. If the various secretaries will write to their internationals, however, they may themselves secure cuts for insertion along with the others. Just write your headquarters to send you a small cut of your label, explaining what it is to be used for. Then fetch it down and the editor will be tickled pink to insert it with the others.

Now here's how our old friend "Kid" Schrock expresses his feelings:

Editor Labor World:

In the last issue of The Labor World (March 20) you displayed the familiar countenance of Clarence E. Swick on the first page, with comments from the Typographical Journal — something about a southern gentlemen, adding sage advice to the Typos, etc. We agree with the Journal's comments and thank the editor of The Labor World for reprinting it. We believe the editor of The Labor World means well, but he is either absent-minded or "something." Why in H—ll don't you find some small space in those columns of forty-five union label displays and add the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America? Local 226 is not sore, but wholly sympathetic with

Yours truly,
J. G. SCHROCK.

ATTENTION, HOUSEWIVES!

Editor Labor World:

Do you know? There is a helova lot of misguided ginks in this old world, who claim to be cooks, and are paid real money for such services to others who should be in jail for obtaining money under false pretenses!

Having suffered long and grievously because of the above distressing fact, I feel it my bounden duty to try and tell my poor suffering fellow critters about a couple or three good things to eat that are simple and easily made, even by an old "batch," who can get to some sort of a stove with something to cook it in. In my case, it's a plain iron frying pan. And even for those of us who may have wives to cook for them I can feelingly recommend that they request their wives to try the following recipes:

(I thank you, in advance, for your heartfelt appreciation and thanks.) I don't know the name of this first dish, except "Stewed Tomatoes," and it is to be used for a sauce or any boiled "greens," okra, or even fried corn, and is simply canned or fresh tomatoes (with skins scalded off) stewed down, without bread crumbs, and with only a teapsonful of sugar to a large can or quart of fresh tomatoes, with salt to taste and plenty of black pepper, and, when done, add a lump of butter the size of a walnut to a can or quart. This also makes a tasty fill for a cold sandwich for the kids and is good for them.

No. 2 is identically the above stew of tomatoes, with 10 or 15 cents worth of chipped beef (chop fine with scissors) added at start, being careful about the salt, or, if preferred, stew in small slices of nice tender boiled ham. These two dishes are delightful for a luncheon dish, and for sandwiches for the kids, eaten cold, on return from school.

No. 3. Ah! Now we come to the "piece de resistance," or whatever you call it. It's a South Carolina dish, I admit, and is called a "pine-bark stew," simply because the proper way to cook one is out in the woods, over a pine-bark fire in a pot, hung on a tripost. Preface, beforehand, plenty of tomatoes, good smart onions and small pan-fish, as nearly boneless as you can get them, and a lemon and some Worcestershire sauce. Place alternate layers of tomatoes, onions and fish in the frying pan until it is most full (you will wish the pan was larger later!). Salt to taste, plenty black pepper, cover to top with water and have open to air and cook slowly and do not stir it at all until the top slices of fish are done. Add to one gallon pan of it the juice of one lemon and two tablespconsful of the Worcestershire sauce and let it stand for a little longer. And, in the meantime, on the side, you will have cooked a sizable pot of boiled or steamed rice, properly salted, until it is thoroughly done. To serve, use soup plates; place rice in the plate first and carefully serve the other poured over the rice, with fish on top, as hot as possible, so it won't cool too much, before you remove all bones from fish, serving plenty of juice to each plate and with fresh crackers. You have to mix it and eat with a spoon!

H. F.B.

I notice more and more substantial evidence in sight every day that the ladies (God bless 'em!) are eating much more, these days, than ever before, since I began to observe.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

TENNESSEE'S SHAME.

Conditions at the Brushy Mountain branch prison, revealed by the penal institutions committee in its report to the Sixty-seventh general assembly on March 17, are a disgrace to the fair name of the people of Tennessee.

It is inconceivable that a commonwealth made up of intelligent citizens will longer tolerate the evils existing at Brushy Mountain. The committee, on page 13 of the report, states conditions there approach those "which prevailed in the Siberian prisons under the old Russian regime."

The prison contains 976 white and colored prisoners, for the most part engaged in mining coal from three mines. What part of the coal is not used by state institutions is thrown upon the market in competition with coal from private mining enterprises, thereby working not only a hardship on private mine owners but the miners as well.

The main prison building is a four-story inflammable wooden structure built thirty-five years ago in an emergency to house about 300 or 400 men, but today housing every night close to a thousand souls. Only recently were some inadequate fire escapes erected.

On its visit to the branch prison the committee found 138 prisoners sick of flu and pneumonia on the fourth floor, shut up at night with about 400 other prisoners on that same floor. Seventy other cases of flu were found scattered promiscuously among the prisoners elsewhere in the building. Eight sick prisoners were found in an old shack dubbed a "hospital" located near the main building.

About 70 per cent of the prisoners at Brushy Mountain are young men from 18 to 30 years of age. No means are available where these young men can be housed separately from the old, hardened, criminal type of prisoners, and this contact has developed a condition too horrible for description.

The death rate at Brushy Mountain, the committee reports, is extremely high—being about sixteen times as high as at the main prison in West Nashville. Stabbings are frequent, about 300 of the prisoners carrying dangerous dirk knives fashioned from files and other materials.

The financial loss during 1930 at Brushy Mountain prison, the committee reports Commissioner of Institutions R. H. Lyle as stating, was $85,000, due in most part to the fact that the prison is not self-supporting. The committee therefore recommends the purchase of a tract of land located near the branch prison. Both the present warden, W. H. Nelson, and Commissioner Lyle told the committee that if this property were purchased, the price being about $50,000, the prison could return to the state of Tennessee the cost price of the land in about two years because of the amount of produce the prisoners could raise. The committee further states there is enough sandstone on present state property at Brushy Mountain to furnish stone for new buildings if the state would only furnish tools with which to work the sandstone. The committee states that the prison has been furnished few tools so far and what the prison has are of the poorest quality.

Concluding its report on Brushy Mountain, the committee suggests that either conditions be remedied at this prison or the prison be abolished, the state's holdings sold and the state get out of the mining business altogether.

The report is signed by W. Y. Boswell, chairman; C. L. Johnson, secretary; Senators G. C. Ault and W. P. Monroe; Representatives Dr. J. B. Cross, R. B. Neely, Chesley Alexander, A. M. Moore, Joe George, H. G. Tull, L. F. Stone and W. A. Dyer. A copy is on file at The Labor World office.

SHORTER HOURS MUST COME.

It is an illusion that has been difficult to dispel so far that unionization of some crafts and activities of social agencies has already secured the eight-hour day for the majority of the working people of this country.

It is a matter of record in 1919 only 26 per cent of those employed in manufacture and transportation had the eight-hour day. Today about 38 per cent enjoy the privilege. In restaurants and department stores the arrangement of shifts is often such that, while the actual working time is 10, 11 and 12 hours, the time spent by the waitresses and clerks on the job and between shifts amounts in time value to from 14 to 16 hours! The workers in industries without number work from 9 to 12 hours per day, and in some lines of employment toilers working these long hours must return on Sunday for an equally long stretch.

It has been estimated that if the mechanization of industry continues and the length of the work day is not reduced it will be a general thing for only forty men to be required to do the work of seventy-five, and that formerly required one hundred. Since 1920 the output of American industry has increased enormously and the hours for the workers has, in a majority of cases, remained about the same. Here is a company turning out 10,000 pocket-knives a day, with machines on which 700 knife blades are ground every hour by one operator. Here is an electric light bulb making concern producing 75,000 bulbs every twenty-four hours. Here is a wheat producing area utilizing machinery requiring only 20,000 men to do work that formerly gave work to 50,000. And here are machines used in concrete sewer work that need only thirty-three men, aided by twenty-seven ditchmen, to do the work of 7,000 pick and shovel men. Have the hours on these jobs, picked at random from many like them, been reduced? Not on your life! As a nation we are still on the 10-hour basis in spite of gains made in some lines of industry. Government employes and organized labor have the eight-hour day; a great many workers have the nine-hour day, but for the vast majority they are on the job ten hours or longer.

If the present depression has taught us anything, we have learned at least the full meaning of the misery and suffering that comes out of low wages, mechanization of industry and long hours. Will the lesson be a good one—as well as profitable to us?

DO WE "TURN THE CORNER?"

Our faithful International Labor News Service tells us, in a New York dispatch prepared with obvious care and after obvious research, that industry has "turned the corner" on the basis of the known facts and is headed toward improvement. The dispatch aims to tell wage earners of the situation four months in advance of the usual speed with which such information would reach them.

Another news story tells us that if the modest sum of 75 cents a day were added to the payroll of New England alone it would equal the volume of export trade of that section. Putting these "two and two" together leads to interesting conclusions, though not new ones for us.

A lurching, staggering buying power is beginning to require new goods. That's one point. The other is that with a proper adjustment of wages and hours of work there never needed to have been a depression and there never needs to be another.

We add the third point, which is that we shall never have such a wise and sound adjustment until labor-haters get over their fever and sit down with labor to work things out.

PROGRESSIVES IN CONFERENCE.

The progressive conference held in Washington has agreed on a number of planks, reserving its power plank for further consideration. Naturally, the progressives support anti-injunction legislation, which has also been supported by the American Bar association and which was first demanded by the American Federation of Labor.

The progressive conference surely went a considerable distance down the road with organized labor, even though a beet sugar representative was likewise a member under instructions.

What labor always does is to urge every friend to exert himself to the utmost for progress, for a better life and a fuller life and for more of freedom. Up to this point it no doubt clings to the same viewpoint. We hope, with all the rest of hoping humanity, and we shall throw our hats high in the air when achievement is recorded.

BUSTED!

A $75,000,000 big business octopus, doing business under the name of the Bolt, Nut and Rivet Manufacturers' association and controlling 95 per cent of the industry, has been dissolved by Federal Judge F. J. Coleman. That blow which made this immense bolt, nut and rivet combine fly into pieces was the Sherman anti-trust act, which proves again that along with this law all that is needed is a judge who, when a case subject to the discipline of this anti-trust law is brought into his court, doesn't become stone blind all of a sudden and unable to read the law books in his library. We can't expect to have laws enforced without officers possessing enough integrity to do their duty—we can't expect right decisions in the interpretation of laws without judges on the benches of law courts courageous enough to live up to the title of the office they occupy as public servants—and we can't expect officers of the law to do their duty or judges to rightly interpret laws unless there is a public as strong for law enforcement and as fair-minded as they expect their law officers and judges to be! The public must always make up its mind what it wants and then make its demands known. The Sherman anti-trust act and no other act or law protecting the people's interest would never have been enacted by congress had there not been behind the acts and laws presented to that national body the sentiment and wishes of a majority of the citizens of this republic.

What Next!

The present method of making motion pictures may be completely revolutionized by the new film recently announced by Eastman Kodak. This new film is three times as sensitive to light as that formerly employed. As a consequence many pictures can be made without any artificial lighting, and those where it is used will not require the expensive lighting effects with their attendant heat and glare, that are now essential.

"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XIX.
QUARREL OVER AN ESTATE

The Gospel of Mark, the nearest to the events it records, says in the twelfth chapter, verse, 37, that "the common people heard Him gladly." Social agitators have seized upon this and similar statements in all the Gospels to bolster up their propaganda attacking what they term "social wrongs," attempting to show that Jesus Himself was chief of all social reformers through having come to earth solely as the champion of the downtrodden. But when we consider the above quoted statement in exactly the same sense in which it was written and without removing it from its historical context, this statement, as well as others like it in the Gospels, do not prove one thing about Jesus' actual mission as the Christ. Such statements merely describe some of the people among whom Jesus moved, their state of mind, expectations, etc. Follow Jesus step by step from the beginning of His ministry to its end, you will not find one single hint in the Gospels that He proposed to array one class against another—the poor against the rich, not even the righteous against sinners. Nor at no stage of His ministry did the Master suggest the leveling of all men's ambitions to one common plane. Further, He had no word of condemnation of slavery, offered no system of economics, gave no specific for governing capital and labor, announced no law for the equal distribution of national wealth, gave no advice on the conduct of the home, did not urge the acceptance of any suggestions for housing the aged, the sick and the unfortunate, uttered no brief on behalf of equal suffrage, and so on, ad infinitum. Then what in the world, someone asks, did Jesus do that could be of any service to a world in which these are the real problems of actual living? The answer is: In all His preaching He was careful to lay down not just principles of a social reforming nature or principles of a purely idealistic and aspirational nature, but basic ethical principles. And they were principles not for any one class of men, but ethical principles the application and expansion of which would establish moral sovereignty in every walk of life. Jesus' moral law is summed up in "Be this," not "Do this." The old Mosaic law proclaimed "Do right"—the principle taught by Jesus says "Be good and you will do right." Luther caught His idea: "Precepts show us what to do, but do not impart to us the power to do it." Ovid also: "I perceive the better and approve it, I follow the worse." A Chinese sage voiced it: "I talk about virtue; I cannot rise to perform a single righteous act." A writer in the Talmud was groping for the same truth: "The real and only Pharisee (purist) is the one who does the will of the Father because he loves Him." When a man who was engaged in a dispute with his brother over the division of the estate left to them jointly asked Jesus to be a judge between them—in other words, when Jesus was asked to adjust a "social wrong" (a social wrong in that it was the unjust appropriation of the part of a property that belonged to another) He looked not on the surface of things, where men are wont to look, but looked discerningly, as was always His custom, through what was proclaimed as the wrong and found the cause of the wrong itself. In a few well chosen words and illustrated for further clearness by a parable He disregards the argument between the brothers and uncovered what lay at the root of the whole matter. What did Jesus see?

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

Here and there are enlightened employers who see the utter folly of wage cuts in this time of depression. One of these is a Rhode Island textile factory which has been running at capacity, which says in a letter to the Boston News bureau:

"We think wage reductions that are being put into effect are short-sighted, inadvisable, and futile, and will serve no purpose except to strike another blow at returning confidence."

This view is in refreshing contrast to the action of other Rhode Island textile mills, which have been cutting wages since the first of the year.

"Need women work these hours?" asks the United States women's bureau, in pointing out that the average working week for 76,393 industrial women in North Carolina during the two-year period from July 1, 1928, to July 1, 1930, was one of 58.5 hours, according to the biennial report of the state child welfare commission, which administered the factory inspection laws. Of course there is only one answer to the question of the women's bureau and that is a great big negative.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—In the slang of criminals, what does the word "noble" mean?

A.—This is a word used by modern racketeers to describe a guard for strikebreakers.

Q.—Have Florida and Alabama any laws regulating the hours of work for women?

A.—No. Employers may work women as long as they please in these states.

Q.—Will Canadian and American labor meet in the same city this year?

A.—For the first time, the Trades aud Labor Congress of Canada and the American Federation of Labor will have their annual convention in the same city this year. Canadian labor will meet at Vancouver Sept. 21 and the A. F. of L. will open its convention there Oct. 5.

Dizzy Spells

Mrs. Cora Moshier, of 601 North New Orleans Ave., Brinkley, Ark., writes:

"I was so constipated until I was just sick. I could not stand to take strong medicine, so I decided I would take Black-Draught, and I found it to be all right.

"I would have such dizzy spells, and such bursting headaches, until I could hardly go. But after taking a few doses of Black-Draught, I would feel just fine. It is a good medicine, and I recommend it to all who suffer as I did. It is very easy to recommend a medicine that has done as much for me as Black-Draught has done."

"I think Cardui is a wonderful medicine, for I improved greatly after taking it," says Mrs. A. W. English, of R. F. D. 4, Roanoke, Va. "When I was just a girl of 13, my mother gave this medicine to me, and it did me a great deal of good. I was weak and run-down. After I had taken Cardui awhile, I felt much better.

"In 1924, my health was poor. I felt miserable, and hadn't enough strength to do my housework. It took all my willpower to keep up. I was pale and weak.

"I got Cardui again and took it. My improvement was wonderful. I can recommend Cardui to others, for my health was so much better after I had taken a course of the Cardui Home Treatment."

MORE ABOUT LEGISLATION

ate a federal employment service passed both houses, but was vetoed by the president.

RECORD SHOWS MUCH PROGRESS.

Bills of especial interest to labor which passed congress and became laws are those providing for:

1. Prevailing rates of wages on public buildings.
2. Saturday half-holiday for more than 450,000 federal employes.
3. Advance planning for public works to be constructed during depression.
4. Four-hour day on Saturday for 150,000 postal employes.
5. Creation of a department of labor in Porto Rico.
6. Extension of provisions of the vocational and rehabilitation act to Porto Rico.
7. Retirement act for Panama canal employes.
8. Increase in wages for employes in the custom service.
9. Appropriating $500,000 additional to increase the border immigration patrol.
10. Appropriations of nearly a billion dollars for public works and highways.
11. Appropriation of $178,000 to collect complete statistics of changes in employment, total wages paid, and total hours of employment in the service of the federal government, states and political subdivisions thereof.
12. Modernization of three battleships in the government navy yards and arsenals.
13. Requiring all work on eleven new destroyers at a cost of $51,700,000 to be performed in the navy yards and arsenals when it does not cost appreciably more than by contract. Ten million dollars appropriated to begin construction.
14. Extra compensation for overtime service performed by immigration inspectors and other employes of the immigration service.
15. Books for the adult blind.
16. Appropriating an additional $500,000 for improving the United States employment service.
17. Increase of $200 in wages for railroad locomotive, bureau of safety and hours of service inspectors.

ACTIVITIES BLOCK OBNOXIOUS BILLS.

Several obnoxious bills were defeated through the opposition of labor. The bill providing for the unification of the immigration and customs border patrol passed the house, but failed of passage in the senate. This was opposed by labor on the ground that the object was to enforce only one law—the Volstead act. It was not believed that our immigration service should be contaminated as was the coast gurd.

A bill providing for waiving of trials by jury in the district courts of the United States passed the house but was not acted upon by the senate. A jury trial is a right guaranteed by the constitution and labor will insist upon its retention.

Because of congestion in the senate, Senator Norris and other senatorial friends of labor recommended that no effort be made in the last session to press our anti-injunction bill. Senator Norris thought it would be best to let it go over until the next session when there would be a better chance for its favorable passage. As Senator Norris is leading the fight for our anti-injunction legislation we accepted his advice. No man in the senate has more knowledge of what can and cannot be done than Senator Norris. He is also well informed as to the proper time to press our legislation.

MANY DISPLEASE CHIEF EXECUTIVE.

Several bills supported by labor passed congress but were vetoed by the president. An increase of $100 per year for 926 underpaid village letter carriers met with the disapprovel of the president. It was given a pocket veto. The Muscle Shoals bill which provided a practical method of disposing of that great project and would give work to thousands of unemployed met with a veto.

Maternity and infancy bills passed both houses, but failed of passage because the filibuster in the senate prevented discussion of amendments.

The house passed the immigration quotas of 90 per cent. The same percentage also applied to countries in the western hemisphere. The bill reached the senate during the filibuster and despite frequent efforts to have it taken up and acted upon it failed to pass although a great majority of the senators would have voted favorably.

One bill that would have passed the house by a large majority was not permitted to come to a vote through trickery. This was the seamen's bill which had passed the senate. It provided that a vessel should take as many seamen away from the United States as it brought here. It is the practice to smuggle immigrants into the country by passing them off as seamen. A ship will bring in from 25 to 100 immigrants as extra "seamen" and they will remain in this country. Many of these are Chinamen and others from the barred zone. The big shipping interests both foreign and domestic fought the bill. Representative Free, of California, gave great assistance to the shipowners to defeat the bill.

A bill providing for the industrial education of persons who lost their jobs through the introduction of machinery so that they may engage in some other occupation passed the house but was lost in the filibuster in the senate.

The Saturday half-holiday bill for all employes of the government except in the postal service, passed the house March 2 after most earnest efforts to have it put to a vote. The chairman of the civil service committee had been promised by the speaker a few days before that he would recognize him to move to suspend the rule to pass the bill, but it was not until March 2 that the recognition was given. Besides civil service employes of the government the employes of all federal courts come under the law.

"EQUAL RIGHTS" BILL MEETS OPPOSITION.

Hearings on the objectionable equal rights amendment to the constitution of the United States were held, but the opposition was so great in both houses of congress that no action was taken. If the proposed amendment would be ratified by the states all state laws to protect women would be made void and congress thereafter would enact all laws in relation to women. This would be a burden at which members of congress rebelled. Labor opposed the proposed amendment vigorously.

Efforts to increase first-class postage rates were unavailing as the secretary of the postoffice department could not find a congressman who was willing to introduce a bill to that effect. They took the same stand as labor, that the postoffice department was created for service not for profit.

The Howell home-raid bill which permitted the raiding of homes without a warrant was killed in the senate.

Another bill that passed the house and was lost in the filibuster in the senate provided copyright legislation.

Earnest efforts were made by the American Federation of Labor to prohibit the importation of manganese, lumber, matches and other goods, wares or merchandise, manufactured, mined or produced wholly or in part by convict, forced or indentured labor. Representatives of the American Federation of Labor appeared before committees of both house and senate and also the bureau of customs and urged this legislation.

Owing to the increase in the importation of crude oil which made 100,000 oil workers idle the American Federation of Labor advocated an embargo on that product. This legislation failed, owing to the influence of the oil companies that import the oil.

Radio legislation granting WCFL a clear channel failed because Representative White, chairman of the merchant marine and fisheries committee, refused to call a meeting of the conferees to act upon amendments made in the senate. The senate had amended the bill to grant WCFL a clear channel.

ALL VETERANS' BILLS WERE SUPPORTED.

All bills in the interest of farm relief and for the relief of ex-service men were supported by the American Federation of Labor. Some of them became laws.

Hearings on old-age pension legislation were held by committees of the senate and house and representatives of the American Federation of Labor explained the attitude of the American Federation of Labor.

Companion bills for the Sunday closing of barber shops were introduced. The senate passed the bill and the house reported it favorably, but a vote for its passage was not taken.

Bills to permit credit unions in the District of Columbia were reported favorably in both houses but only passed the senate. Bills that would prohibit loan sharks and protect persons who are in need of small loans were reported favorably in both houses but failed of passage because of the congestion.

Labor supported a bill introduced by Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, providing for a five-day week for all government employes. This will become a leading issue in the next congress.

It will thus be seen that labor was unusually active in support of social justice legislation, and while some of the bills urged met with defeat most of these passed one house. At the same time most objectionable legislation was defeated.

Owing to the fact that the next congress will be almost evenly divided politically, and the presidential election will occur in 1932, we have every reason to believe that we will succeed in our efforts to secure additional remedial legislation.

The officers of the American Federation of Labor deeply appreciate the support which practically all the officers and members of national and international unions, state federations of labor and city central bodies gave in the efforts we put forth to secure the enactment of the legislation herein enumerated.

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

Industry Turns Corner, Figures For March Show

"Worst Hole Since Gay Nineties" Begins to Lose Horror—Sixty Industries Record Gains—Key Indicators Turn Up.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, March 26.—The output of automobiles, steel, cotton cloth, petroleum, electric energy and freight car loadings each rose during the first week in March.

If the rate of increase for the first two weeks should continue throughout March the month's total would show a gain several times as great as is to be expected solely on seasonal grounds.

When the most important March returns are in, the advance guard of economists and statisticians will be pointing out that business is soundly on the upgrade. But by time the business public becomes convinced of this fact it will be May—from two to four months after the big corporations have adjusted their plans to the public's requirements.

The question all ask is whether business actively and as a whole has begun to rise out of the worst hole it has been in since the "gay nineties." The best over-all measure of industrial activity is probably the index of the federal reserve board during winter and early spring. This shows the composite daily average production during each month of sixty leading industries, taking the average of the years 1923 to 1925 as 100. The December index read 78, January 82 and February would indicate a further increase. Standard Statistics shows an increase of 2 per cent from January to February. These points would indicate that the bottom has been reached, industrially speaking, and that we are on the upgrade.

Several of the boys are off on account of sickness. Sub Carrier McGill has been off for several weeks. Frank Cook, who has been off some time, is still unable to return to work. Met J. H. Reneau on the street and noticed he had discarded his cane and is feeling much better and hopes to be able to return to work by the first of the month (he is a good advertisement for the osteopath). Clarence Oakes was off Thursday; am unable to say what for. H. B. Massey was off the week-end on account of sickness in his uncle's family, who lives up the country. J. H. Johns returned to work Thursday morning after a week off with his feet. Earl Miller and W. J. Griffitts got back to work. The old Scotchman, Tom McPherson, was off a day or two this week.

Ask J. L. Turner if he has used up that case of eggs yet.

Supt. John L. Walker bought a can of syrup and Massey, Echols and Lawrence Miller got some bread and sopped the syrup until Mr. Walker beat them off. He had to strain it to get the crumbs out.

During the recent city election M. Echols said the News said that Bass ought not to be re-elected mayor and the Times said Landress should not be, so as he heard no one berate the communist candidate he just voted for him.

Oakes tells this one as having happened on his route. A man rushed in to a store asking to use the phone. The grocer thought he wanted a doctor or ambulance, pushed the phone over to him and, calling the police station, he asked that they send a load of policemen up there, as a man had caught him with his wife and was going to kill him.

A bride, after the ceremony, asked her friend if she appeared nervous. Her dear friend says, "A little at first, dear, but not after George had said 'Yes.'"

After ringing for a bellhop for ten minutes, one came and asked, "Did you ring, sir?" "No, indeed. I was just tolling; I thought you were dead."

"My son," said the fond mother, "you must not shoot craps, for life is just as precious to the poor little craps as it is to us."

Supports(?) Wife And Several Kids On $7.50 Per Week

But Drug Clerk Only Has to Work 79½ Hours for That Sum—Complaint Would Mean Loss of "Position."

Greensboro, N. C., March 19.—He works in perhaps the oldest drug store in the city of O. Henry's birth. It is hardly daybreak these early spring days when his little wife rouses him from slumber to begin the day's grind. He goes on duty early and dispenses "dopes" that have very little syrup and very much ice water until eight-hour workers have long since turned their thoughts to the evening's movie or other entertainment. At home several kiddies and a sad-eyed little wife await his return.

In other days the chap ended the week with exactly $15 in his pay envelope. Came the depression of the past winter and now he finds a scant $7.50 in that pay envelope. But he works a full 79½ hours for that.

Perhaps his case is a singular one. More likely, and almost surely, if common reports are true, he is just another pitiful victim of the epidemic of wage cutting that is running the length and breadth of North Carolina.

Can he protest now that his wages will not stretch over rent, fuel, clothes and food for himself and that little wife and those kiddies? What chance would he have. Plenty of men, hungry men eager for a chance to get acquainted with a dime or a quarter, are walking the streets. Complain, and one of those hungry men from the streets will be found behind his marble counter in the morning. The soda jerkers and clerks of Greensboro have no union for protection.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Tenth Surrender To Union Cheers Hosiery Strikers

Fashion-Made Mills Make Settlement and 150 Workers Return to Jobs in Big Philadelphia Walkout.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelphia, March 26.—With the Fashion-Made mills in this city, employing some 150 workers, settling up, making the tenth settlement since the big strike of full fashioned hosiery workers began more than a month ago, the spirit of the 2,500 strikers still out is high. The agreement was made in an exchange of letters with officials of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers.

Despite bad weather, with a driving snow some of the time, heavy picket lines have been maintained. On the country roads around the city the wind has blown pretty keenly at 6 o'clock in the mornings when the first pickets have arrived at the lines, but the girls and young fellows have not been daunted by the miserable weather or the earliness of the hour. There were no breaks in the ranks as the fifth week of the strike began.

Friday, the 13th, was one of the record-breaking days for arrests, about 200 persons being arrested at two different mills. At one plant Maj. Schofield, director of public safety, said he was refusing to let anyone picket for several days because a riot had taken place earlier in the week. He did not mention, however, that the riot was caused solely and simply because his own cops charged a group of peaceful pickets and beat them so badly that three had to be taken to the hospital. When the union found that pickets were being refused permission to parade volunteers were asked for and arrests kept up all day until the cops got fed up.

At another plant about one hundred arrests were made before the pickets had properly reached the line. The strikers were arrested as soon as they came near the plant and bundled into the Black Maria. Magistrates discharged everybody, although one officious judge kept a crowd of 90 cooped up in his court for two hours while he was supposed to be investigating a complaint against some one in the crowd.

"It means so much to the children"

Consider for a moment how much your name in this book will mean to you and your family. Your position in your community, your family's social activities, your opportunities to enjoy life require that you be always within quick and easy reach of your friends and business associates. A telephone in your home provides for these contacts.

"Frank and I always felt that we could get along without a telephone—it actually took the children to show us what we have been missing."

"Since the children have entered high school they have made a number of friends and they missed not being able to talk to them over a telephone of their own. Most of their friends have telephones and use them to arrange their social activities—parties, theatre, visits. So Frank and I decided that we must have a telephone and when we found how little it cost we ordered one installed at once."

"Of course we said that we were doing it for the children, but I was in for quite a surprise. I believe I actually use it almost as frequently as the children."

There's no need for any family to do without a telephone nowadays—its small cost is more than offset by the comfort and convenience it brings. For immediate installation call the Business Office—or see any telephone employe.

KEEN INTEREST DEVELOPED IN STATE MEETING

Jackson Convention Seen as Vital Gathering.

MANY LOCALS PLAN REPRESENTATION

Legislative Program Given Added Impetus by Unusual Conditions.

A regrettable error in last week's issue of The Labor World gave the date of meeting of the Tennessee State Council of Carpenters as March 30-31. Trades unionists generally know that the Carpenters' body holds its sessions each year just prior to the convening of the State Federation sessions, in the same city in which the federation meets. The Carpenters will therefore hold forth in Jackson on Thursday and Friday, April 30-May 1.

Unusual conditions which face the organized labor movement of Tennessee, as well as of the nation, are responsible for keen interest in the coming sessions of the state federation of labor, whose annual convention will be held at Jackson beginning Monday, May 4, and lasting probably three days.

From all sections of the state come stories to the effect that while many craft organizations have been hard hit financially by unemployment of their members, arrangements are being made to insure representation of scores of locals, in order that discussion of the many problems may have widest scope, and action taken the fullest effect.

Central Body will choose its three representatives at the regular meeting one week from next Monday night. Local unions are expected to elect at their regular April meetings, and it is believed that Chattanooga will be well represented, as usual.

Gravity of the situation was pointed out in the call issued last week by President Aymon and Secretary Birthright, and the necessity for a full attendance was urged. The fact that the legislature will reconvene on May 25 has given renewed importance to the annual labor session, due to the large number of vital measures in the interest of the masses to be considered by the general assembly. President Aymon has recently spent considerable time in Nashville assisting the joint committee of the federation and the rail brotherhoods, of which he is a member. The legislative program will therefore constitute a considerable part of the convention's deliberations.

Basis of representation is given as follows:

Basis of Representation

Article III, Section 3. The Tennessee Federation of Labor shall be composed of one delegate from each trade union and labor organization in the state. Trades and labor councils and district bodies shall be entitled to three delegates. All bodies must be affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Section 6. No delegate shall be admitted to a seat in the convention whose organization is in arrears for dues or assessments to this body or who is not a qualified voter.

Section 7. No proxy shall be allowed in the convention.

Article X, Section 8. No delegate shall be seated in the annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor unless the organization is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; this shall not apply, however, to fraternal delegates from farmers' unions. Nor shall a delegate be seated who does not wear union-made clothes, if same can be obtained in the community in which he lives, nor any delegate who is in charge of any work that can be done with union labor who does not use same, when charges to this effect are sustained. Credentials are enclosed herewith in duplicate. The original must be filled out and given the delegate to be presented at the convention. The duplicate must be filled out and mailed at once to W. C. Birthright, secretary - treasurer, 307 Polk avenue, Labor Temple, Nashville, Tennessee.

Mrs. James A. Ball Back From Florida

Mrs. James A. Ball and children returned last week from an extended visit with relatives in Florida. "Jim-Jam," popular tonsoral artist at the Broadway shop, has begun to smile again, and customers express themselves as highly pleased with the return of his "sweet disposition," as George Forbes would describe it.

LABOR'S HOPE IS UNIONISM, EASTERN BISHOP'S ADVICE

Fall River, Mass., April 2.—"The cotton operative is being forced into a condition very little removed from servitude," declared Bishop James E. Cassidy, in a series of articles in a local newspaper.

The clergyman quoted this passage from the 1891 encyclical of Pope Leo XIII:

"A small number of very rich men have been able to lay upon the masses of the laboring poor a yoke little better than slavery itself."

Bishop Cassidy said that the cure of Fall River's industrial ills is "universal and unanimous and united unionism among employes."

The clergyman deplored the lack of unity between labor, and made a spirited plea for trade unionism.

"How these divisions between workers must gladden the hearts of the manufacturers," he said. "I am not going to dwell unnecessarily upon the short-sightedness of men and women who are so blind to their own interests as to fail to recognize that battling, as they must battle, for right, they are un-united and unorganized, beaten before they begin—and that their only hope for obtaining anything like justice lies in their ability to present a united and unbroken front.

"I am cognizant of the treacheries of the past, but a betrayed cause is not a lost cause, if it is righteous.

"I am not going to fitly, as I might, characterize the conduct of the worker who, declining to unite, lets union workers do all the fighting and get all the punishment—and then steps in and profits and prospers with the 'boss' as 'non-union.'"

Bishop Cassidy said he appreciated the forces arrayed against unionism—the present inability to pay dues, the diversity of tongues and racial animosities.

"Yet, I am convinced," he said, "that the cotton operative must unite. He must not be deterred by any illegal or unconstitutional attempt to prevent him from joining any lawful organization he may think is for his betterment."

Central Labor Bodies to Help In Label Drive

Are Ready to Push Big Campaign During April in Many Cities—Keen Interest Shown All Over Nation.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 2.—Keen interest is being shown in the nation-wide campaign during April for the union label, shop card and button and the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor is kept busy responding to requests for union label literature and information on the drive. From present indications, the campaign will be the most successful ever carried on under the direction of the Union Label Trades Department.

Central labor unions in every section of the nation are manifesting great enthusiasm for the label campaign and a long list has already made arrangements to co-operate.

Secretary-Treasurer John J. Manning, of the Union Label Trades Department, urges that all central bodies take part in the campaign. He points out that all affiliated local unions will be greatly benefited by it.

Plumbers Postpone State Conference

Convening of the State Association of Plumbers and Steamfitters, scheduled to be held at Nashville Sunday, April 5, has been postponed until the 19th, according to E. S. Stacy, vice-president. Mr. Stacy said the organization, formed last December, would discuss in the coming meeting matters of interest to all these craftsmen in the state, and he expects all locals to be represented at Nashville on the date last agreed upon.

Judge Miller Talks To Circle Members

The Hon. L. D. Miller, judge of the second division of the criminal court, was a guest of honor at Circle club Monday night, and addressed the members along general lines having to do with court procedure and other matters. The jurist was well received, and his remarks were enjoyed by the small number of members present.

Unemployed Relief Urged by Workers

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A trade union mass meeting, called by the Central Labor council, indorsed the State Federation of Labor's unemployed relief program. The plan provides for a state appropriation of $10,000,000.

Philip Murray, vice-president United Mine Workers of America, declared that an examination of conditions in this country "reveal the inadequacy of local relief organizations to meet the situation.

"Here is a condition where thousands of men and women willing to work cannot find employment of any kind," said the miners' official. "The cry of the dole system is going to be used to keep food out of the mouths of our starving people."

John A. Phillips, president State Federation of Labor, said that the A. F. of L. recognized trends toward present conditions as far back as 1925 and warned employers that purchasing power must be increased.

"That warning was disregarded," said President Phillips, "and now we are in the midst of the greatest crisis in our history. President Hoover, late in 1929, called in industrial leaders, employers and union representatives and employers agreed to discontinue wage reductions. Yet there have been more wage reductions since that meeting than at any other time during the past ten years."

Minister Urges Church Take Lead In Human Welfare

Utter Foolishness to Talk of Freedom of Contract Without Collective Bargaining, Clergyman Tells Conference.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Greensboro, N. C., April 2.—Talking a mile a minute and raining ideas like bullets, the Rev. Ronald J. Tamblyn, pastor of Grace Methodist Protestant church and former president of the Greensboro Ministerial association, told the southern industrial conference of the National Women's Trade Union League of America that he felt the church has definite contributions to make in the industrial processes of the day, since human relations as well as machines are involved in industry.

Tamblyn told of being informed by a Greensboro industrialist recently that he could have no interest, as pastor of his church, in the industrialist's employes. Applause greeted his statement that he was determined to make it his business.

Tamblyn, who mixes brains and courage with startling success, pointed to the tradition of the church in taking a lead in matters relating to human welfare. He said he felt that certain changes must be made in the church itself.

"If you don't have a piano now, you will get one in the next world."

That is a beautiful thing to say to people who have been disinherited, Tamblyn remarked.

The speaker termed it utter foolishness to talk of freedom of contract without the addition of collective bargaining and he described the individual worker seeking freedom of contract by himself as a "pathetic little figure."

6,050,000 Workless, January, This Year

Washington.—There were 6,050,000 able bodied persons in this country out of work, and seeking employment, the latter part of January, this year, according to figures released by the census bureau.

This estimate is based on the census bureau's special count of unemployed that started Jan. 15 in nineteen of the larger cities. A house-to-house canvass was made by 4,700 enumerators.

The 6,050,000 unemployed did not include persons having jobs but who are laid off without pay. Workers laid off have no income, but they were not in this count.

Members of congress declare that the figure reveals the necessity for an extra session.

Senator Wheeler said: "If these official figures had been known before congress adjourned on March 4 the session would not have ended without doing something for general relief."

Mr. Wheeler added that congress might have adopted either his program appropriating $100,000,000 for relief, or the plan of Senator Walsh (Mass.) to use a like sum in connection with appropriations by the states.

Secretary of Commerce Lamont, before sailing to Bermuda for a vacation, expressed gratification that "conditions are getting no worse."

"Of course," he continued, "I am an optimist that the ranks of those out of work will be reduced—one must be an optimist over such a condition."

A week before the census bureau count started, the chairman of the president's employment committee announced that the number of unemployed was "between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000."

Prior to this statement lower estimates were periodically made.

None of these estimates include farm laborers and government officials refused to classify as "unemployed" those who have a job, but who are laid off.

Speaking of endurance flights, a local man has been up 48 hours. The baby has the colic.

COAL MINERS SEEK HAVEN OF FEDERATION

Kentucky-Tennessee Workers Plan Organization.

DISCUSS CONDITIONS AT MASS MEETINGS

Will Seek Arbitration of Differences With District Mine Operators.

That long-suffering and patient coal miners of Kentucky and Tennessee are on the verge of an industrial rebellion against conditions which defy description, forced upon them by greedy operators, and are determined to seek the protection of the United Mine Workers of America and the trade union movement in general, is indicated in stories coming from the heart of the Tennessee and Kentucky mine districts. Mass meetings which have been held in various centers during the past few weeks have developed the fact, it is said, that the "worm has turned" and the coal diggers are pleading for aid from the only source possible—their fellow workers.

Charging that twenty coal miners had been fired for attending a mass meeting held in Pineville, Ky., three weeks before and declaring that the 1,000 miners before him faced the wrath of the operators and possible discharge for their presence, William Turnblazer, president of the Nineteenth district of the United Mine Workers of America, stirred his hearers at a meeting recently at LaFollette to a high pitch and paved the way, it is believed, for a general organization of mine workers. Key men are to be sent out in a few days to enroll miners in the union, it was stated.

Turnblazer told his audience that Joe Stonecipher, superintendent of the Blue Diamond company, at Eagan, was said to have threatened to discharge any man who attended the LaFollette meeting, and that when he telephoned Stonecipher in regard to the report, the latter had replied, "It's none of your business."

"There is one company in Campbell county that is charging its men $1.50 a month for shower baths in violation of the state law," Turnblazer charged, "while another company is charging men 7½ cents a day for the use of electric lights when the miners do not use them."

An article from the Knoxville News-Sentinel was read, in which an official of the Southern Appalachian Coal Operators' association was quoted as denying any wage reduction in this district.

"Is that true?" Turnblazer demanded of his audience. A thundering "No" rolled back in answer.

"Are you forced to trade at company stores and to pay a bath tax and an electric head-lamp tax?"

Again came back a mighty "Yes."

Capt. Percy Tetlow, of Columbus, O., personal representative of President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, and president of the United Mine Workers of Indiana, declared that 30,000,000 persons were suffering because of "unsound economic conditions," with "hunger existing in the face of plenty." He said that the miner was producing 40 per cent more coal than ten years ago, yet wages were cut 50 per cent, and that unsound wage-cutting ideas had rendered the workers unable to purchase in proportion to what they produce.

"If you will get in the union and back it up, the things for which it stands, you will find the remedy for your situation," Capt. Tetlow declared. He said that northern miners received almost 'twice as much as was paid in the south. "Up there we are organized," he said, "and although we are not getting rich, we are faring as well as could be expected under present conditions.

"There is going to be an awakening among you southerners some day—just how soon I cannot say, but just as soon as you realize you must help yourselves. The power rests entirely with you and must come from you."

The speaker said the purpose of organization should not be to agitate strikes or to start fights, but for the privilege of arbitration with mine operators and government representatives.

STATE CHILDREN'S CARE CAUSED BY DEPRESSION

Albany, N. Y.—The marked increase in the number of children cared for by the state is a direct reflection of the economic depression, according to a report of the state board of social welfare.

At the end of 1930 there were 80,000 children under care in institutions and family homes throughout the state, of whom 48,000 were cared for in their own homes on mothers' allowances and 10,000 boarded in family homes.

WAGE CONTRACTS RENEWED.

Cleveland. — Organized carpenters and building laborers renewed wage agreements with employers. There will be no change in rates or working conditions.

SLICK BOOKKEEPING HIDES BONUS PAID FAVORED STEEL "INSIDERS"

New York, April 2.—The Bethlehem Steel corporation was so clever in concealing $31,800,000 secretly voted to officials that the money could not be discovered by "the most astute analyst."

This statement is contained in a letter forwarded to 80,000 stockholders by a committee who ask that they be given proxies to vote in opposition to the secret bonus system at the annual meeting of the company on April 14.

"The amount of the bonuses is most unseemly and improper," the committee states. "The president, Mr. Grace, it now appears, received in the year 1929 a bonus of $1,623,753, and in the year 1930 a bonus of $1,015,591. During the period (1917-1930) in which these bonuses for executive officers have been in force, and up to the close of 1928, there has been taken out of the corporate treasury for this purpose $31,878,255, as against $40,886,996 paid to common stockholders.

"In the four years 1925-1928, inclusive, when not a dollar of dividends was paid to common stockholders, $6,800,524 in bonuses was paid to these few favored directors and other executives. The president (Grace) alone took $3,105,963 as bonuses during these years. Although the company in 1930 failed to earn its dividend it nevertheless paid a bonus of $1,015,591 in that year to its president."

Charles M. Schwab, chairman board of directors, publicly defends these bonuses. The committee says Schwab's statement is "far removed from the truth."

Stockholders have started a suit in the Newark (N. J.) federal district court to secure the return of these funds. The committee was forced to secure a court order compelling the officers to give them a list of stockholders.

The secret bonuses were exposed at the recent court suit in Youngstown, Ohio, that blocked a proposed merger of the Bethlehem concern with Youngstown Sheet and Tube company.

Green Advocates Heavy Taxes on Big War Profits

But Labor Head Opposes Conscription of Private Property, in Testifying Before War Policies Commission.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 2.—Recapture of excess profits made during wartime through heavy taxes was advocated by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, in testifying before the war policies commission. He voiced opposition to wartime conscription of private property.

Mr. Green said that he recommended no legislation or constitutional amendment for "taking the profits out of war." He opposed a suggestion, previously made, that the commission recommend a constitutional amendment providing for confiscation of property, saying, "In my judgment the government already has the power to commandeer private property in wartime, so the amendment would be unwise."

"Have you a plan for taking the profits out of war?" he was asked by Secretary of War Hurley.

Regulating Profits Difficult

"How to control and regulate economic forces disturbed by the emergency of war is a very difficult problem," replied Mr. Green. "No rigid policy could be pursued in regulating prices, and you must regulate prices in order to regulate profits. I think the best way to regulate is for the government to recapture excess profits through heavy war-profit taxes."

Capital conscription was opposed also by E. J. Lovell, legislative agent and vice-president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

"The World War taught us the necessity of increased efficiency," he said, "and although we hope there will never be another war, this commission has a large opportunity in eliminating the undue profits and undue suffering of future wars."

Efficiency Urged

In the last war, he said, millions were spent which, with added efficiency, could have been avoided.

Mr. Lovell recommended that the commission make an effort to co-ordinate the manufacture of supplies of war so that in the event of war supplies could be obtained without the adoption of a "cost-plus" plan.

He expressed himself as strongly opposed to the conscription of labor.

Police Chief Fails To Force Wage Cut

Philadelphia.—Hosiery workers in this city and in other sections of Eastern Pennsylvania report gains in their strike against wage reductions. The strike is handled by the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, a unit of the United Textile Workers.

Organized labor aroused public opinion against strike-breaking efforts of Director of Public Safety Schofield. More than 500 pickets were arrested in less than a week, but the union met Schofield's thuggery with a courage that equaled his lawlessness.

Seven of the non-union mills in this city reached an agreement with the union and guarantee union wages, hours and conditions.

The anti-union employers conducted an advertising campaign in the local press, and the union asked for an investigation of conditions. Mayor Mackey appointed a commission, which was accepted by the unionists. The employers failed to appear.

One mill manager sneered: "Rabbis and college professors don't know anything about the hosiery business." This mill manager has failed to induce an equity court "to protect my workers so they can come back on the job."

Jack Kugelman, manager of the anti-union Artcraft mill and holder of a year-old injunction against the union, presented the typical anti-union view of the mayor's committee: "It's O. K. with me if it doesn't mean arbitration."

Hosiery Bosses, Desperate, Lie To Avert Defeat

Employers Embark on Vicious Campaign to Beat Union, as State-wide Victory for Workers Looms.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelphia, April 2.—Desperation has become the lot of the hosiery manufacturers as the union's strike sweeps on to increasing victory all over the state.

So effective is the struggle of the members of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers against the yellow dog contract, long hours and wage cuts, that the manufacturers from Stroudsburg to Philadelphia have thrown pretense to the winds and embarked on vicious, illegal and lying attempts to avert their inevitable defeat.

Eleven settlements placing 1,200 workers under union conditions have been effected in the Philadelphia general strike while the manufacturers have resorted to injunctions, police suppression and subterfuge to keep the facts of the strike from the public.

Appearing before Mayor Mackey's fact-finding committee for the second time, Arno P. Mowitz, attorney for thirty open shops, gave the committee headed by Dr. William H. Fineshriber no concrete facts concerning wages or hours in any mill.

Assailing the union's national agreement with union manufacturers as a contract "socializing the industry and placing the union in control of the mills," the attorney presented the committee with a meaningless jumble of figures which he contended proved that non-union workers are the best paid in the land.

"Compare their wages with workers in other industries," he told Dr. George Wharton Taylor, authority on the hosiery industry, but was shocked when Taylor suggested comparing the open shop payrolls with union hosiery mill payrolls. "That wouldn't be fair," Mowitz moaned.

The success of the Philadelphia strike is emphasized by Mowitz's admission that the Apex mill, the largest in the city, has decided not to place its case before the public through the fact-finding committee.

U. S. Bureau Resists State Minimum Wage

Madison, Wis.—Gov. La Follette's effort to establish a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour for laborers on state road work may be nullified or Wisconsin may lose its annual $3,000,000 federal aid road appropriation.

The Wisconsin highway commission, at the request of Gov. La Follette, will insist that contractors on road work shall base estimates on a minimum of 40 cents an hour for laborers.

"Failure to observe these regulations," the resolution declares, "will remove such contractor from the approved list of contractors."

The United States bureau of public roads is opposed to the Wisconsin plan and has forwarded this telegram to the state highway commission:

"The federal road bureau is opposed to insertion of minimum wage stipulations on federal aid projects. Would favor wage prevailing in community where work is performed."

"The opposition expressed in this telegram," says the Capitol Times, "constitutes a threat to the present successful establishment of the 40-cent per hour minimum on Wisconsin road projects which receive federal aid.

"If this opposition becomes active, Wisconsin will either be forced to abolish its minimum wage requirement, now included in road contracts, or lose its annual $3,000,000 federal aid appropriation. The former would nullify Gov. La Follette's efforts, which have been successful, and the latter would wreck Wisconsin's highway program."

HUGE SUMS IN BANKS' VAULTS; TOILERS STARVE

Idle Money Should Be Used, Says Banker.

BUYING POWER IS STAGNATED

Use of Available Cash for Wages Would Hasten Return of Prosperity.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York, April 2.—There's at least a billion dollars idle in banks that should be put to work at once, some in dividends, some in assurance of a weekly minimum wage to employes, releasing enormous buying power and hurrying prosperity back.

So says Bertram O. Moody, vice-president of the First National bank of Amherst, Mass., slamming right crash bang through the middle of the wage cutting idea fostered by that other banker, Albert H. Wiggin, of the big Chase National of New York.

Banker Moody, in the Bankers' Association Journal, says there is at least a billion in idle money, held by various corporations that retired their bonds and preferred stocks in the prosperous years, and financed the increases in their plant capacity chiefly by the issue of "rights" to their stockholders. Some of them even secured money by this means far beyond their reasonable needs, and were in a position to become lenders instead of borrowers. They put much of their money into the call money market during the boom, money which their stockholders had borrowed at the banks in order to get the "bargain." This money is in the banks—and nobody seems to have any use for it.

Mr. Moody now suggests:

"Let us suppose it were possible for corporations with excessive cash resources to distribute over a period of, say, the next year, enough cash to bring their current asset position down to a comfortable figure. This distribution might be in the form of dividends to stockholders, or an assurance of a weekly minimum wage to employes as long as possible, or both.

"Probably a billion dollars could be released by this action — possibly more.

"It is interesting to follow the possible results.

"First would come a reduction of money held by corporations in banks and a like increase in money held by individuals. Much of this money would in turn be used by individuals to reduce their bank loans, largely secured by securities purchased at much higher prices than now prevail, and which are now being liquidated by the slow and painful process of taking money from current earnings month by month in a period when earnings, in many instances, are curtailed.

"The reduction of collateral loans would release frozen credit in the banks, and they would resort to the bond market, the commercial paper channels, and the call money market, all of which would be far more liquid than collateral loans.

"Furthermore, when business again started to expand, the corporations, not being so heavily endowed with money, would turn again to their banks and to the commercial paper market for funds, and the banks would have outlets for investment on a profitable basis. They would then be utilizing their resources as was originally intended—for the granting of commercial loans.

"But not all the money so released would go toward the reduction of collateral loans.

"Many people would buy securities; others would reduce mortgages on homes; others would buy life insurance or put money in the savings banks, and—what is still more sorely needed—there would be a tremendous amount of buying power released for the purchase of necessities and luxuries of all kinds. We need not go into a discussion as to what a portion of a billion dollars in buying power could accomplish in restoring prosperity."

Government Wheat Clogs Warehouses

Washington.—How will the government dispose of its 200,000,000 bushels of wheat that the federal farm board bought in a futile attempt to hold wheat prices?

This question is being discussed by Washington officials.

There are two problems connected with the wheat issue: How to dispose of this grain without a loss to the government, and how can it be disposed of without jamming the 1931 market.

The department of agriculture has called for drastic reduction in this year's wheat planting if a congested market is to be avoided. If government wheat is thrown on the market disaster is predicted.

The federal farm board has abandoned the plan to buy wheat in an effort to hold prices. The scheme has failed and the board notifies farmers that the only way to hold prices is to produce less.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

WITH something like twenty billions of human beings living on the earth today about 4 per cent of this number control all the wealth. Of the 4 per cent about 2.98 per cent live free of every care in life. The larger proportion of the twenty billions, or 96 per cent, are busily engaged in life as wage-earners in the production of the goods necessary for the daily sustenance of, not only themselves, but for the enrichment as well as sustenance of the 4 per cent.

Of the 96 per cent something like 10 per cent ("the submerged tenth") live in what human society has always designated as poverty. During the last three decades a slight change has come about in this estimate of the number of poverty-stricken folks in the world and it is more correct to say about 9.50 per cent of the world's people are living in poverty.

Theoretically, humankind prides itself on its self-made dictum: "Every man must work if he eats." From a practical standpoint, this is made to apply to only the 96 per cent of the human family mentioned above. From time immemorial human beings have been aware of the fact that no man can live apart from his fellow-creatures. Like an unending chain, what one man lacks another must supply. Our life's existence, then, depends, in the last analysis, on the presence of other persons in the world. And so men have always pooled their efforts to wring from the earth their food and through exchange pass it along to one another. For ages humanity has worked shoulder to shoulder for what is supposed to be the common good—production of the necessities of life. Thus there has been created what we shall hereafter refer to in this series of editorials as Industry.

Now, out of this gigantic, world-wide, unending moil and toil, out of this ceaseless grind on the part of 96 per cent of the world's inhabitants to keep up production, and making its presence known by its focalization at millions of different points every day, has arisen what we shall call the Industrial Problem.

Painful Condition

"WHEN I was just a girl at home," writes Mrs. B. F. Riggan, of Baird, Texas, "I took Cardui for cramping and pains in my side and back, and it helped me at that time.

"After I was married, I found myself in a weak, run-down condition. I suffered a great deal with my back, which was so weak it hurt me to get up or when I would stand on my feet. I fell off in weight.

"A friend of mine, seeing how bad I felt, advised me to take Cardui, which I did. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt stronger and better than I had in a long time."

WAGE CUTS NO REMEDY.

One of the largest business statistical institutions in the country (Standard Statistics Company, of New York) makes this observation:

"Ultimately, we look for a realignment to the relative balance of the pre-depression status on a permanently lower basis of dollar values. Living costs should then give wage-earners command of at least as large a volume of goods as formerly."

This company does not indulge in propaganda. It interprets trends in business.

Workers should note that lower living costs "should" give them "command of at least as large a volume of goods as formerly." There is no intimation that living standards before the depression will be raised—or even held.

Under this plan the forces that caused the present depression will continue to operate. Automatic machinery and mergers will displace workers with increasing speed. As more wealth is created workers are informed that they "should"—not "will"—have a purchasing power "at least" equal to pre-depression standards. The controllers of wealth have learned no lesson. Their sole objective is to get out of the present slump and ignore the future.

The plea for methods to compile lists of unemployed for use in the "next depression"—as the New Hampshire unemployment emergency committee recommends—indicates their refusal to face facts. Their position is identical to public officials during a typhoid epidemic, who are interested in compiling the number of deaths rather than removing the cause of the scourge.

The depression cause and its removal should be the nation's major issue. Every alleged remedy should be subjected to the acid test: How will this increase the people's purchasing power, and how will it place more workers in employment by shortening hours?

Lowering wages as living costs drop is no solution. This is the bread basket theory that would maintain a rigid standard of life for wage-earners. The bread basket theory ignores constant displacement of workers by automatic machinery, chain stores and farm corporations.

These forces centralize wealth and enlarge the unemployed army. If the bread basket standard is accepted, man's development ceases and the depression cause is untouched. The inevitable result will be that our next "good-times" cycle will be shortened and our next business depression will be more acute.

THE WENDELL WILL.

The will of the last of the Wendell family of New York City was filed for probate the other day. Real estate valued at something like $100,000,000, which had been accumulated by a family whose motto was "Buy but never sell land," has been given to the cause of charity.

The most striking thing about the will is not the magnitude of the fortune but the character of the donations. The principle gifts are to a society for the relief of the ruptured and crippled, a home for children, a hospital, a theological seminary in New Jersey, etc.

The wealthy usually desire to perpetuate their names by establishing libraries, colleges, universities, and such like institutions, or by aiding educational institutions already in existence, the terms of their wills frequently demanding the name of the institution be changed to that of the donor of the money.

The Wendells do not seem to have been moved in their giving by the appeal this kind of fame has for many of our wealthy philanthropists. Rather, they seem to have sensed the real and pressing needs of humanity—the necessity of healing broken bodies and building up the waste places in our social moral field—and through their fortune they have made it possible for these wants to be taken care of immediately. To those who crave it, the Wendells have left all the glory attached to founding and assisting institutions that will serve to perpetuate the munificence as well as the name and memory of the benefactor!

JOBS GO BEGGING.

When is a job-seeker with civil service status unwilling to accept employment?

Director Grant, in charge of public buildings and grounds at Washington, says it's when the job calls for the vigorous manipulation of pick and shovel in helping to iron out the deep-cut wrinkles on the face of a roadway.

A call from Director Grant for thirty men to be sent him by the civil service commission brought the men, alright. But the men brought along with them a sudden stop to the whole procedure. Something illegal, you ask, in the action of either Director Grant or the civil service commission? Nope! Not at all.

The jobs—plain old pick and shovel variety, often seen in the backyards of perfectly normal folks, especially in the springtime, good at any time for the liver and whatever ails you—the jobs called for not only manual labor but for workers with civil service status. And the men with this civil service rating wouldn't have the jobs. And furthermore, several other applicants were turned down, though ready to go to work, because they had no civil service standing!

It can't be denied that it takes intelligence to write a civil service law such as we have covering government employment, but it most certainly didn't take any intelligence to place under civil service regulation such jobs as Director Grant had to offer thirty men the other day.

Retreating!

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

That great army of Mexican day laborers which for several years has overrun the western states at last has been defeated by General Depression in Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Arizona and southern California. The Mexs are re-crossing the border into their own country of hot tamales and chili con carne in double-quick time! Their native country's own consul, Senor Y. M. Vacques, stationed at Denver, says so. And just to cite you one particular instance, let me tell you that Vacques says that 5,000 of Colorado's former 22,000 Mex population have already returned home. Altogether 30,298 of this former Mex army in the west have joined in the return march, and they are still leaving. Well, who'll keep them from going back home? Certainly not the thousands of American-born citizens whose jobs they took when they came into the United States from Mexico! Most assuredly not the wives and children of these same American workmen—women and children whose mouths have been denied food and their backs robbed of clothes because of the dearth of Mex laborers in the west. Before they have a chance to return after business gets better here in America let's shut the door so this Mex army of laborers can't come back.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

Stanley B. Mathewson, executive personnel director of Antioch college, at Yellow Springs, O., has conducted a survey of industrial employment which shows that many unorganized workers in the United States "soldier" on the job to prolong employment and prevent wage rate cuts.

While making his survey, Mathewson worked as a laborer, machine operator, bench assembler, conveyor assembler and skilled mechanic and lived with working people. Six other workers aided him in gathering facts and data.

Mathewson said that the trade unions are commonly blamed for deliberate restriction of output by workers, but he found the practice in "open shops," where other workers advised him "not to work so fast."

Enemies of trade unionism have delighted in charging that union workers loaf on the job to restrict output, despite the fact that there was no proof of the charge. The investigation of Mr. Mathewson shows that the charge has no more basis than lots of other accusations made against trade unionists.

It is beginning to seep into the public consciousness that the order of Secretary of Agriculture Hyde permitting the use of corn sugar in food products without the fact being stated on the label is a danger to the pure food laws. It is being asked, if corn sugar can be used, without any notice to the consumer, who can't the use of other products, perhaps not so wholesome as corn sugar, be authorized?

The case against Secretary Hyde's order is well stated in the following editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"Mr. Hyde has now completely reversed himself. He says corn sugar is a wholesome food product. Nobody questions it. He cites the necessity of stimulating the use of corn and thus helping the farmer. Nobody questions that fact; on the contrary, everybody agrees with it earnestly and sympathetically. But his own unanswerable objection to the proposal remains unanswered—that this executive order will legalize deceptive labels, that it violates the basic principle of the pure-food law, that it is an invitation to other interests to ask for the same privilege, which, in his own prophecy, they will be sure to do; that it is the opening wedge which, in the end, will mean 'effective repeal' of the pure-food law.

"The prospect is disturbing."

Opposition of a group of Bethlehem Steel corporation stockholders to the payment of huge bonuses to a small number of the corporation's executives throws light on why the corporation does not pay higher wages. Bethlehem Steel is not the only corporation that pays large sums to its executives, under the guise of salaries or bonuses. It is a common practice. So much goes into dividends and "gravy" for the big boys at the top that there is too little left for wages.

JESUS AND MONEY

"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XX.
QUARREL OVER AN ESTATE
(The Parable: Lk. 12:16-20)

"And he spake unto them a parable, saying: The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully, and he reasoned within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have not where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns and build greater, and there will I bestow all my grain and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease—eat, drink, be merry. But God said unto him, Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee, and the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be?—Lk. 12:16-20.

WM. L. MOSS

One of two brothers came to Jesus and asked Him to act as judge in a dispute between them over an estate, but Jesus in unmistakable words flatly refuses to accede to the man's request. Turning to the people gathered to hear Him teach, Jesus then gives them the above parable. And how true a picture does Jesus draw in that parable of the modern world! We make some money, then we set out to make some more, and so on. In our money-making we see our money making more money for us. Realizing the power inherent in money to reproduce itself we come to feel that its power is unlimited—money is the big thing in life is our conclusion. This is just exactly the point the rich man in the parable had reached when Jesus tells us he said, "What shall I do, because I have not where to bestow my fruits?" He is gloating over the accumulative power of his money. The man is slapping his soul on the back and telling it how happy he is over the increase of his wealth. He is congratulating himself that he is in a position to snap his fingers at the world and dull care! But at the next point in the parable Jesus displays the marvelously transcendent ability as a Teacher He so frequently gives evidence of, examples of which, scattered throughout the Gospels, fairly scintillate like the shimmering flashes of an exquisitely cut diamond. He makes use of the unexpected and dramatic imagery of God's voice interrupting the rich man's exulting conversation directed to his soul. God says to the man: "Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee!" Jesus reminds us of this appalling truth because He wished to point out that the rich man's conceit and self-sufficiency, his staking all on the power of his money, was, in the face of cold reality, a pitiful tragic comedy! Here is a man, Jesus tells us, rejoicing over a life that consists, so he thinks, of an abundance of material possessions. The truth is, and Jesus, happily, brings it out clearly and unmistakably, the man's conception of things was nothing short of foolishness—it was altogether a gross miscalculation, because this is a world in which the unseen hand of death is forever upraised to snuff out life as if 'twere nothing but a candle.

What Next!

"Mr. Vocalite," described as the most advanced mechanical man or robot thus far developed, has been placed on public display at St. Louis. Responding to spoken commands, he stands, seats himself, talks, sings, smokes cigarettes and performs various other acts. "Mr. Vocalite," developed by J. M. Barnett, Westinghouse engineer, differs from previous robot models in that only ordinary words, instead of whistled signals, are required to control him. He is also capable of more operations. Instructions to the robot are transmitted through an ordinary telephone mouthpiece, but there are no electrical connections between the transmitter and the mechanical "brain." Electrical impulses caused by the spoken orders instead are carried by a beam of light to a sensitive cell, which relays them.

CIRCULATION

Wednesday—"All Fools' Day"—the Times printed a full-page advertisement challenging "any other Chattanooga newspaper" to print circulation figures. "Are the figures of any other Chattanooga newspaper ready—If not, why not?" it asked.

April Fool day having come and passed, The Labor World desires to state that the B. V. D. bureau of international auditors has just completed checking our figures, and they are available to any interested party. However, due to the bitter political campaign just closed, we believe the public is fed up on newspaper controversies, and we prefer to confine our business activities to the counting room.

Minimum Wage Law Is Probed by State

Boston.—The Massachusetts minimum wage law, heralded as "an advanced step" several years ago, is being probed by a legislative committee.

The law has no penalties and is based on the theory that when the commission makes its award an enlightened public opinion will demand its acceptance.

The scheme has not worked. Commissioners plead that all they can do is to advertise low-wage employers, but newspapers will not accept these advertisements.

A former investigator testified that "the delay of the commission to act against Harvard university for underpaying its scrubwomen is only one of the numerous instances which took place when I was in the division."

Two Million Wage For Tobacco Heads

New York.—The annual wage of George W. Hull, president American Tobacco company, is computed at more than $2,200,000.

Under the stock subscription plan, approved by shareholders of the company, Hull will pay $25 a share for 13,440 shares of company stock, which has a market value of $116 a share.

Under this system each of the vice-presidents received more than $500,000 last year in addition to salary.

These payments rival that of Eugene C. Grace, president Bethlehem Steel corporation, who, in 1929, received $1,623,753 in addition to his salary. Grace, last year, received a bonus of $1,015,591.

Stockholders of both concerns have brought suits against these inordinate payments. Both corporations are anti-union and block every attempt by workers to unite and raise their living standards.

STATE COMPENSATION URGED BY UNIONISTS

Boston.—Members of the state legislature are urged to vote for state workmen's compensation by the Massachusetts Federation of Labor.

The unionists declare that employers should care for injured workers "without the penalty of paying millions of dollars each year into the coffers of profit-taking insurance companies."

UNIONIST IS LABOR CHIEF.

Austin, Tex.—R. B. Gragg, of this city, was appointed labor commissioner of Texas by Gov. Sterling. The appointee is a member of Typographical union.

COAL MINING DEADLY.

Harrisburg, Pa.—One life was lost for every 160,000 tons of anthracite coal mined in this state last year.

Columbus, Ohio.—Large delegations of trade unionists attended a legislative hearing on a bill that would outlaw the "yellow dog." Opposition comes from the Ohio Manufacturers' association.

Large Newspaper Collection

What is said to be the largest collection of newspapers in the world has been opened to the public in a newspaper museum at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany. Among its collection of 150,000 newspapers are curiosities from all over the world, including an Eskimo paper from the middle of last century.

Hebrew Money

The monetary system of the Hebrews was based upon the Babylonian system of weights. The ratio of the value of gold to silver was 1:13 1-3 and prevailed over all western Asia.

Gigantic Structure

Herodotus estimated that 100,000 men were engaged for 20 years in building the Great pyramid.

A continuous demand for the union label, shop card and working button will bring joy and sunshine into the lives of thousands of trade unionists

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

Labor Should Be Paid When Made Workless

Baltimore.—"If inventors and efficiency engineers produce labor-saving machinery from which society derives benefit, society should be willing to aid the laborers made idle by the machinery," said David J. Lewis, congressman-elect from the Sixth Maryland district, in a speech in this city.

"The world owes no man a living, but the world does owe a man a chance to earn a living," said Mr. Lewis.

He drew a parallel between the opening of streets and the throwing out of work of laborers. If a street is widened, the city must pay damages to property owners, and it is only proper, he argued, that a similar practice be followed when labor-saving machinery is installed and men are laid off.

This viewpoint is not yet accepted, said Mr. Lewis, but it is no more unusual than when workmen's compensation was first urged. Forty years ago, he said, if a Maryland coal miner was killed, although through no fault of his own, the company expressed regrets while they wrote down the loss of mules and coal cars as contingent expenses.

STUDY OF INSURANCE OF JOBLESS BEGUN

Washington.—A senate committee to study unemployment insurance will begin hearings on March 31. The committee was created on resolution by Senator Wagner, of New York. Private plans and government systems abroad will be investigated.

Members of the committee are Senators Wagner, Glenn (Ill.), and Hebert (R. I.).

Felt Bad After Eating

"Before I started taking Black-Draught, three years ago, my health was very bad," writes Mrs. C. C. Carson, 945 Concord St., Beaumont, Texas. "I suffered constantly from constipation. I had headache when I got up in the morning, and I felt dull and sluggish. I hardly ate a meal that my food agreed with me. Frequently I would have gas on my stomach, and felt awful.

"I read about Black-Draught, and I thought it might help me. After I had taken it a little while, I felt much better. It relieves constipation. I keep it on hand so when I need a laxative I will have it. In the three years I have been taking it, I have never found anything as good for constipation."

Rail Trainmen May Join A. F. L.; Plan Discussed at Joint Meeting

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 2.—A conference at A. F. of L. headquarters, called by President Green, discussed jurisdiction of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and several A. F. of L. affiliates.

Differences are being adjusted preparatory to the Brotherhood's action at their Houston convention next May on proposed A. F. of L. affiliation. The Brotherhood has a membership of more than 185,000.

Other conferences will be held prior to the Houston convention and it is predicted that understandings will be reached.

President Green served as chairman of the conference. Other A. F. of L. executive council members present were: Frank Morrison, secretary; A. O. Wharton, sixth vice-president; G. M. Bugniazet, eighth vice-president.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and directly interested international unions and their representatives were:

Brotherhood—A. F. Whitney, president, and S. R. Harvey and J. A. Farquaharson. Railroad Telegraphers—E. J. Manion, president. Street Car Men—Wm. B. Fitzgerald, first vice-president, and P. J. Shea. Switchmen—T. C. Cashen, president, and James B. Connors and John Lundergan. Teamsters—Daniel J. Tobin, president, and J. M. Gillespie. Railway Clerks—W. J. Chapman.

The conference will prove historic, and is the result of many discussions between President Green and A. F. Whitney, president, and other officials of the railroad brotherhood. President Green, two years ago, attended the Montreal convention of these rail workers and a few days later President Whitney returned the courtesy by addressing the A. F. of L. convention at Toronto. At that time Mr. Whitney said:

"I don't know of any reason why this great organization, the B. of R. T., should be on the outside looking in on this, the greatest labor federation in the world. I am happy to say that even before Brother Green addressed our meeting in Montreal the other day, 103 chairmen of our general comimttees and fifteen grand lodge officers went on record in favor of the B. of R. T. affiliating with the A. F. of L., if your federation sees fit to accept us. That action was unanimous, and after Brother Green made his wonderfully inspiring and illuminating talk every fellow felt that he had made no mistake."

WILL EMPLOYMENT FIGURES LESSEN NEXT BUSINESS SAG?

(By International Labor News Service.)

Concord, N. H., April 2.—Accurate figures on unemployment can forestall "serious conditions" in the next business depression, said the unemployment emergency committee of New Hampshire in a report to Gov. Winant.

The committee says there is a noticeable resentment by the average citizen that America, along with its industrial development, has failed to make provision against "such extreme conditions" as have prevailed the past year.

There is no reference in the report to causes of business depressions and the need for higher purchasing power and shorter hours to take up the unemployed slack.

The committee's solution for "the next depression" is to make an accurate count of unemployed. There is no suggestion of remedies for "future depression" after this data is secured. The figures, it is stated, will serve as "a basis for comparisons."

"While conditions have been severe," the committee states, "their exact degree of seriousness has undoubtedly been exaggerated for want of reliable information. Lacking the facts, there has been fear, which always exaggerates and leads to hysteria, hampering an orderly recovery."

Teachers' Union Holds Convention June 29-July 3

Chicago, April 2.—The call for the fifteenth annual convention of the American Federation of Teachers has been issued. The convention will be held at the Congress hotel here June 29-July 3.

This year when the schools of the land and many teachers personally have suffered under the chaotic economic conditions, the deliberations of this convention will doubtless be of marked significance.

Teachers who have been brought into daily contact with the most disastrous of all effects of unemployment, poverty diseases in children, will give earnest consideration to the problem. Decrease in property values with the consequent reduction in public revenues has produced financial problems in school systems which have been met by decreasing salaries, increasing the number of pupils per teacher and general reduction of the efficiency of the schools. These problems will be before the convention together with those of certification, tenure and unemployment among teachers.

The American Federation of Teachers believes that in organization of teachers is to be found the only effective method by which dangers to our schools can be averted and hence will consider ways and means of extending its protection still more broadly among teachers in every field of education.

British Labor Party Doubles Welsh Vote

London.—The labor party doubled its 1929 majority in an "off" election at Pontypridd, a mining section 20 miles from Cardiff, Wales. The liberal vote dropped to such proportions that it has alarmed leaders of that party.

Pontypridd was the scene of the famous Taff Vale decision, thirty years ago, which resulted in the formation of the present labor party.

Railroad workers on the Taff Vale railroad, that runs in the Taff river valley, suspended work.

The company sued the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants and individual members for $150,000 damages. The house of lords, England's highest court, held for the company. Trade union agitation secured legislation that exempted trade unions and damages, because of their character as a voluntary association.

WIRE MEN STRIKE.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Georgia Power company discriminates against organized electrical workers and several hundred of these unionists throughout the state suspended work.

Radio Trust Looms By Bureau Rulings

Washington.—"Radio is the last great public domain that has not been given over to the trusts," said Edward N. Nockels in an address to the non-partisan conference in this city.

Mr. Nockels is A. F. of L. legislative representative and general manager labor's radio station WCFL, Chicago.

"The radio act of 1927," said Mr. Nockels, "prevents vested or property rights of the air, but the federal radio commission is setting up arbitrary rules which virtually give property rights of the air to a radio monopoly.

"This radio trust has invested large sums in equipment and property, and will eventually claim that on account of their property investment and development of the art (because they also have a monopoly of the patents) that they have a right to ownership of the ether.

"The judiciary is the ace in the hole for this monopoly. Should some court give property rights to say one station, the precedent is established. From that time on there will be no opportunity for the public, the workers, the farmers, educators or any other independent group, to obtain suitable facilities on the air to broadcast their views on great public questions. When the radio trust gains a monopoly it will be censor of the air."

In urging that labor's broadcast station secure a cleared channel, Mr. Nockels said:

"Radio is the greatest implement of democracy yet given to mankind.

"Great commercial interests of this country, through chains and mergers, have secured a practical control of the press of this nation. So far as the people are concerned, they are inarticulate through the columns of the daily newspapers. Is it not of great importance, then, that the voice of the people be heard through this newly discovered art?"

PENNY PINCHING HARMS POSTOFFICE SERVICE

Washington.—"Postoffice efficiency is being destroyed by Postmaster-General Brown's curtailment of delivery service," said Congressman Kendall, of Pennsylvania.

The lawmaker, for twelve years a member of the house postoffice committee, said reports show that mail service is poorer than at any period in recent years.

"The postal service is the life blood of the nation and it should not be curtailed for any cause," said Mr. Kendall. "This service should not be considered from the standpoint of postal deficits or revenues, but because of its daily contact with every section of the country, it should be maintained so as to give the best possible service."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

PLANS SHAPING FOR CONVENTION OF MUSICIANS

Local 80 Hopes to Entertain President Green.

ADDRESS BY WEBER TO BE BROADCAST

Committees Busy Arranging for International Gathering in June.

JOSEPH WEBER
President American Federation of Musicians.

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, will in all probability be a visitor to Chattanooga during the sessions of the American Federation of Musicians, which convenes in this city early in June for a two-weeks conclave. Officers of Local No. 80 were optimistic regarding the probabilities of inducing the labor chieftain to join a large number of his fellow-international officials in visiting the big convention, and stated they believed with the assistance of Central Body and other local unions they would be successful in this feature of the program. Other specially-invited guests of the convention, which will meet at the Memorial auditorium, will include officers of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and representatives of the southern organizing committee.

Local officers told a representative of The Labor World this week that this will be the first time in twenty years that the musicians have met in the southland, the delegates having been "sold" on Chattanooga through some excellent work at the last convention as well as the previous one by Harry S. Kennedy, then president of Local 80, and C. L. Park, chairman of the Chattanooga convention bureau.

Pre-convention arrangements are proceeding at a rapid pace, it was said, and it is the purpose to offer a real Chattanooga welcome to the visitors, who will come from all parts of the country. Morning sessions will be devoted to business, while the afternoons and evenings will be given over to entertainment, including a dance at Hotel Patten, which will be headquarters; several luncheons for the ladies, an organ recital at the Memorial, a sightseeing trip to Lookout mountain, barbecue and dance at Sigmund mountain, dinners for officers and official visitors, etc.

The opening address of President Weber will be broadcast over the Columbia broadcasting chain.

The execution board had another stormy session last week and finally decided that local orchestras could broadcast free of charge. However, it must be kept a deep, dark secret as to who is doing the playing. Herman says the reason for this ruling is to keep some of our "artists" from being shot.

The automobile show is the big attraction scheduled for next week at the auditorium. Three local orchestras will furnish music on alternate nights.

Frank Worthy says that he has a brand new name for his orchestra. Henceforth it will be known as the Commanders. Frank said he picked this name because he commanded the least amount of work in town.

Local No. 80 welcomes as a new member Mr. George Ryerson. George performs on the saxophone and will make the society a valuable member.

The Patten hotel has made the local a very attractive offer in letting Ralph Miller and his ways and means committee use its ballroom for a big dance. Ralph promises everyone a huge time and we are of the opinion that he is right.

Johnny Mahoney has added Pat Brenizer and Ellis Goodloe to his entertainment committee and they sure ought to be able to help a lot.

NATION'S WEALTH IN 19 YEARS IN HANDS OF 200 CORPORATIONS

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York, April 9.—At the present rate of increase, 80 per cent of the nation's non-financial corporate wealth (industry, transportation, mining, power, etc.) will be in the hands of 100 corporations by 1950, or nineteen years from 1931.

This conclusion is reached by Gardiner C. Means in discussing a statistical survey, conducted by the Columbia Social Science Research Council, on the part being played in American life by large corporations.

Mr. Means shows that corporations with assets in excess of $80,000,000 are increasing their power and now control four-fifths of the assets of corporations whose stock is regularly traded on the New York Stock exchange.

During the period 1909-1927 the assets of these corporations grew more than twice as fast as the assets of all other non-financial corporations, and at this rate they will own 80 per cent of all non-financial corporate wealth in 1950.

"The huge corporation, the corporation with $80,000,000 of assets or more," said Mr. Means, writing in American Economic Review, "has come to dominate most major industries, if not all industry, in the United States. A rapidly increasing proportion of industry is carried on under this form of organization. There is apparently no immediate limit to its increase. It is coming more and more to be the economic unit under which American economic, social and political life must deal."

All U. S. Building Now Under Law On Prevailing Wage

Act to Stop Rate-Slashing Effective on Vast Government Program—Secretary of Labor Has Final Word in Case of Dispute.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 9.—Yesterday the new prevailing rate of wages law, signed March 27, became effective throughout the United States.

Under the new law contractors are required to pay the rate of wages prevailing in the community where the work is to be done. Advance determination of wages is not provided for, but in the event the contractor does not pay the rate deemed by the employes to be the prevailing rate, appeal may be taken. In event of dispute the secretary of labor is responsible for determination of the prevailing wage. He is the final judge.

Inquiries at the department of labor from contractors have been met with the statement that no advance rulings can be made. If complaint is made against any contractor and the complaint is found valid the contractor then will be ordered to pay a wage determined upon by the secretary of labor.

"Responsibility for taking the prevailing wage scale into consideration in making their bids rests squarely on the contractor and not on the government," Hugh L. Kerwin, chief of the division of conciliation of the labor department, said. "Contractors have to take the details of specifications into consideration and stand responsible for their computations expressed in bids and the same thing applies to wages.

"It simply is another factor the contractor will have to take into consideration and familiarize himself with. The contractors, incidentally, brought this new law on themselves. There were many instances in which contractors imported labor and completely upset the wage scale and labor market in communities where conditions had been stable."

PETER J. CONLON, MACHINIST OFFICIAL, DIES SUDDENLY AT 61

P. J. CONLON

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 9.—Peter J. Conlon, general vice-president of the International Association of Machinists and one of the best known trade unionists in the United States, died suddenly on April 1 at Georgetown hospital, Washington. He leaves his widow and six children. His home was at Mt. Ida, Va.

Mr. Conlon was born Sept. 23, 1869, at Brooklyn, N. Y. His father was a locomotive engineer. He went to work as an apprentice plumber at the age of 14, serving two years. Later he served an apprenticeship as a machinist with the Cotton Belt railroad at Pine Bluff, Ark. He was a machinist from 1885 to 1901.

Mr. Conlon was a member of the executive board of the International Association of Machinists from 1895 to 1916, having joined the union Feb. 12, 1889. From 1916 to 1921 he was in charge of the organization department of the union and made an enviable record. He had been general vice-president since 1921.

During the World war, Mr. Conlon served as assistant to B. M. Jewell, president of the Railroad Employes' Department, American Federation of Labor. He wrote many articles for the Machinists Journal. He was active in the progressive political movement.

Labor Holds Its Wage Level High Despite Bankers

Big Business-High Finance Drive for "Deflation" of Payrolls Seems Flattening Out, According to Bureau Findings.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 9.—The big business banking drive to "deflate" wages seems fizzling.

The February report of the bureau of labor statistics summary shows, among other things, that the number of wage-earners on the payrolls of the reporting establishments registered a bare increase—less than one-tenth of one per cent—over the preceding month.

The summary also shows that the total amount paid in wages increased over the previous month by 4.7 per cent.

Labor is just a little more than holding its own on the matter of total payroll in proportion to number of employes.

WORLD DEPRESSION HITS BRITISH JOBLESS PAY

Princeton, N. J.—England's unemployment insurance system was never intended to cope with a business depression such as marks that country, as well as other sections of the world, said Rev. T. A. E. Davey, canon of Liverpool cathedral, who is visiting Princeton university.

Canon Davey said he favored unemployment insurance measures as a matter of sound economics, but pointed out that the depression has made an unusual condition, which shows up badly for the insurance system.

REASON ROUTS ARGUMENTS OF WAGE-CUTTERS

Figures Show Decreases Are Not Necessary.

BUSINESS SURVEY GOES INTO HISTORY

Former Depressions Met Without Destroying Standards.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 9.—The argument that wages should come down because of the decline in wholesale prices is strongly attacked by the American Federation of Labor in its April survey of business.

Present advocacy of wage cuts comes largely from banking circles, the federation says, adding that it is claimed wages must come down to compensate for losses from price reductions.

Price Falls Outstrip Wages.

Wage rates have never varied proportionately with price changes, the federation declares, and in most depressions the decline in wage rates in general has been very small, if any, though price declines have often been drastic.

"In the long depression of 1894 to 1897, prices fell 17 per cent from 1890 level, but wages declined only 3 per cent in 1894, and immediately increased again so that by the end of the depression they were again at the 1890 level," the federation continued. "In the depressions of 1866, and 1884, and the mild depressions of 1911 and 1927, wage rates either rose or were maintained at the same level although prices declined from 8 to 14 per cent and once as much as 37 per cent.

Wage Cuts Not Necessary.

"In only two depressions were there wage declines amounting to as much as 10 per cent—the five-year depression of 1874 and the depression of 1921; in the first, wage rates declined only 10 per cent while prices fell 23 per cent, and in 1921, wages were reduced 11 per cent and prices 37 per cent. These two wage declines are outstanding exceptions; they occurred with unusually severe price declines. The price decline of 1930 was only 11 per cent. Clearly if sixty-five years' experience has weight, wage cuts are not necessary now.

"Undoubtedly there were wage reductions in former depressions, but they did not reach the sweeping proportions of 1921. They were not large enough nor widespread enough to affect the general wage level seriously. Conditions then were different; industry was not so closely interrelated. Wage cuts now would be far more serious because industry is more dependent on workers' buying power than ever before.

Pay Losses Not Considered.

Assailing the argument that the "cost of living has declined, therefore workers could buy as much even if wages were cut," the federation points out this argument does not take account of wage losses because of part-time work and unemployment. It continues:

"For the last four months our reports from unions show that from 18 to 20 per cent of the membership have been working part time each month. Judging from our unemployment figures and the report of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company, it seems probable that from 34 to 45 per cent of American wage-earners have been victims of either part or full employment each month this winter. Since the calamity does not strike the same individuals each month, it seems probable that comparatively few families have escaped during the past year.

"It has been estimated that wage losses in 1930 amounted to about ten billion dollars. The loss of this huge sum cannot but cripple retail trade and hold back industrial production. Now is no time to reduce buying power still further by wage cuts. Also, the effect of wage cuts will last into the future and limit buying power after depression is over. After the 1921 wage cuts it took eight years for wages to rise again to the 1920 level.

Decline Checked.

"Reliable trade indicators show that the business decline has already been checked. Wage cuts were not necessary to accomplish this. They are even less necessary now that the decline is checked. Hard as the adjustments of depression are, they can be accomplished without wage cuts, as past history shows. We are in a new era; mass production depends on mass buying. Wage cut philosophy is out of date. The question of wage cuts is largely psychological. If business men expect wage cuts and wait for them, recovery will of course be delayed. If executives accept the present standards and adjust accordingly, business recovery will proceed without wage reductions. Wage cuts were fewer in February, but there were still a very large number. In January 335 firms cut wages, affecting 43,507 workers; in February, 228 firms, affecting 39,096 workers. Cuts averaged 10.3 per cent in February.

"Profits rose to a high peak in 1929, increasing 35 per cent in two years. Most of the increased earnings of these plants went to pay higher dividends to stockholders; some were held as a reserve. Dividends increased 26 per cent, wages only 8 per cent. When depression came in 1930 profits declined to a point below the 1927 level. Nevertheless, dividend payments were continued at the high 1929 level. But wage payments were cut 19 per cent. Keeping reserves for wages would solve much of the unemployment problem."

Bottom Reached, Is View.

The survey says that the first quarter of the year ends with a firmer conviction that business has reached the bottom of depression and that "in the fall we may look forward to the beginning of a more definite climb upward toward prosperity."

"Business sentiment is continually improving," the survey says. "The situation this spring is very different from last, for this year more of the fundamental adjustments have been made and business men have their feet more firmly on the ground."

DEPRESSION AIDS SHORT WEEK; STRIKE FEAR FORCES WORK GAINS

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 9.—Poor business conditions have been an impetus to the five-day week, according to Ethelbert Stewart, commissioner federal bureau of labor statistics. The cost of operating for four hours on Saturday is another factor, while the fear of strikes "has induced" many employers to improve working conditions.

"Obstacles have been removed from the path leading to the adoption of the shorter working week by the lack of sufficient work, in many instances, to keep plants busy more than three days a week," said Mr. Stewart.

"There will, of course, be a certain percentage of establishments operated by persons with backward ideas of business management which will revert to the five and one-half or six-day week when business gets back to normal," continued the statistician. "But the majority of plants which have been forced to go on the reduced schedule will keep it reduced, as the feasibility and economic soundness of the five-day week may now be said to have been successfully demonstrated.

"Night work and Sunday operations in such industries as the cotton mills will be found to have declined, also, when conditions again become normal, it is believed.

"The beneficial effects of shorter hours on the employment situation have not been noticed, as yet, because of the fact that operations have been cut down so greatly. When enough orders are received, however, to keep factories busy six days a week, it will become necessary for those retaining the five-day week to add more workers to their payrolls than they formerly carried.

RAILROAD HEAD SAYS CAPITALISM IS FAULTY IN PROVIDING OF JOBS

DANIEL WILLARD

(By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelphia, April 9.—Speaking at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania, Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, criticized a system under which millions of men are unable to find employment.

"A system—call it what you will—under which it is possible for 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 of willing and able-bodied men to be out of work and unable to secure work for months at a time, and with no other source of income, cannot be said to be perfect or even satisfactory," Willard said. "On the contrary, it can be said to have failed in at least one very important detail.

"I can think of nothing more deplorable than the condition of a man, able and anxious to work, but unable to secure work, with no resources but his labor, and perhaps with others even more helpless dependent upon him. Unless he is willing to starve and see those who justly look to him for support also starve, his only alternative is to seek charity and, failing in that, to steal.

"While I do not like to say so, I would be less than candid if I did not say that in such circumstances I would steal before I would starve."

Rail Workers Suffer But Dividends Hold

Montreal, Quebec.—The annual report of the privately-owned Canadian Pacific railroad shows "business as usual" for stockholders, but unemployment, part time and wage cuts for labor.

Large numbers of these workers have been laid off and some shops are working but 32 hours a week. Working expenses were cut $23,934,265 last year, according to the annual report.

The usual dividends to stockholders were paid and the company's profits from all sources are practically the same as in 1929.

The company's "special income" from steamships, hotels, telegraphs, lands, mines, etc., amounted to $20,042,923, a new high record and more than $5,000,000 above the 1929 figures.

Employment In Trade Unions Gains Slightly

Small Improvement Noted in March Encouraging as Showing Normal Seasonal Trend, President Green Says.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 9.—Employment of trade union members improved again slightly in March, according to figures received by the American Federation of Labor from affiliated unions. The gain in March was about the same as that in February. The weighted unemployment figures showed 18.2 per cent unemployed in March, as compared to 19.0 per cent in February and 19.8 per cent in January.

Commenting on the report, President William Green, of the federation, said:

"Although the improvement from February to March is small, it is quite in keeping with the usual seasonal gains at this time of year. Last year, unemployment in March was worse than in January; after the hard winter of 1928 the improvement from January to March was less than it has been this year. Only in the prosperous year of 1929 was there a greater gain than this year.

"While the March figures are encouraging in that they show a normal seasonal gain, no industry as yet shows a definite upward tendency in employment of more than seasonal proportions. Employment has improved in metal trades since the February peak, but 28 per cent are still out of work and 27 per cent on part time. In clothing and textile industries, employment gains were substantial, as is usual at this season, but 25 per cent were still out of work in March and 40 per cent on part time. In manufacturing and on railroads there were very slight improvements.

"In some other trades, however, adjustments are still in process. In trade and service industries this is marked, for street transport trades and our miscellaneous trade and service group both showed more out of work in March. In printing, unemployment increased again and reached a new high peak; there has been no substantial improvement in printing since January, 1930, and unemployment has been growing almost steadily worse. In building, the spring pick-up which sometimes begins in March had not yet started in March of this year, and 52 per cent of the building trades membership were still without work.

"These reports show that unemployment is still at a very high level with no prospect for more than gradual improvement in the near future. On the basis of the government census of unemployment in nineteen cities in January, Secretary Lamont estimated that 6,050,000 were without jobs and from 250,000 to 300,000 on temporary lay-off, making a total of about 6,300,000 without work. Considering the small improvement since January the number out of work is probably still near the 6,000,000 mark."

Cloak Union Wins Extra Pay Dispute

New York.—Raymond V. Ingersoll, impartial chairman of the cloak industry, ruled that when an employer pays a wage rate above the minimum scale, that rate cannot be changed without the consent of the worker and union.

Manufacturers and the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union established the impartial chairman to adjust disputes.

Under the wage contract there is no definite agreement of existing rates above the scale, but as higher rates are paid to exceptional workers, these rates cannot be changed at the employers' will, the chairman held.

INTEREST KEEN IN ELECTION BY CENTRAL BODY

Delegates Will Select Officers Monday Night.

STATE CONVENTION RACE TO FEATURE

Local Unions Expected to Be Represented at Annual Meeting at Jackson.

Annual election of officers will feature the regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night, and although nominations made at last meeting were somewhat less in number than is customary for this preliminary, increasing interest indicates that most of the various offices to be filled will find more than one aspirant for the honor.

M. H. Ortwein, who has served the council as president for the past four years, declined to stand for re-election, and E. E. McDaniels, of the Electrical Workers, was placed in nomination for that office. Other nominations already made are: For vice-president, T. R. Cuthbert; for secretary-treasurer, Matt Gerlach; recording secretary, A. C. Kamin; sergeant-at-arms, R. L. Lee; trustees, George Forbes, C. R. Ruggles, E. E. McDaniels, J. G. Burkes, E. F. Steiner and W. L. Wergin; directors of Labor World, W. F. Lange, W. E. Eckenrod.

Nominations for delegates to the state federation convention, three to be elected, are Paul J. Aymon, M. H. Ortwein, T. R. Cuthbert. Unusual importance of the convention this year will in all probability bring out a number of candidates before the lists are formally closed Monday night.

The convention, which meets at Jackson, is expected to consider unemployment conditions, the situation in the state government, the legislative program and other important matters, and officers are making an urgent appeal that every local union in the state which is possibly able have their representative present.

Indications from other sections are that a good attendance will be present, despite industrial conditions, and it is believed that Chattanooga will have something like the usual number of delegates. However, but two local unions so far have reported their selections to The Labor World, Lodge 56, Machinists, having named W. F. Lange and the Typos R. M. Cooke.

Mrs. Susan Sneed Goes to Reward

Mrs. Susan Sneed, mother of Floyd Sneed, active member of Lodge 56, Machinists, passed to her reward Sunday afternoon, at the age of 74. Mrs. Sneed is survived by four daughters, Mrs. Z. Z. Sherrill, of Memphis; Mrs. H. E. Boise, of Massillon, O.; Mrs. Annie Moore and Mrs. B. G. Holland, of St. Elmo; two sons, W. J., of Flintstone, and Floyd, of St. Elmo; twenty-one grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held Monday afternoon, with interment at Forest Hills cemetery.

The Labor World offers condolences of the entire movement to Brother Floyd Sneed and the other surviving relatives in the loss of their loved one.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

An order to show that modern industrial life is something which does not take into account the worker except as a "producing unit"—giving rise to the term "wage slaves" by radical thinkers—and to make clear that in their present state of mind those who control industry do not purpose to let the workers share in the profits of industry we shall give a brief resume of the historical development of industry.

Under feudalism the serf received his food, shelter, etc., in return for his labor and his services during war. We might term him more or less as a partner in "the concern," although his master took the largest share of the crops. But at last the feudal system began to break up. The peasantry were driven off the land, farms were turned into sheep-runs and multitudes forced to become vagabonds or driven to seek their livelihood in the towns. And thus what we define today as the "proletariat," or industrial working class, made its forced and tragic entry into history.

While the feudal system was breaking up there gradually developed in the towns and cities the guild system, with its apprentices, journeymen and masters. At first there were no labor problems, no conflicts between "capital and labor" in the guild system. "For the hard-working journeyman," as Prof. W. J. Ashley says, "expected to become an independent master. While in remained a journeyman there was no social gulf between himself and his employer. . . . The journeyman earned at least half as much as his master." This untroubled condition, though, did not last over 300 years at the most. As the guild system developed and spread it brought an attendant "labor problem."

Head and Back Quit Hurting

"A FEW years ago, I found that I was very weak and nothing I ate seemed to give me any strength," writes Mrs. R. B. Douglas, 704 South Congress St., Jackson, Miss.

"I suffered intense pain in my head and back. At times I would have to hold to something to steady myself, so as to do my little work. I was worried about my condition.

"My mother told me that I should take Cardui. After taking two bottles, I felt stronger, but I kept on taking it until my head and back quit hurting. I took about six bottles in all, and have never quit praising Cardui."

WHAT PRICE PROSPERITY?

Officials of the department of labor at Washington and of the American Federation of Labor, with figures covering 12,367 industrial establishments to back them up, have openly charged some of the bankers of the country are fostering an effort to put wage scales back to where they were in 1913.

The wage-cut figures of the department of labor reveal that over 40,000 workers to date have received an average of 10.3 slash in their total earnings and that in a vast majority of cases where employers of men whose wages have been cut asked their bankers for lower rates of interest they were curtly advised to "cut wages to the bone"—there wasn't going to be any lowered interest rates. These bankers are advocating what amounts to nothing less than a "dog-eat-dog" policy in industry.

It is an established fact that wage cuts mean a drop in living standards, and any lowering of living standards puts a crimp in the purchasing power of the mass of the people, the ones who after all supply the volume of buying so necessary to stable profits. Wage cuts may lead employers to believe they are really lining their purses but in reality wage cutting is a sure strangulation of the consuming public. An employer who cuts wages is creating a sort of one-sided, selfish form of "prosperity" over in his little corner of the earth, but he is missing a mighty big opportunity to help everybody, in business and out of business, by taking just a little less profit and keeping wages at their normal level.

JOBLESS APPLE SELLERS.

Dear Lord, in the battle that goes on through life
I ask but a field that is fair,
A chance that is equal with all in the strife,
A courage to strive and dare.
—Barton Braley.

After Thursday, April 15, there won't be any apple vendors on the downtown streets of New York City. With regrets the police commissioner of the Big Village on the Hudson has issued an edict forbidding the sale of apples by the unemployed on certain streets. It seems organizations composed of business men complained to the police department that the apple vendors obstructed the freedom of movement of pedestrians and interfered with the business of the stores along the main downtown thoroughfare.

Just a few months ago these jobless men and youths had regular jobs. Then one day—well, they were told to move on. The men who gave them their "pink slips" didn't say so, but the gist of the whole matter was they were interfering with somebody else's profits. Now again they are deprived of a chance to earn something for their own and their families' assistance. Again they are told to move on—they're interfering with another somebody else's profits.

Is it a fact that the selfishness of some of our business men is so blind, their hot pursuit of gain so fierce and intense, the hardness of their hearts become so adamant that they will deny jobless men the lowly privilege of selling apples in front of or near their places of business? Have they gone off on a tangent so far from their inherent sense of sympathy for the jobless that they assert the streets of our largest and richest city are too narrow to give room to all who would do business on them? Does the lure of profits really turn men into everything else but human beings? When a part of society robs men of their chance to earn a livelihood should that same part of society harass or protect the men without jobs? When all they asked was "a field that is fair" and showed they had the "courage to strive and dare" even though having lost their jobs, are jobless men being treated right when they are denied the right to engage in selling apples wherever they please to tide them over a period of unemployment?

"Mellonism"

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Just what is the real, honest-to-goodness meaning of all this sudden talk about United States government finances—the talk lately about the contemplated issuance of additional treasury securities, of the fall in income tax collections to the tune of $224,673,000, of an estimated deficit of $700,000,000 in treasury funds at the end of the fiscal year June 30 of this year, and of "a sweeping tax increase on lesser incomes," etc., etc.? It all started because, in common street parlance, your Uncle Samuel isn't as rich as "he uster be." But that is only one-half of the answer you are entitled to. The other half is that the whole business from beginning to end is Mellonism! Now you've got the biggest half of the answer. Notice how this Mellonism plays downright hard on a "sweeping increase on lesser incomes?" Know what that means? In plain English it means Secretary Mellon has advocated to President Hoover that hitherto untaxed incomes of married men supporting wives and families with incomes of, say, from $2,000 to $3,500 will be taxed when this "sweeping increase in lesser incomes" goes into effect. The big, coupon-clipping fellows with bulging pockets are going to be left alone—they're after the little guys now. The gentle, home-making, family-loving sort, you know. They are making too much, wages are altogether too high—it's time to teach those home-makers a little patriotism. Now that their Uncle Samuel is hard up they must help him out. Why not? They've got the money to give or they wouldn't have been able to establish homes!

(Lk. 12:22-31)

WM. L. MOSS

"And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on. The life is more than the meat, and the body more than the raiment. . . . Consider the ravens, for they neither sow nor reap . . . and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls? Consider the lilies . . . They toil not, they spin not, and yet . . . Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. If then God so clothe the grass . . . how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith? And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind . . . But rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things sall be added unto you."—Lk. 12:22-31.

In the verses quoted above I have merely given the words of our Lord that will best serve our purpose in studying sordid anxiety and tracing covetousness back to it. Read the entire 12th chapter of Luke and drink in at first hand in their complete form the rare beauty and rich teaching of our Lord's utterances contained in this chapter. But what is the significance of His words quoted above? First, we must note their connection with what precedes them. Jesus had just been talking on covetousness. He had been prompted to do so by the request of one of two brothers who had come to Him and asked Him to act as referee in a dispute over an estate. Jesus refused to accept the office of judge in the matter and at once unburdened His mind of what He saw as the basis of the whole dispute—the desire to possess, or covetousness. But does the Master stop there? Not hardly! The work which lay close to Jesus' heart was His wish to set free men's moral life. As Wernle says: "The central desire of Jesus is to awaken the conscience and set before it the thought of eternity. . . .One can understand Jesus only when one recognizes this desire in Him." So after disposing of the brother's request that He act as judge in a dispute over property the Master rises to the full height of His powers as a Teacher by the use of almost simplicity itself! He deepens and broadens the tenor of His preaching, yet in simple and beautiful language pictures clearly for us what ought to be our attitude in life. He strikes at sordid anxiety, for after all it is this extreme anixety (a form of fear) that blindly leads men on to give way to their acquisitive nature and become covetous.

Strong Back; Weak Mind!

Editor Labor World:

The issue of The Labor World for last week carried an editorial pertaining to the recent ruling of the United States civil service commission now requiring that pick and shovel jobs be placed on the list of civil service registration status. This ruling, so the commission asserts, was for the purpose of raising the standard of intelligence among the forces employed by the government; also to assure a higher degree of Americanism among the personnel, etc.

I took this examination last year, and for the benefit of prospective applicants for pick and shovel jobs under Uncle Sam, will say that so far as I know, the two main requisites for registration under this phase of civil service requirement are: A strong back and a weak mind. I was required to stand with heels clicked together and shoulder a sack of dirt weighing 125 pounds Avoirdupois—this much for the strong back. As to the mental test I was required to write an ordinary business letter and to perform certain elementary evolutions in arithmetic involving addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. In addition to this examination, the government conducted a registration campaign for the jobless.

I registered under this campaign and later applied for work, only to be told that jobs were doled out to fathers of families, and as the registration records indicated that I had but two children dependent on me for support, the office had nothing to offer me at that time, and could not forecast anything for the future.

While this occurred in the state of Indiana, I cannot help but compare it with the methods pursued by the manufacturers' association some five years ago, when they were wont to broadcast through the newspapers (I guess the association uses the radio now) such popycock that there was plenty of work in Chattanooga, thereby causing many a poor devil to leave the plow, or a fairly good job at home and rush to Chattanooga to help swell the number of the already unemployed. I have been away from Chattanooga more than five years, having just a few days ago "blew in," and I was surprised to find free soup kitchens being operated by the city.

I contend that there are three classes of slaves, viz.:

The common dirt farmer.
The common day laborer.
The common school teacher.

In my more than half a century of sojourning in this land of sin and sorrow and past due bills, I have filled all of the three classes as listed, and am at present an humble tiller of the soil. When in trouble one may always find sympathy in the dictionary, but my deepest sympathy is extended to the short-sighted laborer and the benighted teacher, yet, both these classes have in their hands the tool of independence if they would but use it—the Union. There is no hope for the farmer along this line, for he has not sense enough to unionize, and must continue to be in the future just as he has been in the past, a hewer of wood and drawer of water.

Some weeks ago I sat in the library of "Marse Henry" Watterson and these lines from a verse of his came to mind, which I think about covers the present situation:

"Things have come to a hell of a pass
When a man can't wallop his own jackass."

A GEORGIA CRACKER.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Trade unionists have a lot of fun these days watching business and industrial leaders rushing to indorse labor's program for the prevention of unemployment. Once upon a time business and industrial leaders were sure that higher wages and fewer hours of work would ruin the nation. Now they see with organized labor that higher wages and fewer hours are the only thing that can prevent ruin.

Typical of recent utterances backing up labor's view is that of Michael B. Schaler, of Philadelphia, an authority on production and consumption.

"In the last decade the United States produced 25 per cent more than it consumed," Mr. Schaler said. "Production increased by 42 per cent, though there was a reduction of 7 per cent—or 585,000 in the number of men and women engaged in industry."

Mr. Schaler believes therefore that the remedies for unemployment lie in the following directions: Higher wages, shorter hours, legislation in behalf of unemployed and measures against unemployment by industrial and social agencies.

Only in such fashion will the United States be able to make prosperity a reality again, he points out.

Investigation by the New York state department of labor reveals that the 72-hour working week is by no means unknown in beauty parlors in New York City, the 60-hour week is comparatively frequent and overtime is very common. Probably hours are as bad or worse in cities all over the country.

With these hours, it is hard to see how the beauty shop operators' workers can preserve their own beauty, since there is nothing harder on beauty than excessive toil.

It is plain that beauty shop workers are badly in need of trade union organization or regulation of their hours of work by law. New York, despite the high standards of its labor code, doesn't extend the protection of its laws to beauty shop employes. Some other states are more progressive in this respect, among them being Massachusetts and Connecticut, which now have hour laws specifically covering employes of beauty parlors.

During 1930 fire losses were appreciably greater than in 1929. And, if the present trend continues, 1931 will register another large advance. According to the national board of fire underwriters the loss for January totaled $44,090,449—an increase of $1,746,414 over the same month last year.

At a time when business depression and unemployment are two paramount issues, the tragedy of fire becomes more than ordinarily apparent. Another structure can be built to replace the one ruined—but there is no compensation for lost lives, for lost opportunity, for lost jobs, for lost business. Every fire amounts to throwing a wrench into the wheels of progress.

The United States has proven itself to be particularly callous to fire. It listens to the lesson of fire prevention and observes a "Fire Prevention week"—then continues to countenance hazards that lead to disaster. One wonders how many billions in property values and how many thousands of lives will be destroyed in the future before we, as citizens, do the little things, go to the petty expense, that would make fire prevention a reality instead of a hope.

Five-Hour Work Day Urged by Lawmaker

Vancouver, Canada.—The five-hour work day, or two shifts of four hours each, as a solution for unemployment was urged by Col. Nelson Spencer, member of the British Columbia legislature from this city.

Col. Spencer's drastic proposal is especially significant because he is a leading conservative. He said the five-hour day can be generally applied without disturbing industrial conditions.

He suggested that the Dominion government arrange with the president of the United States for a conference on the five-hour day.

What Next!

Tests of experimental roads in the south employing cotton fabric as a strengthening agent may result in an important new use for cotton, according to a statement by R. J. Cheatham, of the department of agriculture, in charge of studies of adaptation of cotton to new and extended uses. Tests on roads in South Carolina and Texas, using cotton membrane embedded in surfacing materials, are said to show that cotton cloth spread on tar-treated surfacing and subjected to hot asphalt treatment offers a quick and durable method of improving rural roads.

5-Day Week Opposed By Short Time Bosses

Oakland, Cal.—"There are thousands of employers in this country who cannot give workers employment for two days a week protesting against the inauguration of a five-day week," said Frank C. MacDonald, general president California Building Trades council, in his report to the annual convention.

"This type of employer has fought every change," said Mr. MacDonald. "We find employers, who are being eliminated by the maladjustment of our industrial Frankenstein, opposing any increase in wages that will help to bridge the chasm between production and consumption—the very condition which renders these merchants and manufacturers unable to sell their wares."

President MacDonald declared that the country's institutions are threatened by these conditions.

"The welfare of the great mass of our people is menaced by the appalling situation revealed by reports which show that wages and salaries paid by industries in the United States were $815,000,000 less in the first half of 1930 than in the first half of 1929, yet during the same period dividend payments of these industries were $350,000,000 more. Reports show that the railroads paid out $91,000,000 less in salaries during the first six months of 1930, but paid $39,000,000 more in dividends."

"I want my Telephone Put Back in please"

Almost daily people who discontinued their telephones during the stress of the past twelve months are ordering their service restored. They found that the small cost of the service had been repaid many times each month in convenience, in time and actually in money saved.

Others found that the loss of their telephones would soon mean the loss of friends, because of the lack of close and personal contact made possible only by telephone service. Still others mention that the sacrifice of their telephone meant the loss of many pleasant, impromptu social gatherings when their friends were unable to reach them by telephone.

It is all true, what these subscriber friends of ours say. Telephone service costs so little and the advantages of the service are so many that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Even though your heart be sad,
Try to smile, pretend you're glad,

Try to smile.

Will Mr. Clapp Answer This One?

Why Should Electricity for Domestic Purposes Cost 3.5 Times As Much in This Country as in the Province of Ontario?

Editorial in "Labor"

Paul S. Clapp, managing director of the National Electric Light association, chief propaganda agency of the power trust, has made what is called "a reply to the charges of Senator Norris against the electric utility industry."

This "reply" is being scattered broadcast over the United States by the power companies. It is a tissue of misleading statements, some cleverly camouflaged, but the great majority brazen distortions of established facts.

It would take a page of Labor to expose the fake in detail, but fortunately that is unnecessary because a candid examination of anybody's electric light bill will be sufficient to explode Mr. Clapp's entire "reply."

According to Mr. Clapp's own National Electric Light association, the average price paid for current by domestic consumers in the United States last year was 6.5 cents per kilowatt hour. There is grave reason to believe that this figure is too low, but let it stand.

According to the report of the Ontario hydro-electric commission, the average price paid for current by domestic consumers in Ontario last year was 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour.

In other words, private ownership is charging domestic consumers almost exactly four times as much in the United States as public ownership is charging them in Ontario.

There is the outstanding fact which no one can deny and which Mr. Clapp does not attempt to meet except to plead that privately-owned power plants pay taxes while publicly-owned plants are generally tax-exempt.

Again, let us take the power trust's own figures. When former Senator Lenroot was heading the power trust lobby in Washington a few years ago, he presented a statement claiming to show that 9.2 per cent of the gross revenues of the power companies went in taxes.

Figure that out on the basis of the charge per kilowatt hour. Nine and two-tenths per cent of 6.5 cents comes to 6 mills. Subtract that from 6.5 cents—which the N. E. L. A. gives as the average charge of private ownership to domestic consumers—and you have 5.9 per kilowatt hour left.

This is still 4.2 cents per kilowatt hour more than public ownership charges in Ontario. After writing off enough to cover its own statement of its tax burden, the power trust is still charging domestic consumers 3.5 times as high rates as they pay under public ownership just across the Canadian line.

Mr. Clapp says there are 20,000,000 domestic consumers in the United States. Most of them have limited incomes. They are forced to count their pennies. They are interested in rates—the amount they must pay for light and power every month. Why are they compelled to pay 3.5 times as much as the people of Ontario? Why doesn't Mr. Clapp devote his talents to answering that question?

While we are waiting for him to get into action, it may be recalled that Mr. Clapp, and all the other power propagandists, insist that "private enterprise" is "efficient"—that it can produce electricity for less than public plants.

That is interesting—if true—but what Mr. Clapp's 20,000,000 consumers would like to know is, "Who gets the benefit of the 'efficiency?'"

Rail Employment 10 Per Cent Less

Washington. — Railroad employment in this country, last year, dropped 10 per cent as compared with 1929, according to the interstate commerce commission.

During 1930 there was an average employment of 1,510,688, with a total wage of $2,590,274,843. This compares with employment of 1,686,769 and a wage of $2,940,868,690 in 1929, a decrease of 10.44 per cent in employment and 11.92 per cent in wages.

The largest decrease in railway employment was in maintenance-of-way and structures, which dropped 15.08 per cent in 1930 as compared with the 1929 total.

Maintenance of equipment and stores were second with an employment drop of 10.96 per cent, while the next, 9.76 per cent, was in employes engaged in transportation, train and engine.

Railway executives, officials and staff assistants were the least affected by the employment decreases, the loss in this classification being only 2.33 per cent, while professional, clerical and general employes dropped only 6.09 per cent.

WINNING STRIKE.

Philadelphia.—Striking hoisery workers secured eleven settlements and more than 1,200 workers return to their employment under union conditions. The strike was called Feb. 16. Several large plants are tied up.

Police and injunction judges are at the service of employers, but these forces fail to discourage workers.

Guaranty Trust Confirms News Of Trade Gains

Big New York House Close to Morgan Supports ILNS Report Business Has Taken Turn Toward Better Things.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, April 9.—The Guaranty Trust Company of New York, which does much of the routine business for the House of Morgan, has confirmed the news given last week by International Labor News Service that business had turned the corner and was on the upgrade. Officially it announced this week "the most encouraging signs in some time."

Improvement was confirmed in steel, pig iron, building and the automobile industries, while declines in foreign trade, cotton consumption and copper demands were less than seasonal. Business is still irregular. As was pointed out in the ILNS report, the small business man and contractor will not be fully convinced until several months after the big fellows have been acting on the new evidence in the economical picture.

There will be a slow gradual improvement. Normalcy, to revive the late President Harding's term, is not looked for until 1933. "And until then," as Floyd Gibbons might say, "we will go through a presidential campaign and all that political stuff."

"I HAD a stubborn case of constipation after a very severe spell of grip," says Mr. John B. Hutchison, of Neosho, Mo. "When I would get constipated, I'd feel so sleepy, tired and worn-out.

"When one feels this way, work is much harder to do, especially farm work. I would have dizzy headaches when I could hardly see to work, but after I read of Black-Draught, I began taking it. I did not have the headaches any more.

"When I have the sluggish, tired feeling, I take a few doses of Black-Draught, and it seems to carry off the poison and I feel just fine. I use Black-Draught at regular intervals. It is easy to take and I know it helps me."

WHAT HAPPENS TO A FAMILY AFTER THE PAY CHECK STOPS?

What happens to a family in the months after the pay check stops coming in? What are the things a family gives up last? Who takes care of the families when the social agencies can't?

The answers to these questions and many others like them are suggested in a study of fifty families appearing in the current issue of The Family, a social work magazine published by the Family Welfare Association of America. This survey was made by five workers of the Family Society of Philadelphia, one of the 238 member agencies of the association.

Last spring, unemployment, with resulting poverty and illness, brought these families to the Family society, which helped them until the special emergency relief fund was exhausted. New funds have since been made available, so the families are now receiving aid.

Food and Work Chief Concern.

The center of interest in these fifty households during the months they were struggling along themselves was food—whether there would be more or less of it; and work—whether there would be any at all.

Four months after the Family society had been forced to discontinue relief, the five social workers discovered that many of the families were living on bread, potatoes, coffee and weak soup, and that it was common diet for children. Butter, milk, fruit and meat, because of their expensiveness, were the first to be eliminated from the table when unemployment hit the families.

"I used to just sit and wonder if the people next door would send in something after they had finished," remarked one of the fifty mothers interviewed. "Sometimes they would and other times they would have nothing left and we just wouldn't eat. I'd tell the kids to drink lots of water and we'd wait for the next meal."

Finding work, too, was of vital concern since in only twenty-six of the fifty families was any one employed. Often this was for only two or three days a week. In only three of the fifty families was there a weekly income of $25 to $30. Most of the other forty-seven families were scraping along on from $5 to $15 a week.

The twenty-four families in which there were no job-holders were living on charity from day to day. Relatives and neighbors were supporting 50 per cent of the families, while churches, relief agencies and former employers were taking care of the balance.

Most Common Debt to Grocer.

"The most common debt," states Miss Rosemary Reynolds, chairman of the group which made the study, "is to the neighborhood grocer, who gossips to his other patrons about the condition of the family. Some families prefer to starve rather than risk the insults and indignities encountered at such stores."

When unemployment came, the rent and the insurance were the first obligations allowed to lapse. Only fourteen of the forty-six families who paid rent were not behind. The other thirty-two families owed from one to sixteen months' rent. The average monthly rental was from $15 to $18 for three or four back rooms. Half of the families had been threatened with eviction by the constable for non-payment of rent, although only nine had actually been put out on the streets.

Three of the families were buying homes on the installment plan, but all had either lost these homes or had received warning notices. "To these families," writes Miss Reynolds, "life is the darkest because the men were all prosperous and hard working and were slowly raising their plans of living. The loss of the homes they were purchasing symbolizes the last of all their dreams. Small wonder that they starve and fight to the end to retain them."

Native-Born Families Hit.

There were more native-born than foreign-born families in this group suffering from unemployment, according to the five family workers. In thirty-five out of the fifty households, both the father and mother were born in this country. Not even skill and training protected workers against unemployment; men who for years earned $60 to $75 weekly as expert weavers were collecting junk at two cents a pound.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Fifteen States Have Old Age Pension Acts

Laws Passed by 1931 Legislative Sessions Number Seven and Set New Record in Field, Nation-Wide Survey Shows.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, April 9.—Fifteen states now have old-age pension laws, as a result of the passage of new legislation in three states last month, bringing the number of new laws passed during the 1931 legislative session to seven—a record in this field—according to a nation-wide survey of the situation conducted by the American Association for Old-Age Security.

In March, West Virginia enacted an old-age pension law, the fifteenth state to do so. Oregon established a commission to report upon old-age needs and Colorado passed legislation to make effective its 1927 law which has been practically inoperative.

In addition, Delaware, Idaho, Minnesota and Wyoming have enacted new laws or improved old statutes during this session. New Jersey is also expected to join the pension states this year.

The survey showed that one house of the legislature in six states—Arizona, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nevada and Nebraska—passed bills or resolutions for old-age security. It was reported that the recent introduction of twenty-five bills in twelve legislatures brings the total number of 1931 old-age pension measures to more than ninety.

Nationally prominent leaders and speakers, including President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and Frank Murphy, mayor of Detroit, are scheduled to address the sessions of the 1931 National Conference on Old Age Security to be held in New York City on Friday, April 10, under the auspices of the American Association for Old Age Security. At the three sessions of the conference, the fourth of its kind sponsored by the association, the increasing need for security for the aged, administration of existing old-age pension laws and problems of legislative campaigns will be discussed.

VICIOUS BILL KILLED.

Salt Lake City.—The state legislature killed a bill that would permit voluntary associations to sue and be sued. The measure was aimed at labor unions, and would permit a jury to assess damages against a trade union for unauthorized and illegal acts of an individual member.

Union Heads Launch B. & L. Association

Principal Purpose of New Jersey Organization Will Be to Assist Working People to Build Homes.

(By A. F. of L. Direct News Service.)

Paterson, N. J., April 9.—The Passaic County Labor Building and Loan association just launched by leaders of organized labor in Passaic county is probably the first venture of this kind which trade unionists have undertaken in this country during recent years.

Carl Holderman, vice-president of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, who has been elected president of the new association, says that its principal purpose will be to assist working men to build homes and that the organization will so conduct its affairs that wage-earners who are buying homes will be protected as far as is legally possible from the risk of losing their investments during a period of depression.

The tentative list of officers so far selected to launch the Labor B. & L. is as follows: Vice-president, Robert Barclay, president of the Passaic Central Labor union; treasurer, John Earnest, Typographical union; secretary, Fred Holderman, Hosiery Workers; counsel, Municipal Judge Harry A. Joelson.

"The wage-earners of this country are accustomed to invest their savings in building and loan associations and we are assured that an association under trade union control will gain wide support in this country. We propose to frame our policies insofar as the law allows to assist workers who must have homes to live in assurance that they will not be sold out during the period of unemployment. We propose to make it possible as time goes on to carry our members just as long as is possible," Holderman said.

LOWER SPEED ADVISED.

Madison, Wis.—Lower speed for fire departments is advised by J. E. Florin, superintendent state fire prevention division. Mr. Florin said more firemen are killed or injured while going to fires than while engaged in fire fighting. Collisions with private cars and trucks is not a necessary incident of the service and is inexcusable, he said.

M. H. ORTWEIN AGAIN HEADS CENTRAL BODY

Signwriter Named for Fifth Successive Term.

McDANIELS, LEO LEE NEW BOARD MEMBERS

Annual Election of Officers Monday Night Brings Several Warm Contests.

M. H. ORTWEIN
Again Heads Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night elected officers, from president on down the line, and very few of the aspirants gained their places without a warm contest. M. H. Ortwein was chosen president for the fifth consecutive time, and Matt Gerlach and A. C. Kamin, secretary-treasurer and recording secretary, respectively, were again named to those offices without opposition. Other offices filled were vice-president, sergeant-at-arms, doorkeeper, three trustees and two directors of The Labor World. Three delegates to the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor were also elected.

Mr. Ortwein is a charter member of Local 299, Signwriters, and has served in an official capacity for that organization practically every since its formation. That his services as chief executive of Central Body have been creditable is demonstrated by the fact that his election Monday night for the fifth term sets a record, no one ever before having served that number of consecutive terms in that position.

E. E. McDaniels, named vice-president, is a newcomer on the executive board, although he has filled the position of a trustee for the past two years. Mr. McDaniels' work in his own local union, the Electrical Workers, has been outstanding, and he has also given a good account of himself in working for the advancement of the building trades crafts generally. He was instrumental in the organization of the first building trades council some two years ago, serving as president and business agent of that body, and only recently was named business manager, which position he also holds in his own local.

Matt Gerlach was re-elected secretary-treasurer without opposition. Mr. Gerlach has served sixteen consecutive terms, which is also a record.

Not to be outdone by the foregoing officers, A. C. Kamin, Movie Operators, "got himself elected" recorder, unopposed, after he had filled that office for some nine or ten years.

Another newcomer to the executive board is R. L. Lee, of the Soft Drink Workers, given the post of sergeant-at-arms. Mr. Lee has been a member of Local 79 since 1915, and a delegate to Central Body practically the same length of time. He has served with credit on many committee assignments.

Other officers elected are:

T. R. Cuthbert, Typos, doorkeeper; C. R. Ruggles, Signwriters; George Forbes, Postal Clerks, and W. L. Wergin, Machinists, trustees; W. E. Eckenrod, Cigarmakers, and Roy R. Lee, Soft Drink Workers, directors of The Labor World.

Delegates to the state federation convention were elected after considerable discussion, and when the smoke had cleared away the chairman announced the winners as Paul J. Aymon, George Forbes and Matt Gerlach.

SIGN INCOME TAX BILL

Oklahoma City.—Governor Murray signed an income tax bill that applies to corporations and individuals. The bill provides for a tax of two per cent on incomes up to $10,000 a year, three per cent on $10,000 to $20,000, four per cent on $20,000 to $100,000, and five per cent on all above $100,000.

LOCAL VISIT OF WILLIAM GREEN VERY PROBABLE

Will Address Legislature June 11—Musicians Extend Invitation.

Hopes of local members of organized labor, and particularly committees arranging for the Musicians' convention, that President William Green, of the American Federation, will again visit Chattanooga, were given a boost this week by announcement from Nashville that the labor chieftain has advised friends in that city that he will accept the invitation to address a joint session of the state general aseembly on Thursday, June 11. Mr. Green was invited to deliver this address just prior to the recess last month of the legislators, but upon learning that a visit at that time would be impossible, a committee extended another invitation, urging acceptance at any date between May 28 and July 1. Senator Albert E. Hill, of Nashville, was advised last week that Mr. Green would take advantage of the opportunity of addressing the lawmakers on June 11.

Annual convention of the American Federation of Musicians will be held in Chattanooga for one week beginning June 8, and H. S. Kennedy, general chairman of the local committee, had already wired an urgent invitation to President Green to address that body. The committee feels that his presence here at that time is thus practically assured.

President Green visited Chattanooga last fall, and made many local friends, but adverse weather conditions prevented the full measure of entertainment planned by local unionists, and it is hoped that he may be enabled to enjoy some Chattanooga scenery if he finds it possible to return.

Convention committee of Local No. 80 reports plans for the big international gathering progressing possibly as well as could be expected.

Governor's Wife Charges Utilities "Buy" Teachers

(By International Labor News Service.)

Philadelphia, April 16.—Speaking before the republican women of Philadelphia county, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, wife of the governor, declared that professors of economics in Chicago and the university here are being "bought up" by the public utilities in a campaign to "corrupt the minds of the next generation."

"The utilities have picked out professors, saying that the fees are being offered for the privilege of consulting them on certain matters," Mrs. Pinchot charged. She added:

"Of course, such a reason is merely an excuse. The fee is really being paid to get the professor to teach economics that will be favorable to the utilities. Such a buying up of professors is going on in Chicago and in the university here.

"Professors have the privilege of preaching from their platforms what they actually believe, but they certainly are violating the public's trust when they give forth as absolute knowledge doctrines of economics which favor the utilities."

People Are Filched By Public Utilities

Harrisburg, Pa.—Criminal prosecution of the public service commission and some utility companies for "plundering the people," was demanded by Rev. Fr. James R. Cox, of Pittsburg, at a hearing by a legislative committee that is investigating public utilities.

The priest referred specifically to the Scranton-Springbrook Water company, operating in Lackawanna and Luzerne counties, and the Duquesne Light company, of Pittsburg.

The Pittsburg company, the clergyman said, reported a valuation of $49,000,000 for taxing purposes and a valuation of $149,000,000 for rate making purposes.

Ousting the public service commission is not sufficient, the witness insisted. "We need action to properly punish these commissioners and the companies who have plundered the people," he said.

"We have enough evidence, in my amateurish way of thinking, to institute criminal cases and regulate these things for years and years to come.

"If we had the same situation concerning some poor criminal, some boy, we would have prosecuted him long ago, but here they are stealing millions and all we do is to pat them on the back."

USE OF COAL DROPS

Washington.—Fuel efficiency by electric utility power plants the last few years is one cause for the depressed condition of the coal industry.

The federal bureau of mines states that the average consumption of coal in 1902 by these plants amounted to 6.4 pounds per kilowatt-hour, whereas preliminary figures for 1930 show the amount dropped to 1.62 pounds. Power plants that operate street railways is included in this estimate.

Continued Relief For Jobless in Cities Necessary

Despite Opening of Work in Some Lines, Idle Still Need Help, Reports to Hoover Committee Show.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 16.—Necessity of continued relief work for the unemployed in cities is shown by the current report of Colonel Arthur Woods, chairman of the President's Emergency Committee for Unemployment.

The relief work list in Buffalo, employing now 4 700 men, is usually cut off on April 1; but this year the city will continue to employ these men one day per week. A man-a-block system, originally instituted for snow removal, has been swung over in lawn and garden work, thus employing about 700 men, earning from $15 to $20 per week. The group of 140 factories in the Buffalo industrial district have increased employment about 700 over February, and plants on a three-day basis per week have generally increased to the four-day rate.

Los Angeles reports fewer persons applying for meals, clothing and assistance. The city public works is employing 5,000 men on a five-day week, alternating another 5,000 group on the following weeks.

Funds Lacking in St. Louis

In St. Louis it has become necessary to release 630 men who had been employed in emergency work, because of the failure of funds. An effort to raise $300,000 resulted in less than half that amount. Applications for work numbered 18,000 to date, for which there had been found 451 permanent jobs and 1,111 temporary places.

Philadelphia reports a notable movement of workers from the city onto the land, increasing the volume of farm labor by five per cent.

General construction contracts are mounting, and the total is said by Colonel Woods to approach the sum of $1,000,000,000. Paving contracts, which have usually started a month later, are opening up in April in Buffalo.

"Feeler" Thrown Out For Wage Reductions

Washington. — John F. Sinclair, writing a copyrighted article for the North American Newspaper Alliance, says that information from "responsible sources" indicates that Governor Montague Norman, of the Bank of England, is in this country primarily to have American bankers accept Great Britain's policy of what is called "wage adjustment."

Wages of 1,500,000 British workers, it is stated, have been cut during the last 30 days "without serious disturbance." In fact, little has been said about it, writes Mr. Sinclair.

Dr. Lionel D. Eddie, American economist, is quoted as saying that lower wages is inevitable because of reduced retail prices.

"One authority," continues Mr. Sinclair, "estimates that the large corporations already have reduced working men's incomes at least 10 per cent —not by making cuts in the wage rates, but by dividing up the work among more people.

"Organized labor is against wage reductions. The Hoover administration has come out against it. Admittedly, the subject is a delicate one to handle, but the realities of the situation must be faced, sooner or later."

The Sinclair article is in line with previous declarations by bankers, led by Albert H. Wiggin, head of the Chase National bank of New York City, the largest bank on the North American continent.

U. S. To Deport Smuggled Seamen

Washington.—Deportation of aliens smuggled into this country as "seamen" is ordered by the department of labor.

The United States supreme court has aided in this movement by its recent decision that an alien who has unlawfully been in this country for three years can be deported.

The aliens ship in foreign ports and pay from $200 to $400. They pose as "seamen," and when the vessel docks at an American port they step ashore and disappear in the large cities.

The King bill, passed three times by the senate, would correct this condition by having all seamen examined by government officials before the ship is docked. Fake seamen would be held and shipped to their home port at the expense of the vessel that brought them. Vessel owners oppose the King bill, which failed to be voted on in the house in the closing hours of the last congress.

The department of labor is aware of the futility of attempting to stop this influx of aliens until legislation along lines of the King bill is passed.

Under present conditions the government deports the aliens—when they are finally discovered after much expense. Under the King bill the aliens would easily be discovered and shipowners would pay for deportation.

Exodus Is Held To Help Relieve Unemployment

Labor Department Pushing Campaign Against Aliens, Helped by Court Decision, But Hampered by Lack of Ship Law.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 16.—Based on a United States supreme court decision to which little attention was given when it was rendered in March, the United States department of labor has launched a campaign of deportation that early this month turned the tide so sharply that for the first time in history there were more departures than entries.

The supreme court decision brings into the labor department's net those who entered the country by sea illegally more than three years ago and adds great numbers to those liable to deportation.

Information at the department of labor this week is that the real drive against illegal entrants has just begun, but already the tide has been so turned that the rate of expulsion exceeds the rate of immigration.

Jobs Opened to U. S. Citizens.

Whether the deportees are mostly skilled workers is not known, but it is known that there is among them a high percentage of skilled workers. Deportation, working a hardship on the deportees, is opening jobs to legal residents of the United States and is expected to help the unemployment situation considerably.

A phase of the illegal immigrant situation not generally understood is that the work of the department of labor has been increased by reason of the failure of the last congress to enact a bill compelling ships to depart with a crew as large as that brought to American ports. The bill was passed by the house but was shelved in the senate as the result of representations made by the state department which acted on a protest from the British embassy, spokesman for a labor party government!

Deportation Drive Pushed.

The department of labor has declined to comment on this phase of the situation, but it does admit that desertions from ships' crews are constantly adding to the illegal resident population and that the department is deporting these illegal entrants as rapidly as it can find them.

The deportation wave has reached a point where since the middle of January nearly 1,500 have been deported from the New York district alone. Deportations are expected to total 20,000 by the end of the year and the figure may be much larger.

Deportees are found not only singly, but in groups, such as a group of forty discovered in Danbury, Conn., the first of this week.

Vigorous Action Promised.

"I'm going after every evader of our alien laws, regardless of nationality, creed or color, because I hold the belief that persons who have no right to be here should give their places to Americans," Secretary of Labor Doak declared.

Saying he was aware that many considered such extensive deporting as "inhuman," he added:

"My answer is that the government should protect its own citizens against illegal invaders. This I propose to do with every weapon in my power. Law is law, and I intend to enforce it as long as I hold my office."

Campaign Won't Be Halted.

Reports that court action in the cases of Guido Serio, Italian, and Sadaichi Kenmotsu, both alleged communists, would halt the labor department's campaign, were denied by Secretary Doak to International Labor News for The Labor World. These cases, he pointed out, were in court on their merits and decisions on them would affect only the cases involved. "Each deportation is an individual case," he said. "There is no such thing as mass deportation. A record is made in each case and each case rests on its own merits."

The Civil Liberties union is backing Serio, while the International Labor Defense, red organization, is backing the Japanese.

CARPENTERS TO BE AT JACKSON "100 PER CENT"

Cheek Says Every Local in State Will Be Represented at Council Meet.

Every local union of Carpenters in the state of Tennessee will be represented when the twelfth annual convention of the State Council of Carpenters convenes at Jackson on Thursday, April 30, for a two-days session, according to W. E. Cheek, secretary.

A review of trade conditions through Tennessee will consume some time of the convention, while other matters of interest to carpenters will be discussed, said Mr. Cheek.

Headquarters for the convention will be in the Southern hotel, and a number of entertainment courtesies have been arranged for the delegates and visitors to this meeting.

After the completion of the twelfth annual convention of the State Council of Carpenters the delegates will have the oopportunity of spending Sunday in Jackson in sight-seeing or enjoying themselves as they choose, and on Monday, May 4, the same delegates will represent their organizations at the three-days session of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Local 74 last week elected Tom Rose to represent that organization at the council meeting.

Strike Against Power Company Now State-Wide

Electrical Workers Out in All Plants of Georgia Utility Concern, Which Denies Men Right to Organize.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Atlanta, Ga., April 16.—The strike in Atlanta of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers against the Georgia Power company has developed into a statewide contest, with between 500 and 600 men out all over Georgia, wherever the company has its properties.

With the support of the Atlanta Federation of Trades already behind the strikers, the Georgia Federation of Labor has now taken up the battle and through its president, O. E. Petry, has lined up solidly with the electrical workers fighting for the right to belong to a labor union and to bargain collectively. These rights have been denied by the power company officials.

Plans are being made for an intensive statewide drive against the power company interests, and at the forthcoming convention of the Georgia Federation of Labor at Brunswick the electrical workers' strike will be one of the principal subjects of discussion.

President Petry, meeting with the executive committee of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, has pledged his best efforts, and the full co-operation of the state organization, to bring the strike to a successful conclusion.

George L. Googe, of Savannah, representative of the A. F. of L., and G. C. Brown, consulting engineer of that organization, have been in Atlanta conferring with the officials of the Atlanta central body and the electrical workers, formulating plans for helping the strikers.

Dr. John R. Mott Raps Industrialists

(Special Staff Correspondence)

Nashville, April 16.—Dr. John R. Mott, internationally known traveler-lecturer, formerly head of the Student Volunteer movement, more recently executive chairman of the International Missionary council and president of the World Alliance of the Y. M. C. A., brought a serious indictment this week against American-owned industries in foreign lands. In the second of his series of 1931 Cole lectures at Vanderbilt university Dr. Mott scathingly rebuked so-called Christian capitalists of America who are establishing industries abroad and working women and children twelve hours a day and giving them in return a mere pittance for a wage. He told his hearers these capitalists were thinking only of profits, and in many cases expected their investments to return to them increased a hundredfold. In concluding his lecture the widely traveled humanitarian said these American capitalists were forcing men to work in almost abject poverty, breaking up home industries of the peoples of such lands, and family and village life were being sacrificed to the god Mammon. He pointed out it was up to the churches through their foreign missionaries to break up these evils.

AYMON SEES GOOD PROSPECT FOR CONVENTION

Declares Interest in Meeting State-Wide.

LOCAL UNIONS AWAKE TO ITS IMPORTANCE

Thirty-fifth Gathering Will Make History for Tennessee Workers.

PAUL J. AYMON
President Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Central bodies and local unions throughout the state are alive to the necessity for a full representation at the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and when the meeting is called to order on Monday, May 4, practically the normal number of delegates will be in attendance, is the prediction of Paul J. Aymon, president, who visited homefolks for a few hours this week on his way to Nashville to confer with officials on final plans for the gathering. Unemployment and the generally unsettled conditions in the state will be taken up, among other vital questions, and although many local unions have been hard hit financially, even most of these are devising ways and means to be represented at Jackson.

"Many important questions will be considered by the delegates to the convention this year," Mr. Aymon said. "Most important, however, will be the action of the convention on the problems of unemployment and the attending difficulties, such as some employers who are taking advantage of the unsettled industrial conditions and are forcing wages to a lower level. Then, too, labor is vitally interested in the financial condition of our state, and will take some action on the enormous sums of money belonging to the state which was lost during the recent financial upheaval. The report of the chairman of the legislative committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor will be heard at this convention, and as the Tennessee legislature will reconvene shortly after the close of the convention, it is very probable that some recommendations will be made affecting proposed legislation.

"The delegates and visitors to Jackson will find that even though the convention will be a busy one, that there will be plenty of time for amusement features. The committee from the Jackson Trades and Labor council have arranged a number of entertainment features, sight-seeing trips, and finally, a banquet and dance for the grand finale.

"No labor organization in Tennessee should fail to avail itself of a full representation of delegates to this convention. History will be in the making at this gathering, and let it be said that the action of the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor is representative of the entire labor movement of our state."

Fight to Control Tobacco Company

New York.—The depression is removing the gloss from business supermen who were credited with creating large profits when good times were at their peak.

Stockholders in several representative companies are objecting to policies that were formerly ignored or unknown. The changed viewpoint can be traced to failure to pay dividends or the threat that dividends will be cut.

The Bethlehem Steel corporation must contest a suit started by a minority group of stockholders who demand that $32,000,000 voted as bonuses to officials be returned.

The P. Lorillard company, one of the major units in the tobacco industry also faces a fight started by minority stockholders who object to millions of dollars paid to higher-ups as a bonus.

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

"The rise of labor in America cannot be understood without a preliminary survey of the British industrial system . . . to which many relics of tenure and of class and governmental responsibility can be traced."—Samuel P. Orth.

As suggested last week the first inception of a "labor question" is seen to take form in the guild system of England. The guild system developed fast once the feudal barons began driving the serfs off their immense estates and the former land toilers began to flow into the towns and cities seeking employment. Hence after a few years the guilds could hardly absorb all their apprentices as fast as they became eligible to journeyman status. And, too, the masters were becoming a class conscious and drawing closer and closer together as a body of employers, so year after year the number of skilled craftsmen who had no shadow of a hope of ever being masters grew larger. The guilds were well managed and thoroughly disciplined, the relations of master to journeyman and apprentices, wages, hours, quality and quantity of output, etc., all being in accordance with minute regulations. Remains of magnificent guild halls eloquently bespeak the power and splendor of the guilds during the Middle Ages.

By the middle of the fourteenth century the "labor class" was a recognized quantity as a result of the development of the guild system, and as early as 1450 laws were in force dealing with the labor question. But coincident with the rise of the guild workers and their masters there was taking place a parallel movement in the rural sections and in the suburbs of the cities which, after the decline of the guild system, became the prevailing mode of industry in England. It will be described next week.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—When was the bricklayers' union first organized, and in what state?

A.—On October 17, 1865, in Philadelphia, Pa., where seven men belonging to the Philadelphia and Baltimore unions met, drafted a constitution, elected officers and instructed the secretary "to correspond with all bricklayers' unions known to exist in the United States, requesting them to send delegates to the next convention, to meet in Baltimore on January 8, 1866." The convention was held as planned, with delegates from eight cities present and the International Bricklayers' Union of North America was established. Three changes of name followed, the organization finally becoming known by its present name, Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International Union of America.

Q. — Has the International Molders' union recently taken action on behalf of Thomas J. Mooney?

A.—President M. J. Keough, of the union, in March addressed a letter to Governor James Rolph, Jr., of California, urging him to grant Mooney "an unqualified pardon, and thus right the wrong which the great state of California has done an innocent man." President Keough's letter asserts that he is personally convinced of the absolute innocence of Mooney.

RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"I began taking Cardui when in a weakened, run-down condition," writes Mrs. F. S. Perrit, of Wesson, Miss. "I took one bottle, and I seemed to improve so much that I sent for six bottles. After I had taken the six bottles, I seemed entirely well.

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

"I gave my daughter Cardui and it helped to relieve irregular . . ."

BANKERS AND WAGE CUTS

The statement that the governor of the Bank of England is in this country to discuss wage reductions with American bankers should be given more than passing notice by trade unionists and sympathizers.

The statement may be denied—as bankers usually do not announce their purpose—but the statement should remind workers of the power of these financiers and their attitude toward lower wages. Industrialists, retail business men and statesmen may declare for high wages, but the bankers hold the key to the situation by their control of the nation's credit.

The banker knows nothing of industry. He loans money at a certain per cent and he demands returns. To secure his per cent he is willing to revert—as he is now doing—to the discredited philosophy of the iron law of wages.

The head of America's largest bank has gone so far as to declare:

"It is not true that high wages make prosperity—instead, prosperity makes high wages."

In other words, trade unions have nothing to do with maintaining high wages. Neither is high purchasing power a factor in sustaining prosperous times.

Wages, according to this banker's reasoning, depend upon the employer, who graciously permits a certain percentage of income, sufficient to maintain a bread basket standard of living, to sift into the workers' pockets in the form of wages. These bankers would overthrow America's wage philosophy that has been accepted after a quarter of a century agitation by organized labor. The bankers are revamping theories that prevailed in England 75 years ago—high wages increase production costs and interfere with dividends.

Let no organized worker put his trust in glowing statements by employers or office holders who talk of high wages. These men should be given credit for sincerity, but there is a power beyond them—the banker who controls credit. He can dictate—generally by secret methods—the terms under which money is loaned to employers.

If organized labor permits this bankers' policy to be unchallenged—if the purpose of these bankers is unknown—they will continue their policy of stealthily undermining the nation's concept of wages. This is the first essential for a mass attack on wages that will eventually swamp every protest.

Organized workers should draw a sharp line between the business man who favors high wages, because of increased purchasing power, and bankers who want low wages that per cent is assured.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

Recognizing that the spirit of domination by a small group who control the bulk of the wealth of the United States is unjust, there are about umpty-eleven varieties of so-called industrial democracy being advocated by people whose powers of reasoning they have delegated to a clicking typewriter and whose only hope for success for their plans is in selling them to magazine editors and book publishers.

When we read in the newspapers, as we did this week where the Kellogg company, cereal manufacturers, Battle Creek, Mich., has adopted the six-hour day as its permanent operating policy we toss our magazines and books aside and wonder.

We all claim to know what is wrong with our industrial and social life, but nobody seems to want to get down to business and right these wrongs. We need to get down to making adjustments and applying some of our boasted knowledge. It's a plain case of "put up or shut up."

We know the system is condemned which regards men and women as mere instruments for the production of wealth rather than the human ends for whom wealth is produced. We know, for instance, that steady maintenance of output is more possible under the short workday and is better for the workers. Lewis J. Brown, president of the Kellogg company, says his company's experiment with the six-hour day since December has proved highly satisfactory and profitable to both stockholders and employes. Why don't we now make use of this particular knowledge presented us in this case and many more like it? Our greed and desire for power won't let us. There is no other answer.

THE CHICAGO ELECTION.

The defeat of "Big Bill" Thompson and the triumph of Anton J. Cermak in the mayoralty race in Chicago, one of the chief strongholds of the gangster element in America, ought to give courage to law-abiding citizens of other cities to take steps to get gangland under control and drive out of power its henchmen scattered among police departments, law courts and municipal offices.

Under the protection of the city officials and police departments of many of our biggest cities the gangsters have practically had their own way for quite a few years. They have "muscled" their way into such a position of power as to be able to dictate whatever terms they wished with their victims with apparently no fear of molestation from the police and prey-

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XXII.
AGAINST SORDID ANXIETY

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus saw in worldly possessions a far more formidable enemy of the Kingdom of God than we of today account them to be. He did not dread poverty as we dread it—as something which lowers our social standing. To Jesus poverty could be a blessing, for when the purse is empty, the lasting spiritual possessions of the soul grow large and luminous, precious and worth while. The poor, as Dr. Stalker says, "are less liable than the rich to feel that one world is enough." Our Lord knew that as a man comes into possession of the means whereby life is made easy he is more apt to forget Him from whose hands have come the basic essentials of his wealth!

What do Jesus' words mean about the ravens sowing and reaping not, yet God feeding them, or what does He mean when He says the lilies of the field neither toil nor spin yet are more brilliant in their simple vesture than Solomon was in all his glory, or what can He mean when He admonishes us to not be of doubtful mind? Jesus is pointing out to us that the possessions of a man, which he values so highly, are not really the most important thing in life. Life consisteth not in the abundance of a man's possessions but in the way he lives (i. e., makes use of what he does possess while he lives). Again, Jesus is inviting us out into life's sunshine and warning us it is foolish to crouch back among the shadows and poisoning today's happiness in the Father's bright world by borrowing tomorrow's troubles.

Martha, you remember, fussed and fretted a lot as she was preparing a meal one day when Jesus was at the house. Her sister Mary sat quietly at the feet of our Lord and listened attentively while he talked to her. For this Mary was upbraided by Martha. But Jesus interrupts Martha by taking her to task for chiding Mary for wanting to get some of the more precious spiritual elements of life just at that moment. Mary, He says, has taken the wisest course—"she has chosen the better part." He is proud of Mary because she is able to think of the spiritual side of life as well as the practical. What we need, as Jesus points out, is an even balance of the two, probably with just a little more emphasis on the spiritual. Life with its pressing problems always before us is going to get enough of our attention, it is our spiritual development that we must really fear for.

"Which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit?" asked Jesus on one occasion. Not that "taking thought" about anything in this world is basically wrong, but Jesus is making it clear that needless worry is wrong, sordid anxiety is poisonous to the human system, and along with our attention to practical things man needs also to look after his spiritual welfare.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

James L. Fieser, vice-chairman of the American Red Cross, is reported to have told unemployed miners that persons who were suffering and destitute because of unemployment were no concern of his organization.

Fieser indicated that disasters were the Red Cross' specialty, and just now it is dealing in relief for the drought-stricken areas.

"Drought relief is on our beat," he said, "but not unemployment relief."

This is a most peculiar attitude. If unemployment is not a disaster, then in heaven's name what is a disaster, anyway? A lot of people would like to know.

The opinion expressed by Mr. Fieser, and previously by others, is one of the reasons why many wage earners have not been more generous when asked to give financial support to the Red Cross.

* * *

In the days of so-called prosperity there was a tremendous amount of desertion of the farm for the chances of making good wages in the cities. This tendency has shown a decided reverse in the last few months, owing to unemployment in the industrial centers, and the farm population is now increasing, for the first time since 1920, when the department of agriculture began to make estimates of the number of persons living on farms.

The farm population now is 27,430,000 the department announces, compared with 27,222,000 a year ago. This is a gain of 208,000 in 12 months.

The gain in farm population occurs at a time when professional farmers are faced with business hazards which are more difficult than any that have arisen in a quarter of a century. Prices of farm products have slumped to a level below those of the prewar period, and the making of profits through farming is rated as extremely difficult.

Governmental functions at times seem fantastic, but at other times quite useful. For instance, it is useful to be told how to reduce your waistline and become more efficient—but you must not reduce it too much—for there is efficiency in a little overplus of fat—a reserve, so to speak.

One thing we learn is that persons too lean are apt to be nervous and have too little resistance; not as much as one alightly fat. A fat person, a too fat person, we are told, has too much of a load to carry, and efficiency is reduced by the difficulty in getting around quickly.

This comes from the bureau of home economics. It gives further advice on the diet, what foods to eat, how much of it, or how little, in order to reach top notch of well-being.

Now if this or some other bureau will just be good enough to tell 6,000,000 unemployed where they can earn enough money to buy some food, any quality and any amount, food for themselves and their families, who are developing too many nerves from being too lean, things will take on a better aspect.

ing at will on private citizens, private business and labor unions.

The country has been severe in its criticism of gang rule and municipal rottenness in Chicago, but it must be remembered some of the corrupt conditions of that city are duplicated to a greater or lesser degree in practically every one of our municipalities. Only Chicago smells a little worse because its corruption is on a magnificent and intensified scale and well advertised.

Will the example set them by Chicago be followed by other cities as soon as possible, or shall we be forced by their indifference to face the horrible truth that municipal corruption and gangsterism are a part of present-day American life and therefore no desire prevails to exterminate either of them?

LAST OF THE BOURBONS.

"Le roi est mort . . ."
"The king is dead . . ."

It is the cry brought down from ancient times and uttered by people living under monarchial rule when their king's death becomes known to them.

Within the last few days democracy the world over has breathed these words softly—with no little feeling of joy. A king is dead, alright, although in no fit condition for the undertaker to take charge of as yet.

King Alfonso XIII of Spain, last of the Bourbons to rule in Europe, is just the same as dead—as a king, at least—for he has abdicated his throne at his people's "request."

His exit from the number of the few kings left means another people is relieved of the onerous task of supporting him and bowing in menial deference to his majestic person. With his abdication the way is cleared for his people to exercise now the power of ruling their own and their land's destinies. In this respect his passing from the scene of life as a king is a godsend.

Laws! Laws!

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

If every law passed by congress since 1900 was an automobile and these automobiles were placed bumper to bumper on one of our national highways we would have a motorcade reaching from Chattanooga to away down below San Francisco! There has been a total of 25,000 laws enacted by congress since the opening of the present century—about 15,000 the first decade, 3,000 the next ten years, 6,000 the next ten—and the last congress before it adjourned said we needed 1,524 more laws and didn't hesitate to give them to us. Are we really any better off with this multiplicity of laws? As an illustration, what has a single one of these laws done to save us from the present depression? In candid truth, congress, like all the state legislative bodies, enacts just about two-thirds of the laws it writes simply because it is in session and is a law-making body. Law-makers seem obsessed with the idea they must follow an age-long custom. Doesn't it seem congress would be following common sense instead of custom if it appointed about 90 per cent of its members to small standing committees whose duty it would be to spend, say, the next five years, doing nothing but studying the needs and conditions of the country and enacting no laws but those deemed necessary by a two-thirds majority of both houses?

Public Utilities Evade Probe Costs

Concord, N. H.—Governor Winant favors charging back to public utilities the cost of investigations of their rates by the public service commission.

The governor in an address before the state senate said that in order for the public service commission to carry out its obligation of rate regulation it would be necessary for "an additional appropriation which would be paid out of the pockets of the general taxpayers, whether or not they live within the area served by the utility company under investigation.

"Today the cost of the defense against lowering rates by public utilities is borne by consumers who pay the rates objected to as unreasonable," said the governor.

Shorter Work Week, Higher Pay Held Only Unemployment Remedy

Better Balance Between Mass Production and Distribution of Goods Must Come If Depressions Are to Be Prevented, Women's Bureau Head Tells Y. W. C. A. Conference.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 16.—A strong, intelligent and persistent effort must be made to work out a better balance between mass production and the distribution of goods produced if we are to find a permanent solution to the unemployment problem, Miss Mary Anderson, director of the women's bureau of the United States Department of Labor, told a conference held by the Y. W. C. A. here to discuss unemployment.

"Today we are searching for more than remedies for the immediate distress and suffering caused by the present acute unemployment," Miss Anderson said. "We are searching for preventives that will enable us to avoid unemployment in the future, and to do this requires the finding of a better balance between our mass production and the distribution of the goods and services that we produce.

"For today we are not faced with a situation of over-production. The problem is rather one of under-consumption. While perfecting the processes of mass production, not enough attention has been directed to seeing that the buying power of our people has been enabled to keep pace with the out-turning of goods."

Home Market Most Important.

American industry is largely dependent on its home market, Miss Anderson pointed out. "Here is consumed nine-tenths of our total production. The home market is nine times as important to American business as is the foreign market, and it is a workers' market, rising and falling, as do wages, with the increase and decrease in unemployment.

"It is to our unemployed and underpaid workers that we can look as the greatest potential market in the world. If they could buy what they need to maintain an American standard of living, much of the fear of unemployment would vanish.

"And the wants of our people are almost insatiable. There would be little fear of saturation points, and industry could continue with increased activity with the maintaining and increasing of the purchasing power of the rank and file of our people.

"We can manufacture for the wants of the people, but if the people have not the money to spend and the time in which to consume goods, the market becomes stagnant and business dislocation and poverty follow."

Miss Anderson pointed out that while wages paid in industry have fallen since 1929, more interest and dividends were paid to stockholders in the first 11 months of 1930 than in 1929.

"Adequate wages, that will bring to life our great potential workers' market by a more equitable distribtion of the national income, constitute the most powerful, far-reaching and permanent solution of our unemployment problem."

Hand in hand with increased purchasing power, Miss Anderson said, must go more leisure, more time for consumption of the volume and variety of the goods and services produced.

Shorter Work Day Progresses.

"In this country the movement for the shorter work day has advanced through many different channels. In some cases progressive employers have realized the value of reasonable work hours and led the way. In others, long and hard-fought struggles of workers and their organizations have brought the short day to an industry. Often, especially in the case of women, it has been the state itself that has set the limit of the working day or week."

The shorter work day means more general employment for everybody, Miss Anderson said. It means more regular work for those employed and increased time for the worker to make use of many products that can be consumed only in leisure hours.

"And so, in seeking to establish the balance in our economic life that will prevent unemployment and work toward a national industrial prosperity, insuring the opportunity of work to every able-bodied man and woman, we can look to no sounder basis for industrial progress than the shorter work week and a well-paid working population."

Coal Concern Broke; Employed Communists

Bicknell, Ind.—The Knox Consolidated Coal company, largest concern of its kind in this state, filed a petition in bankruptcy in the federal court at Indianapolis. Its assets are $1,263,943, and liabilities $4,346,976.

This concern violated an agreement with the United Mine Workers and imported communist strikebreakers. The "reds" organized a local of the so-called National Miners union, with direct connection with the "red" international of Moscow.

The communists worked for wages that are lower than the regular union, and made no concealment of their purpose to smash the United Mine Workers. They were aided by the company, which is now wrecked and owes three times as much as its assets.

Iron-Fisted Bankers Arouse Revolt Against Domination

"Now No Bigger Than Man's Hand, But Appearing in Most Unexpected Places," Editor Finds in Survey of Business and Management Opinion on Industrial Freedom.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, April 16.—Roy Dickinson, whose astonishing article on the turning of big business management toward better planning on a basis of proper distribution of buying power in wages, already reported in these dispatches, has created a real stir, returns to the attack in Printers' Ink, of which he is associate editor.

In this weekly magazine of the advertising and managament world, Dickinson pours hot shot into the ranks of reactionary bankers and candidly warns them that "many people seem to be bored with a certain type of bankers," the type of which is obvious.

"This little revolt," Dickinson writes, "now no bigger than a man's hand, is appearing in the most unexpected places."

"An emergence or perhaps a revolt of management is under way," proclaims the caption of the article, which is perhaps the most outspoken condemnation of those banks that seek domination of industry yet written outside of trade union publications.

Freedom from Bank Control Is Demanded.

Dickinson takes up the cudgels for management and for freedom of management from bank control, which, he points out, hates change and new methods, while management must be fertile in the creation of new methods. He shies a hefty rock also at the type of management that lands in a good job where an industry can be stifled simply by the good old method of having luck in the choice of a grandfather.

Editorials from a number of the magazines of commerce and industry are cited by Dickinson in building up the case against control by banks. He shows a goodly and rising tide of resentment against such fulminations as those of the Chase National bank, which has been all for wage slashes and, he says, "it has amazed me recently to hear, for example, how many people admit they could get along nicely without hearing Rome C. Stephenson, president of the American Bankers' association, make any more speeches."

Bankers Say "Don't"—And Take Their Profits.

Dickinson criticizes the bankers for their effort to dominate management and for a continuously negative point of view. His contention is that the type of bankers under fire make no constructive criticism, offer no plans for moving forward, but veto and check and deny, in the face of a situation that calls for progressive action. To show some of the bitter condemnations of the Stephenson banking type Dickinson quotes the following from "Factory and Industrial Management:"

"Reduced working time has already reduced income of wage earners; why cut deeper? Have bankers not yet learned that costs of production may be cut while wages and earnings are increasing? This has been proved time upon time during the past twenty years; ever since in fact the gospel of Taylor, Gantt, Emerson, Gilbreth and their followers has penetrated into factory after factory. What about scientific research and engineering? Are we completely to abandon all the gains made during recent years? Does business recovery lie in that direction? Emphatically no! It lies in the direction of a fuller utilization of every iota of managerial skill and an even more complete use of the brains and equipment of our scientific and engineering leaders. If this means shorter hours, well and good. Management is not bankrupt."

"What Country Needs" Is Bankers on Skids.

He then quotes from a recent book, "What This Country Needs," by Jay Franklin:

"They have done nothing to anticipate or to control industrial depression and unemployment, and the bang of closing doors in hundreds of banks shows that they are not even capable of maintaining their own solvency. And these are the institutions which are going to save mankind, these are the men who get the headlines and the honorary degrees. They can't manage their own affairs intelligently and show no sense of responsibility to the public whose money they use. The skids are ready for them."

That more and more business men and leaders in management are hunting for ways to get along without the bankers, or to put them in their place as merchants of credit, but without the power to control, is Dickinson's belief. Driving pointedly at the group under fire he writes this stinging rebuke:

> "Ordinary men seem to be getting more and more doubtful of the widely advertised capacity of bankers to administer all of mankind in a big, broad way. I have even heard presidents of great corporations say recently that management will have to emerge more and more from the domination of bankers, make them realize what business is, what its functions are and ask them to keep out of management."

Money Masters Not For Self-Deflation.

Pursuing the subject he adds pointedly:

"There is no doubt about the fact that there is one small group of bankers so anxious to deflate everybody but themselves that they are annoying some of the best management brains in the country."

He predicts "at least an emergence of management in the next few years," adding that "some people even go so far as to call it a real revolt."

"If through the building up of big cash surpluses, and what some economists have called a misuse of the credit privilege, some banks and bankers have been able to get ownership of industries, should they immediately try to run a business as they would a bank?" Dickinson asks.

"There are bankers who are as progressive as that in their looks ahead," says Dickinson, after quoting Owen D. Young's advocacy of the idea of using capital "as a tool," and then he concludes: "It is too bad they are not more vocal. For it isn't a good thing for people to be bored with bankers at a time when they are thinking hard about the high cost of outworn ideas."

British Workers Resist Wage Cuts; Different Story Is Told U. S. Labor

Washington, April 16.—Wage reduction proposals are rejected by British workers, according to information received by Frank Morrison, secretary A. F. of L.

British workers are also publishing profits of employers who demand lower rates.

This attitude is contrary to statements by American financial writers, one of whom recently stated in a syndicated article:

"During the last thirty days wage reductions have been agreed to by more than 1,500,000 workers in Great Britain without any serious disturbance. In fact, little has been said about it."

This meek acceptance of wage cuts is denied by Will Sherwood, an official of the National Union of General and Municipal Workers, who writes from London to Secretary Morrison:

"We are having a good deal of controversy in this country in regard to the need of reducing existing wage levels, and for some months there has been a sustained press campaign, aided by the liberal political party, for a complete 10 per cent cut on all wages."

The British Employers' Federation flooded England with a pamphlet entitled "Realities and Problems," with a view of creating the necessary public opinion to sustain wage reductions, said Mr. Sherwood.

Conferences of employers and representatives of shipbuilding, engineering (machinists) and iron, steel and metal workers of all grades are being held. The trade unionists challenge the need for wage cuts, and have shattered the claim that the cost of social services (national health insurance, unemployment insurance and widows' pensions) are paid by the employers.

The workers quote employers to uphold the claim that "rationalization" (called "stabilization" in the United States) contributes to unemployment.

The unionists say: "If you close down factories, shipyards and engineering shops, if you 'rationalize' thousands of men out of their jobs for your own objects and your own purposes, these men have a claim which must be met and towards which they have contributed heavily through their own wages."

The unionists twit employers for objecting to rates (taxes) after receiving generous bonuses from the government. The objection to taxes is classed by the unionists as "ungrateful clamour."

The unionists also take employers' testimony to prove that plants are obsolete, that they operate with worn-out tools. This applies to engineering, textiles, iron, steel, etc.

"The average output in a day of an American blast furnace is almost equal to the average output in a week of British blast furnaces," they say.

The unionists make crushing reply to the employers' claim. The conferences indicate that employers are not sure that they can mold public opinion to accept their wage-reduction plan. The employers are also awake to the determination of workers to resist.

Ohio Coal Miners Facing Starvation

Indianapolis.—"Wages for Ohio miners have been reduced—not once, but many times," says United Mine Workers' Journal, official magazine United Mine Workers of America.

"All decent working conditions have been destroyed. Starvation and want prevail among the miners and their families to such an extent that some counties in that state are nearly bankrupt from taking care of their destitute population.

"Every source of public and private relief has been taxed to the utmost and there is an appalling amount of poverty and destitution among miners' families that has not been and cannot be relieved.

"Company stores were established by coal companies which took business away from local merchants and left them high and dry. Many of them were forced into bankruptcy by this double-cross act of the coal companies, whose promised prosperity has not materialized.

"Instead of producing more coal and affording more days' work for miners, the wage-cutting policy resulted in less output. Those who secured jobs in the mines have seen their wives and children suffer for want of food because they are unable to earn enough to provide for them.

"Local merchants long ago discovered that anti-union operators have gyped them. Scores have been driven out of business by company stores and the fact that miners have no money. Banks have been closed in a number of mining towns and the mining section of Ohio is in a more deplorable condition today than ever before."

A continuous demand for the union label, shop cord and working button will bring joy and sunshine into the lives of thousands of trade unionists

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

As days roll by the convention gets closer and closer. The local will certainly have to pull together 100 per cent to get the convention over the top. It's entirely too large a task for two or three men. The only assurance of its success will be every man doing his part and doing it well.

The crowd was a sight not soon to be forgotten, the grandstand a solid mass of humanity, with the different colors of clothes harmonizing throughout. And what a game. MANY METHODS USED TO PUSH UNION LABEL IN BIG CAMPAIGN

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 16.—Many different methods of union label agitation are being used in the big nation-wide label campaign, now on under the direction of the Union Label Trades department of the American Federation of Labor. Some of the methods follow:

The radio, mass meetings, distribution of literature, moving pictures free to the merchants to interest them in the work, a day or week selected by different local unions when each member is required to spend at least $1 or more for some union label article, a prize being offered to the member who has purchased the greatest number of such articles, local newspaper representatives urging the merchants to stress the union label in their advertising, cataloging union members as to where living and other commodities are purchased, window cards given to business houses, letters to business men, clubs and lodges, setting forth the object of the campaign, label exhibits, banquets at which the speakers call attention to the campaign and its object, advertising through the local newspapers, label entertainments, broadcasting invitation to unorganized to attend label mass meetings.

Since the last report the following central bodies have joined in the campaign: Kern county, Cal.; Lancaster, Pa.; Orlando, Fla.; Waterloo, Ia.; Duluth, Minn.; Boise, Idaho; Boston, Mass.; St. John, N. B., Canada; Oshkosh, Wis.; Janesville, Wis.; Grand Island, Neb.; Santa Rosa, Cal.; Salina, Kans.; New London, Conn.

John J. Manning, secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades department, points out that the present campaign, which will last through April, presents a fine opportunity for all trade unionists to unite on a program of creating an interest in union labeled merchandise and pushing union services of all kinds.

POWER TRUST DEALT HARD BLOW; DENIED FREE HAND TO SET RATES

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 16.—The federal power commission upset Attorney-General Mitchell's ruling that the Appalachian Electric Power company may erect its proposed dam across the New river, in West Virginia, under a "minor" permit, free from the accounting and valuation provisions of the federal power act.

The attorney-general holds that the New river is not a navigable stream, and therefore does not come under the federal act. The decision would create a precedent by permitting this power company to build the dam without having to report costs to the federal commission. With this freedom assured there would be no control of rates based on values for this or numberless other streams. Rates could be charged at the will of the company.

The commission holds that the New river is a "feeder" for navigable streams and that the dam must be constructed under a standard form of license.

Waterpower conservationists throughout the country were aroused at the Mitchell decision, which would undermine federal control of these utilities. Several states supported the decision under the plea of "state rights."

The National Popular Government league defended the federal power act, but the federal power commission refused to permit the league to be represented by attorneys who would appear in behalf of the public. The United States attorney-general is on the other side of the question. The commission, however, permitted the league to file a brief, which was signed by several well-known lawyers, including Jackson H. Ralston, former counsel for the A. F. of L., and who now resides in California.

The commission's decision puts the power trust in an awkward position. Under the Mitchell rule ground was prepared to wreck the federal power act by taking control of many streams out of the hands of the commission by issuing "minor" permits to power companies.

If the trust challenges the commission's decision it repudiates its professed faith in federal regulation and strengthens sentiment in favor of public ownership.

Extra Auto Capacity Means Big Overhead

New York.—Excessive plant capacity in the auto industry is "eating its head off," according to an editorial in the Automotive Daily News.

The auto industry, says this trade publication, is built to a capacity of 8,000,000 motor vehicles a year. The enormous output of 5,621,000 units in 1929 was still about 1,500,000 vehicles below the industry's capacity.

"What is the solution?" asks the paper. "A good many economists will thank the man who finds one," it continues.

"Certainly the automotive industry has got to take up in some way the slack between a production capacity of 8,000,000 vehicle units and a demand for somewhere around 4,000,000 units. It can not logically expect the demand to increase fast enough to meet the plant capacity factors within any imminent space of time.

"Plant capacity means overhead. In the first place, there is the cost of land, building construction, machinery and other equipment. In the second place, any plant or segment thereof brings with it operating expenses. Even if it is not in use, insurance must be maintained, watchmen and mechanics must be paid to care for the idle machinery. Thus an idle plant or portion thereof may be said to be 'eating its head off,' exactly as a horse idle in the barn is said to perform that interesting operation.

"Under certain conditions it is quite possible for a manufacturing organization to be eaten out of house and home by idle plant space."

Hill Company Again Hits Local Workers

Coal Miners Seek Relief From Oppression

ORGANIZATION HELD ONLY HOPE FOR INDUSTRY

Non-Union Policy of Operators Has Failed.

NATIONAL UNION RETURNS TO FIELD

Repeated and Insistent Appeals of Workers Finally Heeded by U. M. W. of A., and Work of Reorganization in Tennessee and Kentucky Is Begun — Many Owners Welcome Move.

BEN WILLIAMS

Repeated appeals from the coal miners of Tennessee and Kentucky, which have become more insistent as working conditions became unbearable, have at last been answered by the United Mine Workers of America, and already machinery has been set into motion with the purpose of reorganizing these sorely-afflicted people, and through co-operation with the mine operators to lift the industry in this section to something approaching its former status, when workers were thoroughly organized and worked in accord with their employers to insure the highest efficiency in the operation of the mines.

Already in the southeastern Kentucky fields splendid progress has been made, and it is apparent that the operators, a few years ago bitterly antagonistic to the unionization of the workers, are welcoming with open arms the return of the miners' organization.

Ben Williams, representative in this district for the United Mine Workers for several years, has been returned to the field, and is now busily engaged conducting a survey of conditions. Mr. Williams enjoyed the respect and esteem of the miners in this section, and for the most part of the operators, and his wise leadership and counsel will no doubt prove a valuable factor in the readjustment which is now being attempted. Mr. Williams said Thursday that his headquarters will probably be at Cookeville, in the center of the district. He will, however, spend considerable time in Chattanooga, where he is well and favorably known.

"Condition of the mining industry in this section has grown steadily worse," Mr. Williams said Thursday to a representative of The Labor World, "since the operators, some four or five years ago, determined to destroy the organization of their employes and thus force wages and living standards down and down and down. Their purpose was for the most part successful, and never has a policy been so thoroughly discredited. Coal markets have been demoralized, operators bankrupted, the miners and their families impoverished to the extent that in many localities famine and want has stalked the camps. Small merchants and business people who prospered when the United Mine Workers' organization worked in co-operation with all concerned are now scattered to the four winds of the earth, and even many of them have been driven to want—all because of the selfish and short-sighted policy which drove the miners' organizations from these fields.

"When I was first called into this territory, several years ago, to advise and counsel with local unions, I found a healthy condition. Many mines were operating full time; the owners were prosperous; the workers were for the most part receiving fair wages and enjoying fairly decent working conditions, and the mining communities were filled with contented business men.

"But what a different picture is presented today. A brief survey already made discloses a situation which cannot be described, and which must be seen to be appreciated in all its hideousness. The union-busting, starvation-wage policy which the operators believed was a cure-all for the ills of the industry has brought their house of prosperity tumbling about their own heads. Never has a more effective indictment been brought than has developed from this policy.

"For months past, headquarters of the United Mine Workers has been besieged by the urgent and pitiful appeals of thousands of native Tennesseans and Kentuckians, who have spent the better part of their lives under ground, and who are now experiencing the pangs of hunger for themselves and the spectacle of their families in destitution and abject want. And, too, this condition is prevalent even where mines are operating in some cases. Incidents have been reported to me recently where coal miners are working regularly, but due to the starvation dole allotted them by the operators, charities are forced to feed and clothe their children. It is my purpose to make a thorough investigation of this, and of other similar allegations, and we intend to demand some action where we believe governmental authorities should intervene.

"Happily, however, the pathetic appeal of the workers has been echoed widely by the operators and business men. Where a few years ago a representative of the international union was regarded as an interloper, an 'agitator,' etc., he is today received with open arms by all concerned, and apparently the operators have realized the folly of their course and are willing and anxious to again work in co-operation with their employes in restoring the industry to its proper place.

"The program and policy of the United Mine Workers in this district is to bring about a peaceful and honorable solution of this unprecedented condition, and with the co-operation and approval of all parties, to re-establish joint contract relations in the industry.

"We believe that we can and will restore the economic status of the Tennessee miner to something like that which is the heritage of every honest, hard-working American citizen, and in this endeavor the United Mine Workers will appreciate the co-operation of The Labor World, the local labor movement and all other good citizens."

PAY CUTS GRAVE PERIL, JULIUS KLEIN ASSERTS

Attacking Wage Slashers, Assistant Secretary of Commerce Declares in Radio Speech Buying Power of Wage Earners Must Be Sustained and Strengthened.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 23.—Talking on a Columbia coast-to-coast network this week, Dr. Julius Klein, assistant secretary of commerce, lambasted wage-cutters and, by showing what happened in 1920, forecasted what would follow wage cuts today. He said:

"We must sustain and strengthen the buying power of our wage-earners. As President Hoover pointed out it all gets down to that one word 'work.' Fortunately most of our industrial leaders are keenly appreciative of the necessity of providing at least some work for the maximum number.

"Most of our leaders realize the grave perils that lurk in the short-sighted proposal of the wage cut. Let us not add strikes and other industrial disorders to our troubles. We have had grief as it is. That is what was done in 1921 when wage cuts started the greater part of the 2,400 strikes in that depression and turned more than a million workers into the streets. One dose of that kind of dangerous nostrum ought to be enough in our depression experience.

"We need more jobs, not less; and we need them, not after a lot of cumbersome political maneuvering, not next year or next winter, but right now.

"During 1931 not less than $725,000,000 is being spent by government for public works. Scores of millions of dollars of that have already gone into the pockets of grimy overalls, and other millions are on the way right now.

"Just compare that amount with the $275,000,000 expended in 1928, a fair average recent year of federal building. That is an increase of 160 per cent—nearly half a billion dollars."

Walter J. Vaughn Dies Suddenly

Walter J. Vaughn, inspector for the Nashville district on the state board of barber examiners, died suddenly Sunday afternoon at Nashville, from a heart attack. Mr. Vaughn had been in splendid health, and his passing was totally unexpected.

As a member of the barbers' board Mr. Vaughn had made frequent trips to Chattanooga, and enjoyed the friendship of a large number of local trades unionists. He was a long-time member of the Barbers' local at the capital city, and on occasions had done special work for his international.

Illinois Senate Bill Starts Fight

Proposal to Repeal Presidential Primary Law Denounced—Cermak's Secretary Introducer of Similar Measure.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Springfield, Ill., April 23.—The state senate, in passing a bill to abolish preferential presidential primaries, has set the state by the ears, with charges flying thick and fast. A fight of major proportions is expected in the assembly.

Ex-Senator Charles S. Deneen called attention to the fact that the assembly passed the bill to establish a political "monarchy" in Illinois a day or two after Spain threw its king off the throne.

Mayor Cermak's personal secretary, Representative Henry Sonnenschein, introduced on January 14 a bill identical with the one just passed. Now he says he intends to withdraw his bill, asserting that he never intended it to call for abolition of the primaries, but only to change the date. His critics point out that its concluding line reads "and to repeal section 29," which is the section providing for the presidential primary.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis calls the repeal bill "dangerous legislation" that would "deprive the people of any voice" in selection of national convention delegates and candidates.

No Steel Price War; Harmful to Profits

New York.—There is no prospect of a general price war in the steel industry, according to the Wall Street Journal.

Rumors that the steel trust will seek business at any price are without foundation, it is stated.

Such action, says W. S. J., "would result in giving consumers unusually reasonable levels at which the steel companies would not make a profit. A ruthless price war would not help any part of the industry."

This reasoning, however, does not seem to apply to labor, as "wage readjustments" are not unusual.

It is not good business, however, to cut prices. Profits would be lessened.

5 STATES ACT TO TIE CAN ON "YELLOW DOG"

Legislatures Seal Doom of Iniquitous System.

ORGANIZED LABOR WINS BIG VICTORIES

Enslaving Individual Contract Loses Standing Before Many Courts.

This week the national war against yellow dog contracts moved ahead to victory over a wide front.

The yellow dog contract, outlawed first in Wisconsin, now has no standing before the courts of Arizona and Oregon and is expected to pass out of Ohio and Colorado this week or next, legislatures in both states having enacted measures supported by organized labor.

Illinois labor again is waging a hot battle for passage of the model bill.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Columbus, O., April 23.—Ohio's anti-yellow dog contract bill, passed by both houses, should have the signature of Gov. George White early next week and take its place as one of the five states having laws stripping the enslaving individual contract of its standing before the courts.

Sponsored by the Ohio State Federation of Labor and given its full and energetic backing, the measure owes a lot to Assemblyman Joseph Cassidy, Cleveland Plain Dealer linotype operator, who was elected on the anti-yellow dog issue and who has made its advancement his main business here.

Speaker's Illness Delays Bill.

The measure would have been signed this week, it is believed here, had not the burst of insurgency in the assembly, largely engineered by Cassidy, resulted in the illness of the speaker whose signature was thus not attached and which must be attached before the bill goes to the governor.

Gov. White has not made known his intention, but the general belief is he will sign the bill.

The measure does not make use of the individual contract illegal, but, like the Wisconsin law, declares such contracts against public policy and unsupportable in the courts. Robbed of their court standing such contracts become useless.

Secretary Tom Donnelly, of the State Federation of Labor, on the job through the entire campaign and through previous campaigns, is enthusiastic over the action of the legislature and is eagerly awaiting action by the governor.

Other Similar Laws.

In addition to Ohio, Wisconsin has an anti-yellow dog law. Oregon and Arizona have enacted similar laws this year and the Colorado legislature has just followed suit with a bill that the governor is expected to sign immediately.

In Ohio the anti-yellow dog fight began in 1924 when the Ohio State Federation of Labor, of which John P. Frey then was president, laid down the declaration that until victory was achieved the anti-yellow dog issue would be labor's paramount issue in the state. The Ohio State Federation, with Secretary Tom Donnelly at the helm every minute, has been unrelenting and unflagging. It has campaigned for and against candidates and created an understanding of the issue without which there could have been no victory. The federation has estimated that as many as 1,500,000 American workers were victims of yellow dog contracts in the industrial and mining states.

GREEN SAYS 5-DAY WEEK WOULD GIVE JOBS TO ALL

A. F. of L. President Declares Adoption of Universal Shorter Working Period Would Be Most Effective Single Measure That Could Be Taken for Relief of Unemployment.

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, April 23.—Introduction of the universal five-day working week would be the most effective measure that could be taken against unemployment, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, says in a study of the shorter week appearing in the Harvard Business Review.

"That failure to reduce hours of work in proportion to other progress has contributed to unemployment is evident from widespread provisions for part-time work, rotation of force and similar provisions to make employment go round," says Mr. Green. "Many companies have put in the five-day week as an emergency measure."

Declaring that the five-day week was the most important single step that could be taken to relieve unemployment, Mr. Green says that the introduction of the shorter work-week would absorb the jobless. He also shows that the shorter work-day would mean increasing leisure, opportunity for culture and an increasing time for the wage-earner to assume the responsibilities of citizenship.

"No group of citizens should be forced to restrict their lives to industrial problems and environments, but each should have opportunity for a rounded, balanced life," he adds.

After tracing the history of the shortening of the work period from 1822 and pointing out that as machines and methods of doing work have been improved the output of the individual worker has increased, Mr. Green goes on to say:

"Each step has been contested by employers on the grounds of expense, upsetting of customary regulations and decreased output," says Mr. Green. "Yet since both work day and work week have been shortened, unit costs of production have lessened, output has increased many-fold and all of industry has learned more efficient habits. The force which employers ignored in their arguments is the adjustability of industry. Production is a live thing that finds new methods of its own volition or under compulsion. Pressure brought on any one point forces all other factors to meet a situation. Demand of workers for higher standards has been a stimulus to industry to find more efficient methods.

"The rapid mechanization of industry within recent years has made possible a far greater reduction in hours of work than has actually taken place. The production of the average worker in industry has increased far more rapidly in the decade since 1919 than in any other period of which we have record."

One Dominating Man in Politics, Clergyman Says

Same Individual Controls Transit Utilities and Federal Government, Pastor of Pittsburgh Catholic Church Claims.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Harrisburg, Pa., April 23.—That transit utilities are "owned and controlled by one gentleman" and that sensational revelations that will constitute "the bursting of a bomb" are to follow, was stated here by Mgr. James R. Cox, one of Gov. Pinchot's three observers at the house utility investigation here.

More than that, this one man controls the government, according to Mgr. Cox. He cited the Pittsburgh taxicab strike of last year in which he assisted union leaders. He said Mitten Management was represented there by the Parmalee officials "and they brought on a man to take care of the situation who had been for years with them in Philadelphia and who said he would remain as general manager."

"We learned," the pastor of old St. Patrick's Cathedral church of Pittsburg continued, "that these companies were owned and controlled by one gentleman. Now I am not going to mention the name because we don't have the facts, but it seems to be leading up to one. They not only control the utilities, but they control the United States government, and when the bomb bursts, it will show one dominating figure in political life."

Union Printers Give Day a Week for Idle

(By International Labor News Service.)

New York City, April 23.—Typographical Union No. 6 has announced extension of its plan to help unemployed members. Beginning May 1 and continuing for twelve weeks employes in the newspaper composing rooms will work voluntarily five days a week to allow a substitute to work the sixth day. Printers in the book and job branch will pay an extra assessment of 4 per cent as their contribution to unemployment benefits.

The decision of the printers was made by referendum vote. Under the terms of the vote the newspaper printers are relieved of paying the 4 per cent assessment. The book and job printers may elect to take a day off each week for three months and if they do so they will not be required to pay the assessment.

There are about 3,500 situations in the newspaper composing rooms, and it was estimated by union officials that the five-day week plan would enable substitutes who now work one or two days a week to work five days.

Wages Slashed On Federal Job, La Guardia Says

New York Congressman Charges War Department Is Paying Below Prevailing Scale on West Point Construction.

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 23.—In a letter to Secretary of Labor Doak, Representative La Guardia, of New York, flatly charges that the war department has taken advantage of present unemployment conditions to pay less than the prevailing wage rate for the construction of government buildings at West Point.

Mr. La Guardia asserted that plasterers, bricklayers and masons were being paid 68 to 75 cents an hour less than the prevailing wage rate in the neighborhood of West Point. He asked Secretary Doak to lay the facts before President Hoover for remedy.

"I am certain that the whole country is back of President Hoover in his effort to prevent a deflation of wages and lowering the American standard of living," Mr. La Guardia wrote.

"I appeal to you as the representative of labor in the executive branch of the government and because all efforts on the part of labor with the war department have been ignored."

Conditions at West Point were brought to the attention of the secretary of war only recently by officials of the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International union, Mr. La Guardia said.

"I am informed that these officials were told by the quartermaster's office that they were acting under orders and would pay the prevailing rate of wages when ordered to do so," he wrote.

"It is impossible to explain to them why a government department takes advantage of the unemployment situation to reduce wages, especially when the law requires the payment of the prevailing rate and congress has appropriated sufficiently to carry out the intent of the law."

Mr. La Guardia said that there had been "a most disgraceful and flagrant disregard of the prevailing rate of wages" at West Point and he added that the war department "is setting a bad example to industries and is placing the administration in a most ridiculous position."

CHAIN STORES INCREASE LIST OF UNEMPLOYED

Former Saunders Meatcutters Join "Out-of-Works."

NASHVILLE CHAIN AGAIN HITS LABOR

Order Issued From Capital to Replace Workers at Markets Acquired by Union-Hating Merchant Prince—Six Chattanoogans and Families Fall Under Out-of-Town Axe.

CHAIN STORE PROFITS REACH RECORD FIGURE

New York, April 23.—The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea company, that operates 15,737 stores, made a net profit last year of $30,742,775. This compares with $26,219,631 the previous year. The company installed 319 new stores last year.

The dollar value of merchandise sold last year was almost as large as the steel trust and was considerably in excess of some of the larger industrial corporations.

How much did YOU contribute to this billion-dollar octopus?

Sale of the Saunders Stores to the H. G. Hill company is responsible for loss of jobs by a half-dozen members of Local 600, the Nashville concern which took over the Saunders stores, of course, declining to deal in a collective capacity with these workers.

After granting the local management of the chain grocery company one week in which to attempt to prevail upon the millionaire Nashville owner to agree to recognize the union, meatcutters at the four Saunders markets left their jobs Tuesday night, the following members being affected:

Market Square Store—Homer Merville and Jack Foster.

McCallie Avenue Store—Frank Roth.

Market Street Store—Richard Scholze and Grover Forwalter.

St. Elmo Store—J. W. Looney.

It is understood that two of the markets have already been closed, and that the Hill corporation plans to dispose of the other two as early as practicable.

When the H. G. Hill company, upon orders of its Nashville director, locked out members of Local 600 as a sort of Christmas present in 1930, it was said the chain concern operated very successfully fifteen meat markets in connection with its Chattanooga stores. At the present time, officials of the organization said Thursday, the company operates but two markets in this city, exclusive of the Saunders units just purchased. A number of Hill's Chattanooga stores have also been closed since the lockout of the old and faithful employes.

The H. G. Hill company was formally declared "unfair to organized labor" by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and by the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and working people in other localities were informed of the attitude of the Nashville Merchant Prince.

Local trades unionists were of one accord in expressing regret at the passing from this city of the Clarence Saunders organization. The Saunders management had been consistently fair to its employes, it was said, and enjoyed splendid relations with the organized workers of Chattanooga.

Attitude of the local public as between the Saunders Stores and the Hill chain is declared to have been immediately demonstrated when it became known that the Nashville corporation had taken over the Saunders stores. It was a matter for common comment that the stores were practically deserted following announcement of the purchase by the capital city company.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

"In England it (the capitalist system) began by overspreading the village as well as the town."
—J. L. Hammond.

WITH the decline of the guilds the village life of England was established permanently, bringing problems peculiar to it, chief of which was the appearance of what we now term "middleman." The rapidly growing populations of villages like Manchester, Leeds and Suffolk engaged in home industries: the preparation of wool for the hand looms; weaving, dyeing and stretching of the cloths, as well as paper-making, manufacture of wire and nails, barrels and horseshoes. The villagers grew no farm products, depending in an indirect way on the farmers for food.

On paper this sounds like an ideal situation for all concerned; in fact, it is sometimes called the "Golden Age of Labor," but evils began to crop out of this domestic system. A farmer living near Manchester and with a surplus of corn on his hands found it easier to dispose of his grain by selling it to the miller. The miller sold it to the mealman (our wholesaler) and the mealman to the shopkeeper and the shopkeeper to the village housewife, she paying 10 per cent more for her flour in consequence.

Daniel DeFoe made a tour of England in 1724-6 and has left us a graphic picture of the domestic system: "The land was divided into small enclosures from two to six acres. . . At every considerable house was a manufactory. . . The houses are full of lusty fellows, some at the dye vat, some at the looms, others dressing the cloths; the women or children carding or spinning, being employed from the youngest to the oldest." But it was only an apparent independence for the cottage workers, for they were neither owners of the raw materials nor did they control the finished product. The middleman (or agent) reaped all the real benefits of their toil since he brought the cottage workmen the raw wool, dictated what was to be manufactured of it and paid the cottagers their hire when the finished cloth was delivered to him.

PAINS QUIT COMING

RESTORE BUYING POWER

"Economic planning," "scientific order in production," "stabilization" and "rationalization" are new names for the old system of greater production at less cost.

These phrases mean more centralization, combines, speed up and automatic machinery. The new planning provides for accurate information on the people's income and on trade conditions. Commodities will be produced as needed. No large stocks (inventories) will be carried.

This means less capital invested and lower interest charges. Standardization to a point undreamed of will be the rule. Excessive plant capacity will be junked and only the fittest among workers will be given steady employment to supply a market that has been "stabilized." The more than six million unemployed will remain where they are.

The age limit of 40-45 years for workers will be general, as only young men can stand the pace. Wages for those employed will not be reduced. Such a reduction would unite the employed and unemployed, whereas the new plan will tend to keep them divided. The number of needed workers, however, will be steadily lessened as automatic machinery and other processes are silently installed.

"Economic planning" is an attractive system for employers who forget that mergers and combines will continue to reduce their number. Automatic machinery will have the same effect on employed workers, despite promises that the new "stabilization" will provide them steady work.

The "economic planner" will reply, of course, that elimination of every possible waste, and greater mass output based on a knowledge of markets will reduce production costs, cheapen commodities, increase demand and thereby create more employment.

This is not a new claim. It was heard when mass production and displacement of labor by automatic machinery first attracted attention. The claim has not proven satisfactory to more than 6,000,000 idle workers. The "economic planner" ignores the fact that an unemployed worker cannot buy, regardless of price. The "planner" is only interested in production, while our major problem is distribution—to establish buying power that employment will be created.

Men who talk of "economic planning" ignore the cause of our depression. They accept the status quo—millions of idle, other millions on part time work, and other millions paid a low wage. The "economic planner" would build on that foundation. He fails to see that the very force that created these workless will continue to function.

Prosperity cannot be based on a few million workers receiving comparatively high wages until they are 40 or 45 years old, when they are turned into the idle ranks. Automatic machinery accelerates this movement.

Employers, as a class, will receive no permanent benefit from the "economic planner." Employers will continue to be engulfed by the grinding process.

Organized labor's solution of high wages and shorter hours must be accepted. Work is the solution for unemployment. Buying power is the only thing that can start idle factories.

A BOY'S BAD GUESS.

From a safe distance in Paris, the 20-year-old Prince Alfonso, nephew of King Alfonso XIII, deposed king of Spain, soberly remarked to reporters the other day upon hearing of his uncle's flight:

"I am afraid that the republic has made a mess of things in my country. There are two choices, monarchy and communism."

This fledgling prince names "monarchy" and "communism" as the only two forms of government from which his uncle's former subjects can choose as a permanent mode of government for their country. The boy forgets neither of the two is a "choice." Monarchy is not a "choice" because it is an inherited curse, nor is communism a "choice" for the reason that it is a calamity forced on an ignorant people. That leaves republican form of government as the only genuine choice when it comes to a form of government for a people, and it is generally in these days the only choice of the people of every nation who have the opportunity to decide for themselves.

THE "OPEN SHOP."

The expression "open shop" has a very generous and American sound as if the proponents of this miscalled "American plan" meant they advocated a fair and equal opportunity for every worker. But it has been the bitter experience of many workers to discover the "open shop" subtly implies the individual employe must passively submit to whatever terms of pay, working conditions and treatment the employer thinks due him.

Why members of employers' associations call their non-union shops "open shops" is a mystery to most sensible persons. The "open shop" is really a closed shop—not only to union men but to men and women without union cards if the employer or his employment manager doesn't like the color of the applicant's hair. In nine cases out of ten where employers designate their places of employment as "open shops" they publish a lie before the world.

An industrial order that is thanklessly taking the toilers' time, strength and health as well as the best years of their lives and resorts to well-developed spy system in its efforts to keep them in subjugation is in an unhealthy condition. The spy system and the "open shop" came into existence simultaneously. Both are a disgrace to American ideals since they thrive on and can only exist where the worker has lost his self-respect and is willing to give up his rights.

JESUS AND MONEY
"Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon"
Part XXIII.

THE MISSION OF THE TWELVE

"And he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two, and gave them power over unclean spirits, and commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse, but be shod with sandals and not put on two coats . . . And they went out and preached that men should repent." — Mark 6: 7-9, 12.

WM. L. MOSS

So far each week these articles have been based on words of Jesus containing some direct or implicated teaching about money. But the passage quoted above was selected with the full knowledge that it contains no teaching of the Master on the subject we are interested in. Then why bother with it at all? Because it sometimes is used to support an interpretation of Jesus' teaching concerning money that is entirely foreign to what He really taught and His view of wealth. There are those who would have us believe this passage gives men indisputable proof that ministers of the gospel and missionaries and all who give their time and talents to the propagation of the Word of Truth through the Christian church ought to work for nothing—or practically nothing. Others say the passage points in a round about way to a supposed teaching of the Master on "renunciation." There are others who dish up for us a half-baked theory of what Jesus taught which sets forth the idea that He would have us give no thought for the cares of this world, quoting His words as recorded in Lk. 12:22-31 and the passage at the head of this article in support of their contention. The best way to obscure Jesus' teaching is to dissect isolated texts without any reference to their relation to the chapters in which they are recorded, their relation to the verses preceding and following them, and above all else their relation to the entire teaching of our Lord. The method also includes a consideration of the aims of the writer of the book from which a passage is taken for study, the relation of the book to the other two of the first three gospels, and the relation of the book to the life of Jesus. As stated in a previous article in this series, this is the complete "historical context method" and is really the only trustworthy method that is possible to adopt in the study of Jesus' teaching. The skeleton-work of this method need not show in the finished study, but the process, whether seen or not as something definable, must always be the used.

The scene: Jesus and His little band of chosen disciples were now in "His own country," meaning Galilee, and in His own hometown, Nazareth. As was His invariable custom He had taught in the local synagogue on the Sabbath. But his former fellow-townsmen were "offended" at His teaching. John Mark tells us that when Jesus became acquainted with the fact His former neighbors were "offended" at Him the Master healed a few sick folk as a parting shot at the unbelief of the Nazarenes and departed. After a short tour of nearby cities Jesus called His disciples about him one day and had a little intimate talk with them, John Mark's summary of which we quote at the beginning of this article.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Rome C. Stephenson, president of the American Bankers' association, denied the other day that bankers want wage cuts.

Mr. Stephenson may be right, but bankers are certainly not taking the lead in advocacy of maintenance of present wage scales. When they are not openly urging lower wages, as has been done by A. H. Wiggen, of New York; Melvin Alvah Taylor, of Chicago, and other leading bankers, they are keeping very quiet on the subject.

Mr. Stephenson will have to do some pretty good talking to convince the nation that bankers are not lending at least tacit encouragement to the campaign for lower wages.

In view of the apparent indifference of most Americans to the increase in recent years of attacks on free speech, free press and free assemblage, it is good to see every straight-from-the-shoulder defense of these fundamental rights. Such a defense is made by President Charles P. Howard, of the International Typographical union, in the Typographical Journal. He writes in part:

"We believe in free speech. No group in all the world should be more devoutly wedded to the ideal of free speech than the members of this organization. We must not only believe in and support free speech for ourselves and those who agree with us, we must fight, if necessary, for the right of those with whom we do not agree to speak freely of what they believe. It is easy to applaud those who tell us what we like to hear. It is easy to approve that with which we agree. It is not so easy to give courteous consideration to unpleasant truths about issues upon which we may be wrong."

Snell No Snail

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

AS AN echo of the conference of the Progressive element of congress in Washington following closely on the heels of adjournment of the Seventieth session of that body comes the "tariff wail" of Chairman Snell, of the house rules committee, himself a dyed-in-the-wool republican. Snell smelled trouble in that gathering of progressives, but undoubtedly, like others of his fellow-partymen, he also had previously gotten a tiny whiff of the discontent of the American people resulting from the present tariff. Maybe it wasn't such a tiny whiff after all—perhaps it was a whole nostril full, for in addressing the St. Lawrence County society recently he said: "We have gone the limit on a tariff, our natural advantages are being depleted and it will be necessary that the next generation govern its economic standards and living conditions more in accord with world-wide conditions than we have in the past."

Which proves Snell is no snail when it comes to going after the truth and is no slouch in getting right up and clearing his conscience. A few more years—no, a few more Snells and we will have no tariff!

Family Relief Cost Jumps in 100 Cities

Amount Disbursed for Needy Increased 89 Per Cent from 1929 to 1930, U. S. Children's Bureau Reports.

Washington, April 23.—In 100 cities reporting to the United States children's bureau the amount disbursed in aid to needy families increased 89 per cent from 1929 to 1930.

Altogether it is estimated that some $40,000,000 was spent for this relief in 1930—and this amount does not include sums expended by missions, municipal lodging houses, or other agencies providing individuals with temporary shelter or food, nor agencies giving relief to war veterans only.

The proportion of the cost of relief met by private philanthropy and by the public through taxation varies from city to city. The largest proportion of the cost met by the public (in 75 cities) was in Detroit, where 94.9 per cent of the money came from public sources. At the other end of the scale were New Orleans and Washington, D. C., where none of the money was provided by public appropriation, all of it being raised by private contributions.

Boldest Social Views Found in U. S. Senate

New York.—"It is in the senate that progressive views have in recent years found their boldest advocates," said Senator Wagner in a radio broadcast in Germany and in the United States.

The New York senator explained to citizens of the German republic how America's lawmaking branch functions.

Mr. Wagner said that while members of the senate are relatively older than members of the house of representatives, the former is "the only platform for minorities to give expression to their grievances, the only check upon administrative excesses, the only source from which light can be thrown upon the executive branch of the government."

Senator Wagner expressed well wishes for the "gallant efforts of the German republic to solve its problems through democratic government."

"As a member of the United States senate," he said, "I am daily reminded that Carl Schurz, the grandest spirit among the German Forty-eighters, fought his great battles for American democracy, for political idealism, for progressive liberalism, in the very chamber where it is now my honor to serve."

Labor All Over Nation Pushes Big Campaign for Union Label

(By International Labor News Service.)

Washington, April 23.—With trade unionists all over the United States pushing the union label, shop card and button, the nation-wide campaign in behalf of union products and services is gaining great momentum, it is reported at the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor. Reports from every union show that union men and women are enthusiastically supporting the campaign and that the demand for union-made goods has been greatly increased.

In several cities exhibits of union label products have attracted much interest. In Atlantic City, N. J., such an exhibition has been given under the direction of the chamber of commerce. Some of the larger cities are employing a full time field man in the label campaign.

Local unions of the following international unions have been most active in the drive:

Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International Union of America, United Garment Workers of America, International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America, International Typographical union, International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, American Federation of Musicians, Upholsterers' International Union of North America, Cigarmakers' International Union of America, International Union of the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal and Soft Drink Workers of America, Boot and Shoe Workers' union, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America.

Buy Union-Made Goods and End Depression in Thirty Days

(By International Labor News Service.)

San Francisco, April 23.—Dr. James M. Heady addressed an audience in the auditorium of the Labor Temple here recently, taking for his subject, "How to Improve Yourself and Existing Conditions." The lecturer, as reporter in the Labor Clarion, launched into an exposition of psychological teachings applicable to individual and collective success. Developing the theme along the lines of "What a man believes, that he is," the speaker showed that the will to do is responsible for all of the "success" in life. He then took up the subject of popularizing the demand for union-made goods and the support of the union label. Speaking of the prevailing business depression, he said that if everybody would demand union-made products—the products of workers who are paid adequate wages and labor under proper conditions—the economic depression would be a thing of the past within thirty days.

"If workmen have steady employment at good wages everybody profits; the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker and every line of business benefits." The demand for union products is the only way to bring about and to maintain this condition, he declared, and he expressed the hope that in the series of lectures which he proposed to deliver it would be demonstrated that in the demand for union-made products was the solution of labor's problems.

The audience was also addressed by Miss Sarah Hagen in behalf of the Garment Workers' union, under whose auspices the lectures are given. She explained the plight of the members of her union, who are among the greatest sufferers from unemployment, and suggested that the effort to stimulate the demand for union-made goods was the only hope for relief.

Strikers Are Jailed By Injunction Judge

Stroudsburg, Pa.—With a frenzy that befits the most rabid anti-unionist, Judge Samuel E. Shull, of this county, imposed a fine of $500 each on sixteen young girl hosiery strikers. Jensen Shaw, president of the local Hosiery Workers' union, was jailed. The court said these workers violated his over-night injunction.

A score of other pickets were arrested by Sheriff Werkheiser. This official recently gave wide liberty to strikebreakers who were charged with the murder of a young woman, while another victim of the strikebreakers' bullets was arrested.

In sentencing the strikers, Judge Shull said he would release them if they would swear to uphold the federal and state constitutions and obey his injunction. Accused replied that they willingly uphold the constitutions, but not an injunction which violates both documents.

The strike is being directed by the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers. The unionists deny that they have committed violence. They point out that the only violence was when four strikebreakers killed Alberta Bachman, a young striker. Judge Shull released these murderers on bail despite the fact that never in the history of the state has a homicide charge been bailable.

Mexican Wage Cut Opposed by Editors

Mexico City.—The government's proposal to reduce wages of federal employes to meet a deficit is being opposed by editors in this city.

One newspaper suggests that the high-salaried employes be cut, but objects to reductions of the lower income that will affect business and further limit sales.

Told to Break Into Headquarters Of Union, Strikebreakers Say

Philadelphia, April 3.—If proof were ever needed that manufacturers instigate their dupes to engage in violence to smash strikes that trend is now piling up.

Here is the latest case which has come to light:

In Hatboro, Pa., the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers has a strike against the Wear Nebel mill, which is paying southern wages, right next door to Philadelphia. Across the street from the Nebel mill, the strikers have set up headquarters in a rented bungalow. Riding home past the mill about 4 o'clock in the morning Strike Chairman Beverly Clymer was stopped by a deputy who has been guarding the Nebel plant. The guard informed Clymer that three men in a roadster had driven up in front of the union headquarters and had broken windows, evidently in order to be able to break into the house. Surprised by the deputy the three men had fled, but the license number of the car was taken. Blood was found on the window sill of the house, indicating that one of the men had cut his hand in breaking the window.

The sheriff's deputy pursued the marauder's car in Clymer's auto and quickly ran on to the men wanted coming from a doctor's office in the town. Chief of Police Kraemer, of Hatboro, made the arrest. It was found that the driver of the automobile was Arthur Doutrick, foreman of the Nebel mill, while the men with him were two strikebreakers, Lloyd Jensen and Edward McGuirk. The trio were turned over to Chief of Police Schaeffer, of Jenkintown, who quickly got a confession from all three that they had been sent to the union's headquarters. Edward McGuirk had injured his hand breaking the glass of the window and blood stains on the automobile and the window had given him away.

The much advertised "push" of the manufacturers to induce a mythical army of 6,000 or more Philadelphia workers to come in and scab on themselves flopped completely, union officials announce. In fact all the talk of a break in the ranks by the employers had the effect of stiffening union morale and causing renewed strike activities.

War on Illiteracy Favored by Wilbur

Washington.—Despite its decrease, illiteracy continues to be "ominous, formidable and challenging," said Secretary of the Interior Wilbur in a radio address.

"Recent returns from the bureau of the census in sixteen states show a reduction of illiteracy during the last decade amounting to 12.6 per cent," said the secretary. "In 1920 these states reported 1,160,781 illiterates. In 1930 they reduced the number to 1,013,623, or 147,158. The District of Columbia lowered its number from 10,509 to 6,611, which was a drop of 37 per cent. Alabama reduced its number nearly 27,000, Mississippi nearly 30,000 and Arkansas more than 25,000.

"A critical observer may scrutinize the returns from the sixteen states and embarrass us with a sharp question. If the reduction has been 147,158 in ten years, or 12.6 per cent, he may say, then at that rate it may take seventy years to eradicate illiteracy."

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE TO BE OPENED IN EACH STATE

Secretary of Labor Doak Announces Complete Reorganization of U. S. Service, With State Directors and Seven Central Divisions to Deal With Separate Trades and Industries.

Washington, April 23.—Following announcement of complete reorganization of the United States employment service, with forty-eight state employment bureaus and one in the District of Columbia, state directors met in conference here and were addressed by John J. Alpine, recently appointed supervising director of the service. In addition to the state directors, seven special divisions have been established to deal with the employment problems of various trades.

Francis I. Jones continues as director-general of the service, while A. D. Lewis will be assistant director-general, with supervision also over the mining and quarrying trades division.

In announcing the reorganization of the employment service, Secretary of Labor Doak said:

"The United States employment service has decided to open up at least one employment bureau in each of the states and the District of Columbia to co-operate with state and local authorities.

Co-ordinated Service.

"There will be a co-ordinated service throughout the entire country making available its good offices to all those seeking employment in co-operation with free state and local offices. It likewise will undertake in the broadest sense to care for interstate labor placements in co-operation with employers and employes.

"In addition to these already well-organized bureaus, the industrial activities of the United States employment service will be reorganized on a basis which will afford every opportunity of placing employes in contact with labor and in giving employers a ready field from which to draw all needed labor necessary to carry forward any kind of work.

Seven Special Divisions.

"There will be seven special divisions of the service, each under the direction of a co-ordinating superintendent—namely, a superintendent for each of the following:

"Building trades, mining and quarrying, manufacturing and metal trades, transportation service, clothing and needle trades, office and mercantile trades and marine seamen and longshoremen. There likewise will be a director of the veterans' service, a director of the farm service, a chief clerk, a director of information and a special representative.

"There will be forty-nine state directors, one for each of the states and the District of Columbia. The duties of these officers will be to direct the work of their respective states and to co-operate with state agencies and to work in conjunction with the United States employment service. The number of suboffices within any of the states will be determined from time to time as circumstances justify."

Union Barbers Fight Price Cuts With Free Service for Jobless

Salisbury, N. C., April 23.—Without cutting prices one penny, union barber shops of Salisbury and Spencer have non-union shops who recently started a vicious price-cutting war on the run.

"Hard times we have with us and a lot of people cannot afford to pay high prices for a shave or a hair cut or a massage," was the vocal excuse of the price-cutting warriors. A price-slashing spree began with the cellar as the limit.

"We will agree times are hard, but cutting prices will not cure that," answered the members of Local No. 485 of the Journeyman Barbers International union. "We shall not cut our prices, but there will be no excuse for the chap without a job in Salisbury or Spencer suffering from tonsorial neglect."

Through the Salisbury Central Labor union the union barbers have announced that they will give free service to the unemployed and their families. The service will not be given during regular shop hours, says F. T. Cornelius, secretary of the Central Labor union, which has indorsed the action of the union barbers. By special permission of the barber shop owners, it will begin at the close of regular hours and continue as long as necessary. It will be effective on as many days as advisable.

The union barbers of the two cities secured the names and addresses of more than 300 residents of their communities who are out of work. Tickets affording free barber service for them and their families at any of the union shops in Spencer and Salisbury have been mailed them.

President A. B. Holt, of the union, is enthusiastic about the plan. He points out that it has been undertaken by the union barbers of the two communities to meet the present emergency occasioned by people being out of work without resorting to a policy of price-cutting.

Senator Couzens Warns Industry To Change or Pay Idle Insurance

Washington, April 23.—"Business must prevent a recurrence of present conditions or be prepared to accept unemployment insurance and old-age pension legislation."

This warning was made by Senator Couzens in a formal statement addressed to the United States Chamber of Commerce for consideration at its meeting in Atlantic City April 28 to May 1.

The Michigan lawmaker notified the nation's business men that they need not expect that present conditions can continue or that unemployment insurance and old-age pensions can be avoided by the old system of libeling and abusing congress.

"Questions of unemployment insurance, old age pensions, or regulation of industry do not arise in congress unless there is a great need," said Mr. Couzens. "Issues are not raised in congress out of thin air.

"Congress will not provide for unemployment insurance and old age pensions if industry does not create the need. If industry does not want government interference in business, it must prevent the need.

"Frankly, knowing as I do the details of government in Washington, I would much prefer that industry, individually or in groups, would take care of these matters.

"However, the great American public has exhibited great patience to give industry an opportunity to take care of these matters, and it cannot be expected that the public will wait much longer, if at all."

Senator Couzens asked if the business men will "assure the millions upon millions of our citizens who are in great distress because of an inadequate living income how they propose to prevent a recurrence of the conditions which now have been existing for going on two years."

"Will these business men," continued Mr. Couzens, "tell the American people if they approve of the present tendency of property into the hands of the few? If they observe from treasury department statistics that the distribution of corporate net income is gradually rising until nearly 81 per cent of the entire distribution is going to corporations which have more than $100,000 of annual income."

Stock Ownership Plan Blows Up; Unorganized Street Car Men Stung

Philadelphia, April 23.—The Mitten Management, operators of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit company and other local transportation systems, was characterized as "financial vultures" and as "a colossal conspiracy to drain the revenues" of the company, by Judge Harry S. McDevitt, Jr., of the common pleas court, in appointing three receivers for the concern.

The court referred to Mitten executives as "Mitten marionettes" and "rubber stamp officials" and directed that the receivers recover sums aggregating at least $8,000,000 and to further investigate the relationship between the local traction company and Mitten affiliates.

The court blasted the latest co-operative, stock owning venture in which unorganized workers were lured by high-pressure publicity and salesmanship. Assurances are made to the duped workers that their interests will be cared for, but no one can predict the outcome until the financial mess is probed.

Mitten Management was launched in 1924 when the late Thomas E. Mitten organized a financially irresponsible corporation with a small capitalization to collect from the Rapid Transit company, to use the words of Judge McDevitt, "a much larger return for his services than was provided in the original arrangement of 1911."

Mitten organized various interlocking companies in which his employes invested part of their earnings. A sensational publicity campaign was started and the plan was pictured as the final solution for industrial problems.

These workers are now placing their trust in Judge McDevitt's statement that their wage movements shall not be disturbed, and by a similar statement by A. A. Mitten, son of the late founder of Mitten Management.

Even if the workers' funds are saved, the collapse is a blow to the system of employers' stock ownership that is intended to keep workers unorganized.

The Mitten workers put their trust in this scheme, rather than in united action and the inevitable has happened.

Judge McDevitt shows that millions of dollars have been wasted. Mitten Management was surrounded by "yes-yes" men, who received vast sums in fees and commissions.

The relations between the local traction company and Mitten, said the court, were marked "by gross waste, extravagance and acts of questionable honesty."

CIGARETTE INDUSTRY MARKED BY LOW WAGE

Washington.—The cigarette industry in this country is marked by low wages and long hours, according to the federal bureau of labor statistics.

Average full-time earnings per week for males ranged from $11.05 for hand stemmers to $34.36 for mechanics, and for females from $9.48 for laborers to $20.90 for glassine wrapping machine operators. The full-time hours per week ranged between 49 and 50. This industry reports large profits.

Are You Sure You Are Always Welcome?

"May I use your telephone for a moment, please?"

Neighbors may borrow any one of a hundred things the best housewives run short of, and still remain friendly, but "may I use your telephone?" is very likely to be considered an imposition by your neighbors. If you had a neighbor who persisted in borrowing things and never returning them, you'd probably at least become impatient with that neighbor. When you borrow your neighbor's telephone, you are borrowing something you cannot repay when you haven't a telephone of your own.

Avoid embarrassment of this kind by having a telephone of your own. Find out, now, how little it costs. Just call the Business Office, or ask any telephone employe.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

The state band contest was a success from every angle. Shelly Sands deserves a lot of credit for the showing of his City High school outfit and for the masterful way in which his committees handled the contest. However, the main attraction of the evening was the playing of Uncle John Washburn's Ooltewah High school musicians. With only eighteen pieces against several other schools who had as many as fifty, they took first place in their division and were one of the high lights of the evening.

Postoffice Squibs

By R. B. LANE

With the wrangling over the street widening around the new postoffice site, there is a good chance for a change of site. If all who are in favor of the Market-Broad streets site would write the treasury department with clippings from the daily papers protesting, and asking that the Market street site be taken, there is a chance that the department would reconsider the matter. Why should we take a half block when we can get a whole block for $15,000 less and at a more prominent location?

Modern Banditry Costing Billions

Albany, N. Y.—Racketeering is costing the nation from $12,000,000,000 to $18,000,000,000, according to a final report by the state crimes commission.

An investigation so that steps can be taken to curb this form of banditry in New York state is recommended.

"During the past few years," the report states, "there has grown up, particularly in the larger cities, an illegal system of levying tribute from legitimate organizations and business.

"How much it is costing the American public cannot be definitely figured, but estimates range from $12,000,000,000 to $18,000,000,000. One racket in New York state alone, that of fake securities, is known to total approximately $400,000,000 a year."

The report said large surety companies estimate that crimes against property total nearly $7,000,000,000 annually. It referred to a recent speech estimating that between $200,000,000 and $600,000,000 has been levied yearly in tribute from almost every business in New York City.

"These figures are astonishing, and it is the public who pays them," the report added. "It would seem that corrective measures can be formulated to stop, in part at least, the racketeering within the confines of the state, but the subject sould be investigated, which can be done, so that the necessary steps can be intelligently taken."

The report pointed out that a large percentage of criminals are developed through juvenile delinquency.

Sharp Drop Made In Alien Arrivals

Washington.—Only 3,147 aliens entered the United States in February for permanent residence. This is the smallest number in any month since 1820, beyond which records of the government do not extend.

"Consuls are selecting prospective immigrants more closely and it is almost impossible for a laborer to secure a visa to come to this country," said Commissioner General of Immigration Hull.

"Deportation of aliens who have violated American laws is proceeding at the rate of about 18,000 annually this year."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."
